Before leaving the Throne Room, he notices that the Sky Crystal isn't as charged as it had been and he takes a second to re-apply the torches for his Throne Room before heading to the new door that's to his right. It's not that different then his personal rooms had been before he upgraded the door along with placing a Ward to keep Sinners from finding the door. Wings simply folded onto his back and drawing back his horn from their full display to a more manageable size.

As he opens the door, he gets an update concerning this new room and he blinks as he skims it before taking a few extra minutes to read it a few more times. His eyes wide in disbelief at the fact that such a feature even existed. The message fades as he opens the door to find the newly reincarnated being laying on the simple bed, he approaches and a pop-up appears, this lets him give the former Sinner a new name to go with their new life. He takes a bit to come up with a new name, which is Kamiya, sure it's more of a last name but it should work while also leaving the choice of species to the newly named Kamiya, given the number of monsters, the other has plenty of choice.

So, he waits.

{ + [= - X - =] + }

Kamiya? He wakes to find himself in something that wouldn't be out of place in a RPG video game. "Please select your new race." And then he's got the option of picking a demi-human or an actual monster.

Taking a look through the demi-humans, he watches as an example of said demi-human would appear within the circle. As he picks a random types and even finds that he can customize them but, while fun, none are what he ultimately is coming to realize that this is very real and not some dream. That he's not going to be human once he completes this and he's not sure why that is.

Then, recalling Tsuna's race, he decides to find something suitable that matches. In the end, he finds Tiefling, which is a race born from humans who's ancestors made an Infernal Pact with Devils and thus they are born sporting hints of that race, plus, the race is very human like so there's not any big changes to learn to live with. Picking bright blue hair, he decides on warm amber eyes, for skin color, well, bronze works and then he goes through the kind of horns he'll have along with size. Picking short and sweeping upwards with no spiral to them, also decides to have them sport a dark navy blue color.

He adds a foot to his height but keeps the muscles lean, heck, he finds options to actually add body tattoos, scars, and body piercings. He chooses to have a tattoo of feathered wings on the back, he adds colors, namely a glossy black with silver stripes at the primary's tips with an outline of a dark blue. He adds a brow piercing to his right, a simple stud and four fingered scar on his chest on the left side, like somebody had been digging into his chest. It's slightly faded but can be seen if one is looking for such things.

Once he confirms he's likes the changes he's done, there's a flash and he's on a bed. With a grunt, he moves to sit up, which is kind of hard, given he's got a pretty long tail now. "How are you feeling?" He hears Tsuna... no, Suna ask.

"I'm... unnerved." He admits truthfully and as he gets out of the bed, he finds that they weren't in Suna's bedroom. "Your bedroom, you'll be able to change things from being paid for the job of being my bodyguard." His Sky informs him and he snorts before laughing upon hearing that.

"Yea, you do need one, after all, who knows who'll you'll take to your bed in the future, eh?" He says in a teasing tone and Suna blinks before his face reddens. "So... you..."

"I... I didn't... object to being turned into a Dungeon Lord when I was given a new perceptive on my life and insight into how those around me viewed me." Suna admits slowly. "The amnesia... it served the purpose of keeping me from getting cold feet about what the job."

He is all ears and his stomach clenches, after all, he knew Tsuna never wanted to be a Mafia Don, never wanted him to end up taking up the blade and killing in the name of the Famiglia. "Out of the few who liked me for how I was then, you were among that number. The odds that you'd make it here on your own..."

"So, even with amnesia, you kind of couldn't go through with your job when it came to me?" Kamiya muses with a slight hint of fondness. That in the end, you are too kind for your own good.

"It didn't help that we met once, outside of my Dungeon, at my Shop actually..." Suna admits and it doesn't take him long before he connects the dots, although the idea that Suna was posing as a store owner is... worrying now that he thinks about it but then, who'd expect to encounter a Lord outside of their Dungeon? "I had wondered why nobody thought my behavior strange but knowing about Flames, it's kind of funny, looking back."

"Ah... I kind of sent message about your..." He admits and his Boss, Sky, and Friend looks rather bemused. "Well, we'll deal with it once it comes to it, for now, I might as well help you get some suitable gear. Still plan on being a swordsman or did you want to try a different weapon?"

"Maybe I should change something up, you know. How did you learn to dual weld daggers?" He asks as Suna begins to walk out of his room. "I've never actually fought against actual beings, I bought the knowledge as a Beginner Combat Manual from the Dungeon Store, I've bought the more advanced manuals when my Dungeon grew more powerful, allowing me to buy them." Suna explains as they head for the Throne Room, he notices that he can see his own door and his Sky's as well.

"I didn't know you guys could access a store. What currency do you use?" He asks, there's a lot to learn and there might not be enough time to master it, given they have six days before the Dungeon runs reset. While he is a bit uncomfortable about the fact that he'll be going up against familiar faces and old comrades, he can't help but feel like he's were he belongs.

{ + [= - X - =] + }

"You kind of have to wonder..." He hears Kamiya muses in his disguise as Takeru, his Storm shop assistant. Looking over at his friend, he tilts his head in a questioning manner. "You think Chrome..."

Blinking, Suna in his Sai disguise looks towards the front of the store, noting that Chrome is helping a customer. As he moves a few boxes around, he considers Kamiya's train of thought and his interactions with the formerly abused Mist. "It kind of seems like it, doesn't it?" He muses, after all, in someways Chrome's involvement in the Mafia only came about viva Mukuro and there's a good chance she stayed due in part because of him. Given Fuuta hasn't been wandering about this world, he can only guess that she had been approached and given a choice about either moving on or staying at Mukuro's side as it seems that Skies are the ones capable to stabilize a Dungeon.

"She's never really run done a Dungeon run, has she?" He asks the disguised Tiefling. "She's joined us when it comes to surface mobs but... You think she sends in a Mist Clone into them?"

"Likely. For her, it was either join the Mafia or die alone in a hospital." The disguised Fallen Angel muses. "After all, Skull isn't here and it kind of sounds like even Viper can't recall who'd been their generation's Cloud."

"Or Fuuta..." Kamiya reflects, it's been three months and the Sinner named Takeshi Yamamoto had been wiped out of the collective minds of the Sinners in the form of a flu. This condition did give them a good two weeks for Kamiya to grow use to a change in his situation, like the fact that his Rain Flames seem to be locked away in the giant Flame Crystal that's in his Throne Room ceiling along side his own. It's kind of interesting to watch how the two Flames move about the crystal and it's an oddly soothing sight to stare at.

"She does seem... a bit more content since she started working here." He adds as he finishes manually collecting some crossbow bolts to move to the front display for the store as the finish selling out of special arrows that can house a poison or acid in a small clay bead that will break upon arrow head hitting something. They're cheaper then actual Enchanted arrows and it's something few merchants stock as making them is difficult without the use of Mist Flames.

He returns to the back to put the crate's lid back on it before moving it back to its place along the wall. There's a number of things to do and for now, he'll focus on being Sai, the owner of this store and employer of Chrome and Takeru. Doing his level best to enjoy the present instead of worrying about the past and the future.

After all, all things must one day come to an end, including his time as Suna and the dungeon that he is Lord of.

Ending it here

Author's Note:

Wow, hard to believe that I kept this in my DArt Stash for over a year... According to the date, I started this on April 23, 2018 and the time was 2:36 pm.

Hope you like this!

Broken Shackles of Reality P 1: Fate

I don't own Fate/Stay night!

Slowly, oh so slowly, Shirou begins to type out a Character name. It's... not really original and it's part of his actual name. Putting Rou for a name, it gets rejected, it seems that someone has already used it. Adding Shi at the end, RouShik gets accepted, although the nine year old isn't sure how the k got added but lets it pass.

Now, he gets to pick RouShik's Race and Class. Broken Shackles of Strife and Strike has a number of classical Races in Dwarf, Elf, Halfling, Half-Elf, Half-Orc, and Human. Then there's Dragonborn, Tieflings, and Gnomes that can be picked at the beginning of the game. The other Races need to be unlocked during game play with the first Character, it also unlocks some function called Reincarnation that allows the player to start over as the unlocked Race while picking another Class as well. There's benefits that make up for the restart of the Character account.

He'd been told he can't pick Human as a Race and Shirou isn't sure which of the two Half-breed Races to pick, there is a blurb of back story for each Race along with seeing what's offered. In the end, he picks Dragonborn due to the blurb and then he gets to pick the scale color that will also mean what kind of magical breath weapon he can use once a day, until he picks a Feat that would allow for more uses a day. Shirou almost picks White only stops due to the sub-racial features that pop up on picking that.

After taking a look at the difference between color and metallic, Shirou notices that there's only one that gets poison and that's Green. In the end, he didn't want fire nor cold, which leaves acid and lightning, which is bronze and copper. Checking the coloring, doing his best to pick what color he prefers as both are useful. In the end, Shirou decides on the bronze scales which grants lightning Breath Weapon and picked an dark orange for eye color.

He doesn't mind the Character being the same age as him, which is nine. Which turns his attention to the Class, the only one he realizes would work with he wants is the style is Free Form Style. It seemed that during the Alpha version of the game, Free Form Style was insanely hard what with each Level gained they only get 3 points on their Stats, Stats that had been pre-selected as well. Not so now, they do need to pre-select which Stat will get points but the number is now 5 along with deciding upon leveling up how much goes into which Stat instead of it automatically increasing by a preset number.

What remains of the original version of the style is the Mimicry Skill Feature only it's reset is every twelve hours instead of the twenty-four from the Alpha. It doesn't count towards the five slots that the Free Form Style gets at the beginning and there's an option of adding it permanently to a slot if you have the free spot. It's a change from the Alpha version as they never had that option.

Another change concerning the game from Alpha is the Feats slash Perks. Every 4 levels after level 4, Characters can pick a Feat or cash the Feat in for Perk Points, the exchange of low level Feat equals 2 Perk Points under and at the level of 24. Level 28 to 44, the Feats equal 6 Perk Points but by then there are Feats that allow a Character to almost become a hybrid of another Class while there's nothing to unlock concerning Perks. Sure, Perks can be bought again and again, stacking up their benefits but the increase in said benefits is slower. Then again, for Free Form Style, there's no unlocking level requirement so the price of a Free Style Feat equals 4 Perk Points and stays at that price until Level 80 where it equals 8 Perk Point.

The max Level of any Characters is Level 100 but that's where the Reincarnation is said to be useful. Not that there's any spoilers from the Game Developers about Reincarnation besides the only way to have a Character be one of the unlock-able Races. There's a lot of fan speculation over why the owner of a max Level Character would want to start all over again but given that the game has only been out for two weeks, none have yet to reach Level 100 as of yet in Broken Shackles of Strife and Strike.

Then Shirou takes a look at the options for the Character, he doesn't mind RouShik growing older with him and other then putting in the Date of Birth for his Character moves on to the next, which has to do with showing scars acquired through getting negative damage before the Re-spawn kicks in and the Character awakes in either a chapel or graveyard. It's not a big deal, there's in game options to heal or hide those scars so Shirou doesn't bother selecting the No Scarring option. The option after is about regenerating limbs and he does select this as there's been far to many Trolls who enjoy hacking off other Player's limbs when they do PvP in Arenas and Guild Battle Fields. The final two concern his Character's Name and Level, with ease, he selects hiding his Level, he can un-select it once the game begins after a week, same with the option to hide his Character's Name.

In Alpha version, Players get to choose the Birth Country but not in the released version. If you want to adventure in a different country, you'll have to earn money to purchase passage on either a ship or air ship. Depending on the Country, you then can apply for civilian-ship or an adventuring license that might need to be renewed.

With everything done, Shirou takes a moment to remember if he recalls the Character's name that he's suppose to send a Friend Invite to. It's Taiga's second Character, the name of said Character is 21Stripes_ofAge2000. Glad to have remembered it, he signs in as RouShik and the first thing he does is send said invite, once he goes through how to do just that.

] ? ^ _ V _ ^ ? [

Making it to Level 4 sees RouShik gaining a Feat that he can cash in for a Perk Points. Which sees him going through the list of Feats and then looking into the Perks. Torn between the Feat Dual Sword Style Feat and this Perk called Brain Power Multiplier, which combines the Stats of Int and Wis plus the number of times of purchasing said Perk to help speed up ranking up Skills. As Skills are done in tiers with the max of each tier being 100 ranks to graduate into the next tier. Each tier allows the Skill to widen what passives it grants the Character.

Also, Level 4 unlocks two Skill Slots automatically, with out him needing to increase his Wis, which unlocks a new slot at multiples of five. The Int Stat governs the percentile of how fast those Skills rank up. Actually, that kind of makes it easy actually. He admits and sells his Feat for the 4 Perk Points. It's rumored that for Free Form Style, those Stat Points could have once been used to increase Skills.

Free Form Style is very much a Skill monkey as they say. Only combat bonuses come from passives from Skills instead of from new Class Features. Like how Butchery Skill grants a passive when it comes to crits when attacking certain parts of enemies and then there's Achievements that a Character gets that helps unlock those passives or increase their efficiency.

He purchases the Brain Power Multiplier four times, which means that with his Int at 13 and Wis at 15 plus four means his ranking speed is now 32% faster instead of 13%. Which should see his Weapon: Beginner Long Sword Skill breaking into the next tier soon, like, perhaps by the time he levels up to 5. He's not sure what to fill in his new three Skill slots, he put in the 2 points need to unlock a new slot viva his Wis. He'll be looking for Quests that also grant Wis as rewards so he's not always investing Stat Points.

He's only been playing for two days, yesterday saw him getting dragged around by 21Stripes_ofAge2000 so he didn't get a lot of Quests done only saw his Map of the World increase due to getting dragged around once he finished in the [Starting Area] . Before leaving, RouShik filled three of his five starting Skill Slots, Weapon: Beginner Long Sword Skill had been the first while Beginner Tracking Skill and Beginner Butcher Skill. He then picked up Beginner Weapon Lore Skill and Beginner Arcane Lore Skill at [Temple of the Buried Maiden] 's [Library] .

He'd planned to pick up Beginner Search Skill, which, once he's done finishing Leveling up, heads off to find someone to train him in it. He'll have to put some thought about what to fill up those two Skill Slots. In his Mimicry Slot is the Beginner Cooking Skill. He'd had a lot of meat that he decided to turn into steak that will sell for more so he can purchase better equipment and potions. He didn't see the point in investing in spices when he's not going to be keeping the Beginner Cooking Skill so his steaks had been common quality.

There's a number of other Characters about [Fuyuki Village] , most of the Characters are Tieflings and Half-Orcs with Elves being the next majority. So, yes, he does get a few people looking his way, which could be because of how young he looks along with being a Dragonborn. A number of them seem to be of questionable character given how some of them have their Names and Level on display while others have neither with a few not having their Level on display. The general Level of the Characters are over Level 20, it wouldn't surprise him if they've been playing since the game came out.

Then again, given the Fujimura Group, perhaps it isn't that surprising that so many would pick those two Races? He muses to himself. It's not long before he finds a trainer for the Skill he wants.

With that, RouShik heads for the local Dungeon which is called the [Monastery of the Grail] , it's a Dungeon that can be Soloed for Levels 9 and lower. From Levels 10 and into Level 20, it seems that it a pair of Characters can handle the Dungeon. The enemies within the Dungeon change depending of the time of day, from six am to five pm, the enemies are cultists, mostly Tiefling and Human Races among their number while from six pm to five am, it's filled with undead and demonic enemies.

Given it's eight pm which means it's filled with undead and demonic enemies. Checking to be sure he has at least three more common quality long swords besides the one he already has, RouShik enters the entrance and once he kills the three skeletons and two ghostly spell casters, the Dragonborn begins to use his new Skill on each of the walls, looking for the hidden switch that should reveal either a pouch of coins ranging that sport a random number of copper, silver, and gold or it will reveal a valuable statue that can sell for about fifty silver, which is five gold or five hundred copper.

His Skill ranks up to 5 and one more try, no switch found, so he moves onto the next wall. He does it three times before moving onto the next and this time, he finds the switch. When the stone panel pops on the ruined statue of a Fu Dog's base, it's neither the pouch of gold or the statue. "A bow?"

Making use of his Weapon Lore to examine it, it takes two examinations over the course of ten minutes each for him to get information on his new bow. [The Guardian's Bow] is what it's called and it's a unique weapon as it grants the owner the Weapon: Beginner Long Bow Skill upon binding with it and it doesn't use up a Skill Slot, but will rank up on use. It's one of the few weapons that has a growth system to it but on the down side, it can't be sold at the Auction House to traded to another Character nor can it be scrapped to get materials. It'll forever take up a Inventory Slot unless dropped, upon dropping, it will vanish within seconds of getting dropped.

The option to bind it to him comes up as he closes the information window from his Beginner Weapon Lore Skill. Pressing yes as he knows that there are going to be archers in this Dungeon that he can loot arrows from, the bow gets a bunch of lightning dancing about it for a few seconds before he gets a pop up concerning he's successfully bound the bow to RouShik's Character Account. Putting the bow into his Inventory, he wonders if he shouldn't see if the other wall had an other switch or if he should move on from this room.

He does another search on the final wall but nothing comes from it besides his Skill ranking going up. With that, RouShik picks the right hallway instead of the left as the center hallway is currently collapsed in on itself. The lay out of Dungeons do change from day to day, only one third of a Dungeon lay out is ever on display at a time. This is his second time in this Dungeon, the first time had to do with a retrieval Quest that only took him to the third room to recover a NPC's [Heirloom: Jewel Chest] from the Dungeon cultists.

With his new Skill, he manages to evade traps and he even found a magical trap, using his Beginner Arcane Lore Skill to learn it's name, [Curse of Undead Marking] . He might not be able to get any details but the name seems to be aptitude enough of a description. He also doesn't know how it gets triggered given that it's like a sensor at the center of the hallway. In the end, he does his best to take a running leap over the sensor spot and then returns to check if it's still there, which it is.

Breathing a sigh of relief, RouShik continues forward into the next room, which houses five demonic plant things. They notice him the moment he crosses the doorway and charge in his direction. It's a semi hard fight, what with there being five of them but there isn't any ghosts that arrive as one after another, the demonic plants die, bodies vanishing into black smoke, leaving behind plant fibers and puddles of glowing sap, he does have empty vials to collect said sap in, it's used for a [Potion: Purification of Minor Demonic Taint] while the fibers can be used for either [Ritual: Demonic Bug Summoning] or an ingredient in making [Hemp Cloth] .

He fills a good thirty vials from the pools of glowing sap, there's a timer on those and as it ticks away, the amount of sap you can collect goes down. Under five minutes and you can collect six vials, every thirty seconds after that decreases the amount one can collect. He downs a [Potion: Minor Health] and then is slow to search the room, he finds another magical trap near the ladder that goes up to the make shift cat walk. No name for what it is, it's clear his current tier isn't enough to identify it.

There's work chests up there but decides it's not worth triggering the trap. The last time he'd been here, reinforcements had arrived with each guy that went down, at least two for each one that died. He'd read that usually, skeleton archers show up when dealing with the five that's in this room. It doesn't take long for him to connect his not triggering the first magic trap with the lack of reinforcements. He's both relieved but also annoyed as he'd been hoping to get arrows for his new bow.

There's eight hidden stashes that sport pouches of copper coins between six to twenty coins that amount to sixty-three, number of [Small Minor Ritual Candles] out in the open that are single use items, and uncut quartz crystals found before a minor shrine. Having decided not to figure out how to get onto those worker catwalks, he decides to check the door leading to the next part for magical trap. There isn't one and he does continue to use his search skill, he finds more traps but also three stashes that sport thumb size jade flutes, clearly meant to be worn as jewelry and the same magical trap from before, only for geared towards demonic enemies.

RouShik does the same tactic and is sure to check to see if it's been triggered, it hadn't so he continues on. This time as he gets close to the door leading into the room, he checks and finds that there is a simple big of magic that's called [Ward: Minor Alarm] . It's limit is a foot over the ground, so he does his best to high step over that, this time, he takes the enemies on without them realizing he entered the room. The two skeletons are archers while the rest are zombies armed with weapons, the first has a hand axe, the second a spear, and the third a mace.

Padded cloth armor is universal armor among Characters, if he wants better armor, he'll have to take a Feat, same as magical Classes of Sorcerer, Warlock, and Wizard. There is an number of builds that have become well known, that are still evolving as people try different approaches, it should be noticed that there has been an official three builds that the Game Developers released. The most popular of the three is the so called Artificer is more of a Free Form Style build and it's a primary focus is on crafting during the early Levels. The other two had been the so call One Man Army and the other had been the Mystic.

Still, after ten seconds, the arrows that get pass the armor absorption vanish. The zombies are tougher then skeletons as the flesh absorbs most of the damage. He continues to hack at their necks, beheading zombies auto kills them, the necks have their own hit value, it takes two slashes per neck for the heads to get cut off, which is hard to do when it comes to you are always aiming the blow. Using the hilt and flat of his sword, he disarms the two skeletons then using the pummel to slam it into their skulls. With the bones being more brittle, a single hit shatters a portion of the skull but you needed to smash the whole skull to down the skeleton.

The bones burn into ashes, leaving their bows and quivers of arrows behind. The bodies of the zombies stick around longer, usually for ten minutes and that's so people who want to, can butcher the rancid meat. Likely trying for an Achievement to increase the Butchery Skill's passive to work better on whatever Race the zombies once had been. RouShik doesn't like the idea of doing that and besides looting the weapons, all of which are common quality, leaves them be.

Checking the long sword over, the durability is fairly low now but hardly matters as he has spares along with being able to use his new bow. He searches the room and finds four stashes of pouches of copper coins, gaining forty-nine coins. There's five bundles of scented herbs hanging around the room that he loots and ignores the two bamboo chests that are trapped with magical traps.

] ? ^ _ V _ ^ ? [

There's a E-Mail from the Game Developers, Kaleidoscopic Workshop, in his E-Mail Index. It's title is simply Congratulations! Clicking, Shirou opens it and after skimming it for the first time, he then reads it a bit more seriously a second time.

Blinking, the child Magus looks towards the ARI, short for Alternate Reality Interface, System v. 5. The idea that there's going to be a wireless headset that can interface with the ARI System at a greater distance within Fuyuki City, as long as there's an internet connection the wireless headset would have a stable connection to his ARI and his Broken Shackles of Strife and Strike Account. That he got picked in a random draw to give the beta wireless headsets a go is odd but after thinking about it, the nine year old shrugs it off.

He's only had the game and the system for two weeks now and RouShik's level has increased to 16 two days ago. He has been alternating between weapons, the bow, which comes to him fairly naturally, and any long sword he loots. He's received another three Feats, all of which he exchanged for Perk Points, which went into improving his Brain Power Multiplier Perk which now adds sixteen. Having looked up what Quests there are that grant points in Wis on the forums, one of four of those listed Quests granted him that Stat increase, which he'd been warned about from others. It seems that depending on both your Class and on the number next to the Stat decides if you'll get it.

He'd also picked up a number of Skills but there's two that were geared so he can do a bit more when it comes to firing an arrow with his bow, they are the Beginner Skills of Fletching and Alchemy to create his own arrows with special effects. The only way to pick up actual spell-casting capabilities would be picking a Feat and then improving it viva using Perk Points. Alchemy can get bolstered with other Skills like Herblism, which grants a passive when handling plant ingredients and Blacksmithing, which allows one to create experiment in creating enchanted metal. Alchemy takes hours of game play along with a lot of material along with a secure location in which to work, work that doesn't always produce anything useful or experience for time spent.

Reason why he's paused in his playing has to do with focusing on having his father around once more and trying to get Magus training from him. While the game does give him a taste of what it means to be on an adventure, to being extra ordinary. His course of action concerning getting training from his father doesn't seem to be working very well as the adult seems more... depress and it seems as though his father's body is aching then usual and thus, he feels more disincline to press the matter of Magus training or press for more information concerning Magi.

Pushing the matter of the wireless headset to the side, Shirou closes his E-Mail and then continues on with why he'd been on the computer in the first place, namely, looking through the game's forums for more information about Alchemy, looking for Player discovered recipes or if anyone has come up with a reaction table. He's looking at more how to weaponize the Skill for his use while others seem to be more interested in making Potions that can do anything a Spell can, from healing and correcting scars to allowing the drinker to breath fire and alter their looks. There are recipe drops for crafting skills but the Game Developers have encouraged Players to use them more as a proof of concept instead of the end all, be all that they generally are in other games like this.

The idea of creating an injector arrow flickers through his mind, sure, he can dip arrow heads in poisons that he creates from failure but the effectiveness is on the low end even if the arrow gets into the body. Then there's certain enemy types that are unaffected by poison covered arrows, like Animated and Undead. Shirou's found that using poison also degrades the drops, either in number or it causes a contaminated effect on a portion of the organic parts drops. In his opinion, it makes sense as to why the poison could caused the remains to be contaminated but he's in a very tiny minority in that regards though as most seem to think it's unfair that killing NPCs with poisons and other means to inflict damage could affect the materials one can gain from the dead digital corpse.

With a mental push and an let loose sigh, Shirou refocuses on what's on the computer screen and picking up from where he'd left off reading. Skimming through various rants and arguments over why the Game Developers decisions and those who defend said decisions. He wonders if Kaleidoscopic Workshop is taking any of it serious and have plans to release a statement to sooth over said issues or react in some way to said rants as he presses the back button until he gets back to the main forum.

A few minutes go by with him going through the thread titles but there's not much more to learnt, even checking latest posts of previously useful threads don't really amount to anything more useful. Shirou glances at the time and sighs at noticing how he's still got two hours before he's going to bed. Closing the browser and then turning off the computer, the child goes to check on his adopted parent. Finding him fast asleep before the TV, that is on, he shifts his weight as he tries to decide whether he should wake the man, turn off the TV, or just leave scene before him be.

Picking his third option, after all, if he did turn it off, he might wake Kiritsugu and he's loathed to do that, Shirou heads for his room. Sighing, he gets ready for bed before he puts on the corded visor device that's connected to his ARI System. Settled on his bed, he uses the tiny remote to turn on the ARI System. Putting it back within the thirty second wait before the machine finishes booting up, soon enough he's interacting with the ARI's Menu and selecting Broken Shackles of Strife and Strike, which boots up about twenty seconds after getting selected.

Within two minutes and he's RouShik, the bronze scaled Dragonborn that's Classless. It takes him a bit to go through his belongings, getting reacquainted with the interface before heading out of the cabin that he found and used as a Log Out spot. Once out, he begins to head towards the nearest farm house to inquire for Daily Quests that should involve physical labor of some sort that should also Reward an increased to either his Con or Str upon completion.

] ? ^ _ V _ ^ ? [

There's somethings Shirou doesn't get when it comes to Sakura, the least of which is why she doesn't seem to use or own ARI System. He knows that Shinji has one and had played Broken Shackles of Strife and Strike, though it sounds like the preteen hasn't played the game in months, having switched to DxD's Peerage Woes. From what he's found when looking into said game, it's about Devils vying for positions, namely the Four Satans, they are often considered the most powerful of Devils, the Demon of Devils as it were, it's what the DxD stands for.

From listening and reading, most men and some women, use the game to fulfill another fantasy of theirs, something about harems and reverse harems. Given that the Peerage titles are based off of chess and that's how these... Rating Games play out, it seems. Again, there's not much of an interest in finding out more about the game and what little he knows comes from listening to his male classmates discussing/arguments the game in the locker room before and after gym class.

Then again, Broken Shackles of Strife and Strike has been out for three years now and thus there have been more games for the ARI System, the System itself has released a better version last year and there's going to be another version coming out in a few months as well. Given what he's heard from Shinji, the preteen plans to buy the latest one, which means that Sakura could get the old one from Shinji, though when he mentioned that, Sakura merely acknowledge that but it's clear that she's not overly interested in the System or in playing video games in general, which is fairly different from others of her age, heck, of most kids and preteens really.

In the time he's come to know Sakura, she's never shown much incline to speak about much of anything with him or with anyone really. Which makes why she's still coming around after his arm's recovered rather puzzling to Shirou. Sure, he's been giving her better tips when it comes to cooking and often had her stick around to eat dinner with him when it's just him. There's been a few times she's come around during the morning for breakfast, which has been slowly coming to be a weekly happening on Fridays since last month.

There's only a few topics that serve as common ground between them and there's rarely anything new to tread or if there is, it's quickly covered. Shirou knows he's fairly bad when it comes to starting conversations, he's not a talker, not really but then, a lot of his classmates seem to over look that little fact. It also seems that Sakura is also more of a listener then a talker, so, there's a lot of silence that's on going between them, making him concerned if Sakura finds it awkward or something, with the lack of easy conversation or his lack of ability to speak just to fill the silence that is pretty much a companion when he's alone in the house, without Taiga checking upon on him and mooching meals during that time.

"You play against Onii-chan, senpai? In that Woes game?" Sakura asks softly while she's mixing some batter for the tempura dish.

"The one with the Devils? Ah, no, it doesn't seem to be my kind of game." Shirou admits as he continues to chop some vegetables before sweeping the bits into the bowl and moving onto the next produce to be chopped up. "Most of my time gaming is spent in Broken Shackles of Strife and Strike, I know it's an old game but it's one that the developers seem to continue to support and evolve the world."

"I think Onii-chan mentioned a bit about that game." The purple haired girl admits. "He seemed focused on the magic casting types."

"He kept switching characters I recall. He wasn't satisfied with any Class for long." He recalls as he sweeps the bits into the bowl, taking a moment to study the contains, trying to judge if they have enough or if he should chop up more.

"Have you played any of them? The Classes for magic, I mean." Sakura asks and he blinks, RouShik is his only Character and Shirou has used Reincarnation three times, he's coming up to four times, he's not sure what Race he'll pick for when that comes up though.

The first time he used it for RouShik, he lost all of his Feats but his Perks and Skills remained along with a single weapon, which is [The Guardian's Bow] . As for the Skills, they don't start maxed out, but they weren't Beginner ranking though. His Stats proved to be better then when he first created RouShik and the only change had been becoming a copper scaled Dragonborn along with picking Ranger as a Class. The second time saw, again, his Perks and Skills plus the bow remaining with the Character plus at a higher starting tier then before with much improved base Stats, the Race he picked was Half-Green Dragon Wood Elf and going back to his previous no Class. The last time he'd gone through it, same thing happened again only this time he kept the Recipes for his Crafting Skills and he'd unlocked a feature called Incarnation Inheritance Rank 1, which pretty much gave him all of his previous belongings and money, even though he couldn't use most of it due to being back to Level 1 Character. As for Race, he picked Kobold and kept to the Free Form Style.

"RouShik is my only Character, I've Reincarnated him three times, it'll be four soon." He admits, he's thinking of going back to the Half-Dragon template, curious about what kind of Dragon he'll get from doing so, although it's also a question of what Race he should pick before applying it. It's hardly the only template, he's earned a number of the therianthrope templates, he's only missing the Wererat one and that's likely due to him staying out of urban environment, which tends to have more politically hot Quests and involve in game Factions, either NPCs or Player founded ones.

"Reincarnate?" Looking over to Sakura, he notices her looking a touch clueless and lost. "Ah..."

"It merely means that I've reached Level 100 with RouShik three times, though it's getting easier, given the fact that I get to keep my previous purchase Perks and learnt Skills, although not at max ranking, but better then Beginner ranking, the base Stats are also bolstered after going through it as well." He explains, it's true, it's gotten easier for him to Level up RouShik with each Reincarnation, although his Home Town and Country isn't one he decides on though. It's likely to add spice to his playing experience and he's been learning new languages because of it.

"That sounds impressive." Admits Sakura, there's a hint of something in her tone. Shirou decides it might be disinterest, after all, he's fairly sure she hears enough about games from her classmates.

"I guess it seems so, but I'm sure you're tried of hearing about people talk about their experiences in games." He reasons as he returns to chopping up another vegetable. "Never mind hearing about Shinji's antics at home."

Silence descends between them once more as they work together to make dinner. As things are getting cooked, Sakura mentions, "Onii-chan's getting the new system that's coming out, perhaps... Maybe you could... If it's no trouble that is..."

It takes Shirou a bit to realize what she's asking. "I'd be happy to show you around, if you're interested in playing Broken Shackles of Strife and Strike." He tells her, given that it's looking like he's going to be keeping his money and what's in his Inventory from now on when he Reincarnates RouShik, it wouldn't be hard for him to purchase passage back to the game world's Japan.

Sakura gives him a slight smile, he notices out of the corner of his eye. He focuses back on his task for cooking the egg noodles and the tempura vegetables that are boiling in oil.

] ? ^ _ V _ ^ ? [

Standing before the [Monastery of the Grail] , it brings back a number of memories for RouShik and reminding him of when he got that bow, that he still hasn't stopped using. It's been with him so long that, well, he's reluctant to part with it, although after a year, he found a special Quest that would enable a person to preform a Ritual that would allow a Item to improve its own stats as he Leveled up but it also means he can't use another Item of said type. Throughout his later Reincarnations, the bow's stats deflate to match his restart as a Level 1 Character.

Next to him, to his left is Sakura's Character, ViteLite, who's a Level 5 Tiefling Druid. RouShik had decided to see what a Minotaur would look like with the Half-Dragon template applied, the Dragon that he's half of is Gold Dragon. Standing at six feet, a bit more with his horns curving up a few extra inches, he's appearance is rather chimera like, a strange mixture of creamy brown fur coat and slightly dull gold scales with a more dragonic cast to his snout then bovine. He's currently Level 9, if he hadn't been careful, he'd likely have been a higher Level by the time he'd arrived [Fuyuki Village] and thus, the Level difference would be greater then it already is between ViteLite and RouShik.

With a flicker of his surpringly long tail sporting the usual fur tuff at the end, he asks, "Are you ready to head in?" The Dungeon looks to be in slightly more condition then the last time he went through it, but that's likely due the progressing of this world's story. There's been repairs, repairs that have altered the outer look of the place, even during the day, he can only guess what it'll be like during the night.

"Yes senpai." Murmurs ViteLite, she'd been surprised upon hearing about the Dungeon, particularly given its location. Then again, the mention of the local Temple did get another odd reaction and her eyes had been rather wide upon mentioning who the Game Developers had been behind the ARI System and owners of the game. In a way, it had been like she'd been afraid...

Pushing that thought out of his mind as ViteLite begins walking towards the entrance, it seems that there's a number of Cultists on guard though, which is another change from when he was last here. With likely surprising speed, RouShik charges to engage them in close quarters, his part of their Party is that of Tank after all. With two long swords in hand, he begins with slashing with his right and defending incoming attacks with his left, in a matter of a two minutes, the Cultists are dead with ViteLite managing to kill at least two while he killed the other four.

Once they get the loot from the dead bodies, he ignores the options that would allow him to Butcher them for meat, he strides up the steps, his hooves making noise upon the settled stones of the steps. Having gotten a feel for the trollish ways of the Kaleidoscopic Workshop, he inspects the door frame and then the next few steps beyond. Sure enough, there's two Minor Wards, one on the door frame's bottom and one about five foot up the door frame. Deciding now was a good as time as any to start helping ViteLite bring up Skills, he gently explains where to look after having her investigate for anything concerning the door frame.

With some help, ViteLite does notice the first Ward. It takes a bit longer and even with RouShik lifting her up, to find the second one. "How do we disarm them?" She asks curiously. "I'm only a Druid..."

"I'm no Wizard either or a Warlock." He admits with a shrug and noticing the questioning look, explains, "Wizards get a Class only Skill called Disable Magical Device while a Warlock can drain magic from Wards and Magical Traps, at higher Levels, they can even try draining magic from debuffs on themselves and Party Members. Some say that they can do it to enemy buffs but the chances are fairly slimmer then when done to debuffs."

"What happens to the magic that's drained?" ViteLite asks and he answers, "Into the environment unless they have a vassal to channel the magic into, generally, depending on their Pact with their Patron it could be their Familiar Spirit or an Item, like their [Book of Shadows] , if they store enough in a certain amount of time, in that book for example, they can use that to quick cast a spell."

"Sorcerers?" Inquires ViteLite and he rubs the back of his neck. "They could try frying a hole in a Ward with their raw magic or causing the Magical Trap to explode from being feed too much magic, but that's about it when it comes this kind of thing."

"So... just duck under that one and step over that one?" She asks and he nods, although from the look he's getting, it's clear she doesn't believe he can do that, given his bulk along with height. Feeling his pride on the line, he backs up and putting the two long swords away in his Inventory, he does a short run then leaps through the space and, using his Acrobatics Skill, does a roll before ending in a crouch. Clapping his hands as he dusts them off, he rises to stand, turning to the door frame as he puts his hands on his hips, waiting for ViteLite to enter.

Soon enough, she enters, her head ducking under the five foot Minor Ward while high stepping over the threshold. Nodding, he pulls the two swords back out of his Inventory before sheathing them. It's empty in this part of the Dungeon and as he scans the room, notices what's been fixed up and what's been replaced. "No enemies?" Murmurs ViteLite.

"I think that's what the Minor Wards are for." He comments lightly. "We should still be able to find hidden stashes in this room though." His gaze shifts to the spot where he found [The Guardian's Bow] .

So, going first, ViteLite takes her time and does find two cashes of coin pouches, he'd waved any claims of drops and found loot when creating this Party, so the coin belongs to ViteLite. She does find a lock spot, which is rather surprising and moves to see if he can get it to move. It doesn't, not at all and then he checks the spot more closely, finding a stronger Ward upon the stone panel. "Guess we need to trigger one of the Minor Wards on the door frame."

"Shouldn't you check to see if I miss anything first?" Inquires ViteLite and he glances around the room thoughtfully. "I guess I could." He agrees and he finds another three hidden stashes, nothing helpful as one was a pouch of uncut common gems of eight about half an inch in size, a tiny jade flute, and three jars filled with [Emperor's Grin Wine] .

"What kind of wine?" ViteLite asks and he replies after taking a sniff of one of the jars, "Mostly rice based from what I can detect." He offers the jar to her after putting the cork back on, which gets put away in the Inventory.

"So, which one are we tripping?" The Druid asks him. "Let's do the bottom one, after all, not every Race is five foot in height." He decides, nodding for her to go use her quarter staff to trigger that one as he readies himself if there's any incoming NPCs.

Thankfully, none come rushing within the first three minutes, RouShik relaxes and puts the two swords back into their sheaths.

ViteLite relaxes and they both walk over to the panel and finds that it does move, he watches as ViteLite brings out a miniature horse sporting folded wings made out of white gold. "What's it called?" He asks curiously.

" [Astral Mount: Medusa's Child] . It's also an unique mount?" While she's uncertain about what that means but he finds himself frowning at the chances that another unique item has been found.

"Huh, what are the odds? I got my unique bow here as well..." He's never heard of an Astral line for Mounts as well, but then, given the nature of the kind of item, it's likely the only one of it's kind. "I am guessing it offers the Riding Skill?"

ViteLite nods, a flicker of surprise lights up upon her face before fading away. "You won't be able to sell it for money nor trade it away. It's going to stay with this Character until you put it down on the ground and let if vanish... Although, if you want to keep it reverent to you, I know of a Quest that could allow it to gain in power as you do, the price is not being able to use another Mount."

"Do you have a Mount?" She asks and he shakes his head. "I prefer traveling around on foot, enjoying the scenery and if I'm in a hurry, I can rent one for a few hours." He admits, it also means he gets a lot more random events along that lead to some interesting Quests and merchants with some unusual stock that way. It also means he has to watch out for PK Parties looking for him to drop something interesting or to Butcher his body for unsavory reasons.

"Why Medusa?" He can't help but wonder out loud. "She's from Greece, right? I'm sure I recall that much about her." This is suppose to be Japan. RouShik mentally adds as he stares intently at the white gold winged horse.

"Ye... yes, she is." Agrees ViteLite with a hint of a stammer, which is rather odd as it's been a while since she's stammered in his presence. "So, which way?" The little statue vanishes into her Inventory and he lets the matter drop as well.

Unlike previously, all three ways are free of rubble, showing that the Cultists have managed to repairs to this Dungeon. "It's been some years since I've fought my way through this, there's been changes to this Dungeon, so any of them are fine."

ViteLite nods and after a bit, she heads for the center one hallway. He gently reminds her to be cautious as they walk down it, knowing there's going to be traps and curse markers along with hidden stashes of loot.

] ? ^ _ V _ ^ ? [

There's an strange mark on the back of his left hand. Shirou isn't sure what to make of the design reminds him of the design carved on the grip of [The Guardian's Bow] . It's a design that brings to mind a lantern, in a way, the solid point that's towards his wrist is the pole or tassel. The next part is the bottom that holds the light and the final is the top, the lid.

"What's it doing on my hand though?" He wonders out loud as he sits on his bed. Finally, after some minutes of trying to make sense of what is means, he gets off his bed and begins his day.

By the time he arrives at the kitchen, Sakura arrives as he starts on making breakfast. About ten minutes later, Taiga arrives with a boisterous shout of greeting of both Sakura and himself. The usual banter happens although he does catch Sakura seemingly staring off into space for a few seconds. She recovers and inquires about his hand, he admits ignorance about it, the purple haired teen seems to study his face for a few seconds before murmuring the suggestion of covering it up.

With that, Sakura returns to cooking breakfast and he stares at his left hand's back. I guess I can get why I should... But, hmm... Shirou recalls some blush that Taiga forgot in the bathroom. Using bandages would mean he's covering something or injured, perhaps he couldn't Alter the blush to match his skin tone? Maybe see about including a duration of some hours without it smudging?

Shirou excuses himself when everything is just about done, heading for the bathroom, it takes him seconds to find the blush. "Trace On." He states in a calm, clear voice and he feels the tell tale tingle surge throughout his body. With a thought, his vision alters and he gets a lot of information concerning the blush, the case and the chemical compound that makes up the make up. Once open, he holds it on the palm of his left hand and points at the make up with his right index finger.

It takes a few seconds to inject the Alterations he wants into the make up, they are blending with skin color, duration of eight hours of it being water proof and smudge proof, and hiding what's covered from Structure Analysis spell. The magic settles and then he uses his index and middle finger to apply the make up over the mark. Working it over, it vanishes from his sight and then uses Structure Analysis, he gets information on the make up but not about what it's covering.

Nodding in satisfaction, he closes the compact and puts it back where he found it. "Trace On." He murmurs and coldness spreads throughout his body as his Magic Circuits turn off. Washing his hands, the make up remains fine, even as he dries his hands.

With that, he exits out of the bathroom and fast walks back to his kitchen. It's not long before breakfast is ready, they serve it easily and quickly. Of course, the first one to dig in is Taiga and it's not long before she brings up the latest news concerning Broken Shackles of Strife and Strike. "Can't believe they're finally ending their support of the game after almost ten years."

All either Sakura and him does is hum. Their teacher continues on the topic, "I never got any of my Characters to level 100! And now, like, out of no where, it's vanishing!"

"Isn't it kind of your own fault, though, sensei? For not sticking with only one Character long enough to achieve that?" Sakura inquires politely.

"I can't believe you both didn't do more to help me power level!" Taiga counters and, well, it's not like they hadn't tried but, well, Taiga's attention had shifted to new offerings for the ARI System, like Modern Wars of Shadows Hunters, Galaxy Merchants, Historical Accounts of Pern, and, due to an agreement with LucasArts as of last year, Knights of the Old Republic, which came out two weeks ago.

"It's not like you can't create new characters in what's taking its place." He reminds her. "They might be transferring those Character who've Reincarnated but they are also wiping clear those Characters' advantages and Skills."

"What's the new game going to be called?" Inquires Sakura. He presses his lips together as he tries to recall it, it only got mentioned once in the announcement.

"Remnants... Revenants? R something of Shattered thing? It was only mentioned once in that, like, a single sentence." Shirou replies after taking a minute to ponder the name.

"But aren't they also compensating the lost with in game currency? So the two of your Characters should be millionaires!" Accuses Taiga snaps. "After all, Shirou's RouShik has been Reincarnated, like, a dozens of times!" Their sensei's accusing gaze switches to Sakura, only it gets a touch softer as she says, "And your ViteLite's been through it at least a dozen times!"

He bites down on correcting that, the max number of times one can Reincarnate is ten times. After that number, it's mostly just allowing you to change your Race, apply or remove a Racial Template, and switch from your previous Class to Free Form Style of play and back again to the last Class your Character had been. The Level stays at the max that is Level 100 and there is no changes to the Perks, the six Stats, and to the Character's Skills.

RouShik's current Race is Silver Dragon, he unlocked the Race due to the number of times his Race had been Draconic relations. The minimum needed to unlock Dragons as a Player Race had been five times, the Half-Dragon template does count towards the minimum, he used that template thrice. At six times, it unlocks the ability to choice which of the two types the Dragon will be, Chromatic or Metallic. There's nothing more to unlock from choosing Draconic related Race for the seventh through tenth Reincarnation.

"They never confirmed how they'll compensate for the lost or if they will." He counters simply. "They might even not go through with allowing for said transfer as well." Although, Shirou admits, he would be disappointed if that's what they decide. He's grown attached to RouShik after how many hours he's put in to Leveling him up along with the various Skills he'd cultivated in game.

Taiga's bullied him into trying Galaxy Merchants but it hadn't really engaged him a great deal given it's discussions on trans-humanism story plots with side plots concerning alien cultures plus establishing and maintaining diplomatic relations with said alien races. The space ships and some of the technologies were interesting, if it weren't for the serious tone of the game in regards to its undertone of ethics and philosophy concerning what defines a human. There's also the bit about how realistic could various intelligent species could interact and maintain any kind of contact long term, particularly when humans still have trouble dealing with other humans.

He'd played it once a week for two months, by that point Taiga had moved onto another game, so there wasn't any reason for him to continue playing. Shirou managed to get out of getting pulling into playing other games with her, then again, she apparently reconnected with someone over the internet that had she'd met before the Fire happened. He knows the person by their ARI System Account name of The2ndLordM.

His own Account name is Whitex2=Castle, it was Taiga who filled out his registry information and since he hadn't cared about his Account name, she put that in. He'd been busy in the kitchen when she'd been setting up his ARI System, making lunch for them both. Taiga had something to do after lunch, so she wouldn't be on until mid afternoon that day.

"When are they closing down the game again?" Asks Sakura as she glances up from his left hand to his fact. "Last day of this month." Taiga grumbles and he nods in confirmation, which is in less then two weeks. "They wanted to... 'rip the bandage off fast'."

"Which means... What game are you two going to use for your dates?" Taiga asks and he mentally sighs but holds back his reply about them not dating. Sakura looks embarrassed and focuses on her breakfast, he does the same.

"Well?" There's a certain edge to Taiga's tone that causes him to break into a sweat. "Ah..." His mind races through the various opinions as he shares a Look with Sakura.

"Proud Cultivator Way." "Galaxy Merchant." They blurt out before they give each other questioning looks, only for Sakura's cheeks to redden as her gaze darts away while his own remains puzzled, he hasn't heard of that one...

"Proud Cultivator Way? Isn't that the one based off of Xianxai works?" Questions Taiga and Shirou look her way, it seems that their teacher's mental gears are clearly moving before eyes light up along with a wolfish grin plus an odd glint in her eyes, which seems to cause Sakura to blush once again and seem to curl into herself.

In the end, a glance at the clock means that it's not long before their meal together is coming to an end, the topic shifts to something else and Shirou does his best to finish eating. So other then memorize the title, he leaves the matter alone.

To Be Continued

Author's Note:

Yea, I used ARI System and the game, Broken Shackles of Strife and Strike in a previous story. This is an updated version from that one as there's been changes to it, think of it as version 2 of that game. And yes, there is a wink to that series in this chapter!

Ended up needing to break this into two part, so it seems at this moment, so the next part will deal with the Fifth Holy Grail War.

I also hope you all enjoy this offering and its second part.

Broken Shackles of Reality P 2: Fate

I don't own Fate/Stay night!

Having agreed to stick around to clean up for Shinji, Shirou puts on the wireless headset and with a simple "Trace On", he logs into the ARI System's Menu. As he selects Broken Shackles of Strife and Strike, a pop up informs him that a scan is needed before he can continue. Then it's a mater of waiting a minute, watching the dots on the pop up swing up and down before vanishing as the message of scan complete replaces it.

He logs into the game no problem and other then him getting a notification that his unique weapon is unavailable. While odd, RouShik's shoulder shrug and proceeds to get some things down before his body finishes cleaning up the room, which should take sometime. While RouShik is a Sliver Dragon, which comes with a number of bonus features, he's currently using one to assume the form of a silver scaled Dragonborn, he doesn't get any of the Racial Features that comes with said Race, as he walks out of the barn's loft he'd logged out in.

As he walks towards the farm house, he's eating [Honey Garlic Jerky] , he made a bunch out of [Dire Boar Meat] . The type of meat used does alter the kind of boost a Character can get from eating it along with the kind of honey and garlic used. There's at least a dozen kinds of honey one can get throughout the world while there's fewer kinds of garlic, then again, there have been a few who tried to breed magical infused strains of it. Wizards and Druids have a higher success rate when it comes to using Alchemy Skill to create new living entities or in creating magical breeds of generally mundane plants or animals, like this one Character named VonIllya who created a breed of magic infused Walnut Trees which have properties of Lesser Mana Regeneration when eaten raw for fifteen minutes.

It's not long before he gets a number of Daily Quests from the owners of the Farm, the husband being injured, concerning clearing the stalls of the barn, cutting fire wood, milking six of the twenty goats, weeding the herb garden of the wife's, picking a list of seasonal fruit from the orchard, and collecting eggs from the chicken hut. Leaving the cleaning of the stalls for last, RouShik heads for the garden to begin with the weeding. Time flows and he completes each of in decedent time.

Soon enough, he's turned the Quests in and is on his way to town, walking he collects various plants as he wanders through the forest. The local Mobs don't attack him due to sensing he's not what he appears to be. Just as the nearest town comes into view from within the forest, he's left the safety of the road behind a long time ago when he gets 'ambushed', he had noted that the group of ten had been within the forest but also noticed their armor marking them as those not yet pass Level 40, given the Level of Monsters being for Levels 20 through to 30, he hadn't thought they were abnormal to be wandering the forest.

His Level isn't on display nor are theirs, not that it matters given how familiar he is with this game and its various equipment. So, he isn't overly concerned when they start approaching where he's headed. Slowing down, RouShik sighs at their actions as it's becoming clear what it is they plan to do. "Please leave me be." He states as he comes face to face with four of the Players looking to rob and/or PK him.

The Halfling that's flanked with the a pair of Elves, the two were two different types, while the fourth is a green scaled Dragonborn. The Halfling is clearly of the Monk Class with the two Elves being Rangers, the Wood Elf sporting two long swords, pretty much announcing his Fighting Style while the other one sports a single long sword plus a bow resting on the back. The Dragonborn is clearly a Sorcerer, he wouldn't be surprised if there's a Cleric among the other six members of this Bandit Party, never mind at least two Rogues, perhaps Assassin types.

"It's four on one, so, why don't you drop all your belongings? We might let you leave this forest alive." The Halfling states and he sighs, "There's ten of you and I sincerely doubt the highest Level among you passes 30."

There's a slight stiffening from the High Elf Player while the other, a Wood Elf, places her hands on the hilts of the two long swords. "At least two Assassin Rogues among the hidden six, a Cleric, and likely another spell-caster, given the location, Druid. Which leaves the remaining two members to be melee types." He reasons out and from the reactions of all four, he's fairly correct in his guesses, particularly given how familiar he is with dealing with Bandit Parties.

"Trust me, your Party isn't capable of PKing me nor am I incline to fork over anything that's in my Inventory." He states calmly. "So please disperse as I will report you names to the local Militia once I am in town." The Militia will auto-generate Bounty Quests for Players to hunt down said members of this Bandit Party for the next seven days. RouShik notices their Character Names, it's easy given his Level and the maxed out Skills.

The Halfling gets an ugly look while the pair of Elves narrow their eyes at him. Clearly taking that as a challenge while the Dragonborn looks unsettled, but then there's the saying that came from an American game that says, 'Geek the Mage First'. A lot of people take those words to heart as they aren't known for their high Con and everyone knows of their area damaging spells capable of causing a lot of difficulty when it comes to changing the battlefield.

"It's ten on one! We can take him!" States the High Elf as she pulls out her sword.

As combat begins, he sighs as his form shimmers and then stretches into that of a young adult Silver Dragon. The incoming crossbow bolt and arrow bounce off his folded wings and he looming over the green scaled Dragonborn. Their eyes widen and it's clear they just realized just how out matched they were, for not only is he a Dragon but his Level is on display along with the icon showing he's Reincarnated the max number of times. He sees their Levels now as well but it hardly matter due to the way the game works, given the imbalance of numbers, the Bandit Party has gone pass the Committed to Combat number and even if they disband the Party, it won't end combat, not even fleeing will either.

Further, due to how this locks them in combat, allowing them to flee won't end his current battle state nor theirs. The only way this ends is if the Bandit Party kills RouShik or with him killing each member of the Bandit Party. Even if he were to logs out without killing them all and comes back into the game, he'd still find himself engaged in battled with the remaining Party. Nor could either side try and sign back onto the game with other Characters, they can't even delete the Characters when out of the game either.

According to many Players' opinions, the CEO is a classified Troll. He dimly remembers the article that racked the CEO over for this game feature. The CEO would release a simple reply, "Then don't engage in Banditry." It had been the same update that released the auto-generation of Bounty Quests when Players report other Players for forming a Bandit Party. It was also when the option of hidden Levels outside of combat became an opinion as well.

The ten Players do try to flee but it's futile, even if this terrain isn't helping him in killing these Bandits, he's got other means to attack them. Once he's killed four of the ten, he's able to assume a humoid form, retaking his former Dragonborn appearance, he brings out his bow and selects a certain type of arrows, picking the max exploding kind. Thus equipped, RouShik spends the next twenty minutes hunting down the remainder of the Bandit Party.

He finishes killing the Monk Halfling when he's notified that he's going to be auto-logged out. Before he fully gets out of the ARI System's Menu, he gets a personal well wishes from the CEO of the game, Mr Scweinorg. Shirou isn't sure what to make of that as he finds himself on his knees, it seems that his body had been scrubbing the floor. It takes a few seconds before the slight disorientation fades and then he gets to his feet.

A soft huff, he is quick to finish up cleaning the room before putting the wireless headset away. As Shirou slings his bag on but just as he's about to leave, he hears something that's rather strange. It takes him a few seconds to realize what he's hearing is what he's hearing, he hears a voice.

Lips pressed together, the teen begins to sneak towards where the noise is. Getting a good look turned out to be a likely bad idea once he gets a glimpse of what's going on. There's two men, adults, one wearing red and the other blue. The blue welds a spear while the red is using two swords, one is black and the other white. His gaze keeps drifting to the one in red, the tanned skin plus bright white hair...

A semi-familiar voice of another teen rings out but he's already leaving, the spell or atmosphere is broken and he focuses on getting home. Once he's there, he'll review what he saw and hear, but first, he needs to sneak away. It's not until he's pass the school gates that he finally allows himself to breath fully and to stretch, his shoulders had been tense throughout his sneaking away, he's already jogging home, he might be out of the school but he's likely not out of danger, not until he's home and behind the Bound Fields of his property.

] ? ^ _ V _ ^ ? [

He'd known that the Bound Fields of the house weren't very powerful but how was he to expect that a giant of a man would be able to shatter them as easily as one tears paper? Shirou sure hadn't and as he murmurs, "Trace On." The teenager finds himself wishing he'd taken steps to set up something in the case that they did fall.

A lot of information comes to him with a simple glance at the weapon that Servant Berserker is using as he murmurs under his breath, "From the Earth thee came, Refined through the Flames of the Smelter, thou was Shaped by My Hand with Hammer and Anvil, thus thou was Forge into Being." His mental image of a pair of short swords get Projected. The one in his left is [Solar's Bright Burn] , it's a custom sword of the Fire effect series he has created in game and as the name suggests, as he slices with it, it cauterizes the wound as it goes. The short sword in his right is [Void Sender] , one of his first custom sword and slashes from this one have a dimensional effect rift which acts like the condition of Bleeding, its duration is for a minute while also causing Numbness in the area of said injury.

A surprising calmness descends as he raises the pair into a defensive stance, the slight blinding white aura contrasts the light eating black of the other. A lot of what is happening isn't that far off from when he's playing the game, he knows he's not but it hardly matters. Shirou evades the incoming swing from Berserker and slashes the back of the wrist with his left, the cut burning close as the tip of the short sword barely scratching into the skin, it's not all that deep nor long of a cut, given the surprising quickness of the giant before him.

Knowing full well that it would only take one solid blow to at the right angle to knock him out, Shirou finds himself drawing on his experiences within Broken Shackles of Strife and Strike to evade the incoming blows while doing his best to attack when he sees the right openings. It's pitiful against this Berserker but that's not to say that it doesn't have some kind of effect, it's clear that for all that the very shallow cuts that land are only fueling the rage that's consuming Berserker's rationality. Given that he's using short swords, he needs to keep rather close but it also means that Berserker needs to put some space between them in order to use his weapon, which is how they've moved from within his property onto the streets, Berserker pulling back and back as he advances again and again.

Then a bellow sounds and he rolls out of the path, getting to the left and side, he's quick to get in close at the back of Berserker and slashes into the back of the right let. He dimly acknowledges the voice that is young and commanding, a young girl from what he hears, as she yells at him while encouraging Berserker to keep on. He's already dashing back and leaps backwards without looking as Heracles summoned under the Class of Berserker is swinging his weapon in very quick succession while pursuing Shirou as the teen retreats backwards.

Sighing, he releases the two short swords in both physically and in dispelling them from this world. Focusing on pumping magic throughout his body so keep up with evading Berserker's attacks, Shirou mentally begins to considers the pros and cons of unleashing something that he's only been successful in recreating outside of the game, six out of ten times. Either way, it might be what I need right now.

"Draw the String, Aim the Wood, Release the Arrow!" As he leaps high into the air, [The Guardian's Bow] is quick to appear in his dominate hand. "Trace On." He murmurs, Projecting the same type of arrow he'd previously used just hours earlier when dealing with that Bandit Party.

In rapid succession, Berserker launches himself into the air while he fires the arrow, aimed for the bridge of the nose and between the eyes. He's already falling as the arrow hits and the giant of a man's grip on that weapon is gone. He's Projecting another of those arrows and firing it, this time at the left knee before he lands in a crouch. Another arrow getting Projected as he stands, he begins moving, this time heading for an alley as he fires the arrow at the same leg, more towards the ankle though.

Feeling secure in the knowledge that his last two shots will slow the giant Berserker down. He ignores the cries from that young girl as he slings the bow onto his back to free up his arms. Shirou is slightly surprised at how easily it remains Projected, typically when he's not using it the few times he's Projected this bow out of the game, it fades after a few seconds. Setting the matter of the bow to the side, the teen is busy scrambling over fences and racing down different streets as he heads back to his home as there's this sense of being watched that keeps him alert and fueling his body with magic to ready for any new surprising that this night can bring.

(= [- + T + -] =)

With Onii-chan's successful attacks on her Servant, Who knew that he was such a good shoot with a bow? Illya isn't sure if she should return to that house to kill her adopted brother or if she should abandon the rest of the night by returning home.

Looking at the scars that mar Berserker's arms, burn marks done by the one sword that sported a white aura and then at the slowly recovering left leg, particularly the knee, she finds it hard that Projected Constructs could cause such damage, let alone to Heracles under Mad Enhancement that comes with being Summoned under the Berserker Class. The exploding arrows does tickle something in the back of her mind but she's not in the mood to focus on that feeling.

No, she's a bit more concerned by Lancer, who's strutting into view with his crimson spear resting easily behind Lancer's head. The other Servant does a whistle as Berserker gets up and turns to face the blue clad Lancer, a deep growling. "Rather hasty, don't ya think? He doesn't seem to be part of this war, given he's had to deal with Berserker himself instead of calling on a Servant."

"Unless you think he's already been chosen as a Master, attacking that kid kind of goes against the usual rules." Adds Lancer as his crimson spear moves from its former position. Her eyes narrow in displeasure at being lectured about her business with Emiya Shirou.

"It's Family business." Illya states far more calmly then she actually feels. "Outsiders wouldn't understand it." She couldn't careless if Onii-chan did get chosen as a Master, she'll have her retribution on the stray her papa took in and under his wing, keeping him from her one way or another.

"What an interesting time to approach him about 'Family' business." Remarks Lancer as the other begins to do some stretches with a playful smirk, clearly taking his time as he does so. Giving Berserker time to claim his stone axe-sword. "Particularly given it's a touch over kill to involve a Servant, who's here for the Heaven's Feel, to act on your behalf."

"Then again, given the condition the kid left in... Maybe it wasn't." Lancer slightly mocks and Illya's eyes narrow as her anger and jealousy flares up within her. She is quick to keep said emotions from her face, plastering a bland, neutral look upon her face while forcing her shoulder muscles to relax, even though she knows what's about to happen.

Berserker pretty much gives voice to her inner emotions as the Servant takes his place between Lancer and his Master, which is Illyasviel von Einzbern. Heracles, who has been summoned as Berserker of this Holy Grail War is moving upon releasing an enraged bellow. Lancer is no longer standing at that spot and there's a ringing of metal.

It's hard for her to follow Lancer's movements and it's clear Berserker is capable of fending off the enemy Servant but also continues to serve as a buffer between Illya and Lancer. She suspects that Lancer is holding back, as the first minute goes by. Scouting. She reasons after a few minutes more as her Servant sends Lancer into a vending machine with a swing of the stone weapon.

As a street lamp gets pushed over as Lancer evades a blow from Berserker, a noise causes them to realize their time is up. There's sirens beginning to ring out in the night and all three of them turn in that direction. "Too bad, I was just getting my blood pumping." Remarks Lancer before the Servant seemingly vanishes.

Recovering after a few seconds, Illya states, "Let's go, Berserker." There's research to do. She mentally adds as the giant demi-god approaches her and then easily picks her up, they leave the street, heading back to the castle.

(= [- + T + -] =)

How troublesome. EMIYA thinks to himself as he watches the teen seemingly Project a bow and then an arrow. Try as he might to Trace that bow, all he gets is Error: Data Is Unavailable At This Time. Please Try Again At A Different Date .

"God damn troll." The Counter Guardian spats out under his breath. This has Zelretch's finger prints all over it. The current Archer of this Fifth Holy Grail War thinks as he watches as Emiya Shirou manages to get away from his encounter with Berserker and Illya without get hurt by either.

His focus is only on the red head teen that is an alternate version of himself. Getting a bit impressed by this version despite himself, EMIYA is self aware enough to know that if it had been a younger version of himself that had been attacked by Berserker and Illya, he'd be dead after getting toyed with by Illya using Heracles as her cat's paw. Not only did this version Project a pair of magical short swords but then that bow.

As the red head teen arrives back at his home, EMIYA glances back to where Berserker and Illya had been left behind. There's police cars milling about that spot and it looks like another Servant had confronted the Mad Servant. Either Rider or Lancer. He reasons as he suspects that Caster is doing her usual thing along with having summoned Assassin and having him play guard dog. Saber hasn't been summoned yet, he's not sure when she's going to get summon now either, given that Lancer is suppose to be the one to assault Shirou to finish the job of killing the witness and once bleeding, Saber would be summoned.

Events that he's use to happen don't seem to be flowing as he expects that they would, first Shirou didn't draw either Lancer's or his attention by witnessing their fighting at the school. Second is Lancer not killing said teen. Third, Rin not resurrecting said idiot teen. Sixth, idiot teen gets things explained to him by Rin.

Looks like I'm going to have to do some research and figure out how that Troll has been influencing this version. The Counter Guardian reasons as he does a quick scan of the city from his current perch before heading back to the manor that Rin is at, likely getting ready for bed or already in bed.

(= [- + T + -] =)

Applying that make up over the design on the back of his left hand, Shirou is sure to check that it's Alteration is still in effect. Satisfied, he puts the blush away and turn off his circuits before he fully leaves the bathroom. Not finding Sakura in the kitchen like usual, he searches and finds her staring at the patched up wall.

"Sakura?" He ventures to voice in a questioning manner. He'd spent a few hours last night, after a quick interview with the police, doing what he can to hide the damage and slapping up a hasty Alchemy base trap on the Bound Field's hole. Shirou already mentally figuring out what to do concerning increasing the magical defenses of his property and will by working on the issue once supper is done.

The younger teen seems to blink and then turns to regard him, her eyes seem intensely focus on his face before her eyes seem to travel downwards to his throat and all the way down to his slippers before her gaze returns to his face. "Did... something happen last night, senpai?" Sakura asks with her tone sporting an emotional undertone.

"Just a late night visitor." He admits as truthfully as he allows himself to be. "Seems that there had been some disturbance a few blocks from here too." The teen adds, hoping that she'll let the matter go, he doesn't like lying but his adopted father had been earnest about keeping magic a secret and what could happen if he doesn't do his part in maintaining that secret from others not in the know.

The look on Sakura's face seems to soften and the look in her eyes seem to firm up after a few seconds. With a firm nod, she says, "Hopefully it won't happen again."

With that, the purple haired teen heads back into the building. Shirou stares at her back, not really sure what to make of the emotions he witnessed upon Sakura's face, the resolve that finally won out within her gaze. With a lingering glance at the wall he patched up, the slightly older teen frowns slightly as he tries to puzzle out what she's resolved to do.

Looking away, he heads inside and heads for the kitchen, he finds Sakura already taking out a number of things from the fridge. It doesn't take more then a few seconds to pick up on what she wants to make for breakfast. And so, he brings out what they need to use to cook said ingredients.

The two fall into their usual step of cooking together, of not getting in each other's way. It's not long before Taiga arrives, a bit late and a touch annoyed about news of what happened not that far from here. It seems that someone caused the destruction of a street lamp and a crush vending machine, like someone got rammed into viva a vehicle slamming the person into it, only there's no blood or tire marks.

] ? ^ _ V _ ^ ? [

Shinji seems to be limping and also seems to be favoring his stomach area. Shirou couldn't find the other to inquire about what happened to him once school ended. The other hadn't even approached him to comment on his cleaning of the room as well.

He'd try to hunt down the other but he knows he has other things needed to be done, after all, he doesn't want a repeat of what happened last night to happen again. Thus, it's best that Shirou heads home and begins to see if he has what he needs to begin shoring up the Bound Field. Or see if anyone triggered that trap... He's specializes in making weapons using alchemy more then anything else.

While the skill is generally associated with making potions, it's more along the lines of transformation, of taking a number of things and blending them into something new from the sum of the things used. Technically, using alchemy, one can do the same with any kind of energy into another kind, well, if one considers the concept of the principles of the skill. At its base, it's relation to chemistry is very evident and it's how people in game created gun powder and smoke bombs. When it comes to utilizing alchemy on a truly magical energy level, you need to have the right material and array or ritual diagram to help funnel the energy into the steps that would transform it into whatever the alchemist wanted as the end result.

Since this isn't the game, his has limited means... until he realized that's not true. He had materials, and while not inherently magical, it was energy in the end. He also did have the means to create complex arrays, animated arrays as well, that could interact with the energy in more then a single direction, well, in a way. Which lead him to learning programing languages and looking into other means of generating electricity, like windmills and solar panels.

So yes, he's been creating magical batteries, created first from spent batteries but then to him using chemistry to grow crystals to be magical batteries. Sure, they get destroyed upon getting empty, returning to the ingredients that they were created from, but they also don't lose their energy like those spent and Altered acid batteries. Shirou's has plans for gadgets and machines that would use those crystal batteries but hasn't gotten around to making any of them due to the fact that he doesn't feel like they are needed, not when he has Projection that allows him to take those blue prints and Project said creations, sure, they're likely weaker then if he'd have physical examples to use Structure Analysis on, allowing him to see the flaws of said item and correct the blue prints accordingly.

Once he's home, he drops off his bag in his room and heads for the back. The trap is still there and nothing has triggered it. With a soft sigh of relief, he heads for the shed that also serves as his Workshop, as according to his adopted father, that's where Magi are suppose to do their research and experimentation in.

With a flip of the light switch, the shed's only light turns on. Shirou closes the door behind him as he walks around to take stock of the various crystal batteries that line the shelf. A few had fallen from the wall that faced where the hole got smashed in the wall around the property. With a slight shake of his head, he begins fixing the shelves that fell and putting the crystal batteries back on said shelves.

He cuts his left thumb on something, not that he noticed until one of the ridges of a crystal pokes the tender cut. As Shirou presses the two sides together, blood begins to well up. There's a tingling sensation at the back of his neck that intensifies until it's like his whole back is tingling with electricity. Then, as the teen turns to see what's behind him, a very thing line of red seems to weave through the air, up left, side right, up twice, right up...

Following the thin thread, he finds it's attached to the blood that's welling up from the cut. The thread get thicker as this previously unnoticed circle begins to glow blue and then red, as red as his blood. There's a number of threads now that seem to form a rope, the end frays and the rope's threads spread all around the circle that's now a bright white. As the red threads begin to unravel the rope, causing the threads to create an almost bulb that pulses in time with his heart beat.

The rope begins to fade, starting from the cut on his thumb and as the bulb fades, he gets his first glimpse of someone sporting blond hair. Seconds later, the person is fully revealed and it turns out to be a woman in blue clothing with metal plates sown upon the blue cloth. It suddenly seems very dark in the room and it's then that Shirou realizes that the light bulb had exploded and that the crystal batteries had been what had previously been lighting up the shed.

It takes the woman a few seconds to begin looking around and upon setting sights on Shirou, she seems to take in his appearance before addressing him while turning her whole body to face him, "I have but a single question." It's like she's holding a sword in her one hand. "Are you my Master?"

] ? ^ _ V _ ^ ? [

Letting out a soft sigh as it seems that Sakura couldn't make it this morning like she mentioned last night when she phoned to inform him that she won't be able to make it over to his place. Taiga had a teacher thing happening last night, concerns about fainting spells that have been going on throughout the city. Which meant that it had just been Saber and himself, getting familiar with one another along with Saber pretty much enjoying the supper he made.

Heading for the kitchen once the usual time that Sakura would arrive at the latest has passed, it's odd to see the lap top of his on the table in the dinning room but Saber is clearly reading everything she can about Broken Shackles of Strife and Strike. Something about the company name seemed to have given the blond Servant a start and she seems rather distrustful concerning the ARI System and the games released by the creators of the system. Saber is still rather tight lipped about her suspensions and concerns but given what happened with Berserker and that child from that previous night, he hasn't made use of the ARI System to play the game before bed like he intended to.

He rather not be logged into said game while there's that pair after his head, never mind the fact that someone had been watching that incident but hadn't interfered. Shirou is certain that someone had been watching him head home that night with someone also keeping Berserker and that young girl from pursuing him. Recalling the glimpses of that swordsman and the spearsman, the teen recalls that a classmate of his had also been on site of that battle as well.

"So... How many Servants are to be participating in this war?" He asks as he begins to prepare to make breakfast for the three of them, he's fairly sure that Taiga will be showing up. There's very little that can keep said woman from coming over to mooch food off of Sakura and his hard work.

"Seven Servants are summoned by seven chosen Masters." Saber answers after recovering from him addressing her and, perhaps, about the subject manner as well. "The Servant Classes are Archer, Assassin, Berserker, Caster, Lancer, Rider, and, of course, Saber."

As Shirou ponders the identity of the swordsman, he's fairly sure that the spearsman had to be Lancer. "I saw a pair of Servants fighting at my school." He admits to Saber as he continues to speak as he moves about the kitchen, it's feeling rather empty without Sakura cooking along side of him. "Lancer was a man in blue with a red lance while the other one sported two Chinese swords, one black and the other white."

"I see." States Saber, it's clear that she's considering this news. "Heracles has been summoned as Berserker... Did any of those weapons give you any idea of who either of them were?"

"Lancer's spear is Gae Bolg, which means that he's Cu Chulainn." Shirou reasons out with certainty. "The married blades though... Bakuya and Kanshou. Their legend isn't about being welded but how they were forged. I don't think there's anyone who's overly connected with them, the Servant didn't look Chinese either." It took a few seconds to recall the pair of swords that the Servant in red had used, mentally going over the history of the two for anyone who's well known for using them.

"And the one who used them didn't look to be the one who commissioned or created them?" Inquires Saber and he replies "The welder didn't look Chinese nor was he dress in a way that seemed to be of that country."

There's not much more said between them, so Shirou focuses a bit more on the task of making breakfast.

(= [- + T + -] =)

There's a lot that EMIYA regrets but right now, he's mainly regretting remembering that little fact about who it was that really summoned Rider. He's not sure how or the why of it, but it seemed that unlike how it usually goes, Sakura hadn't turned over control of Rider to Shinji. It's something that seemed to be a consistent course of events as Matou Zouken has Shinji participate in the war as Rider's Master, clearly whatever wrench that's affecting Shirou's life is also affecting Sakura's as well.

It's all Zelretch's fault! The current Archer thinks as he waits for Rider to take the bait. He can hear his Master is snipping with Illya as the pair work on getting out of the Bound Field that Sakura created.

Yes, Sakura set up the Bound Field and that's rather mind blowing. Clearly, Zelretch had done something concerning those games his game company created and released to cause such a massive change in Sakura's personality. It's rather embarrassing that Rin got taken under his nose last night, same, it seems, for Illya as well.

He'd freed Berserker from the room with an Enchanted bell gently ringing that seemed to keep the giant Servant out of it. The red clad Archer is trusting that the other would rampage and allow him to get at where Sakura is holding Rin and Illya. EMIYA isn't sure where Sakura is at this moment but he doubts she's gone to school. Even though it's the morning of a school day.

In the end, it's the cry of Shinji, What's he doing here?! That makes him realize that his hopes have been dashed.

He does his best to reframe from rubbing the bridge of his nose or his temples as it seems that he's going to have to engage in a fight with Rider. Projecting his favored swords, Kanshou and Bakuya, and leaps from his spot at the seemingly blind Servant. EMIYA isn't surprised at how swiftly Rider reacts to his sudden attack as she uses the chain of her weapon to redirect his two swords.

"I don't suppose you could kindly let my Master go?" The Counter Guardian inquires as he recovers as he takes a defensive position, edging to try and get behind her. In reply, Rider goes onto attempt to attack him with the knife portion of the weapon, even trying to wrap the chain around his legs to trip him up.

Once again, he curses Zelretch before going on to curse out the three Families that set up the Heaven's Feel in the first place and finally Avenger, cause he's got to have some hand in whatever is going on with Sakura.

(= [- + T + -] =)

There's no sign of Sakura, then again, there had been no sign of Shinji and Tohsaka attending as well. Having no reason to linger once school comes to an end, he heads home. It's not until he's home that he hears mention of a fire that happened around noon at the local church.

"There was a fire?" He asks Saber once the news cuts into a commercial. Shirou only caught the very tail end of the news concerning a fire.

"So it seems..." Murmurs the blond haired Servant. Walking over to where the lap top is, he finds a web page concerning said church along with the head priest, one Kotomine Kirei. There's other browser open behind this particular one, most of which seems to be about the fire that happened that caused him to lose his memories and to get adopted by his father.

Saber comes back into the room after turning off the TV. "Is something special about that fire that happened about ten years ago?" He asks curiously.

There's something that flickers across Saber's face that he doesn't identify the emotion before it's gone. "It was a magical fire, it was the result of Magi fighting among themselves." States Saber after a bit once she walks back to sit before the lap top.

Accepting this information with a nod, he moves to sit to her right as he considers how to go about asking about her conclusions concerning the ARI System and the involvement of Magi in it. He kind of wishes to see if he can't use it for a bit, later tonight. It had been a great help when it came to his understanding of Magecraft and training in it, particularly as it seemed that his father seemed to be very reluctant with training him.

Which might be due to the involvement of the CEO being a Magus himself. He realizes with a slight stiffening of his pose. That's rather contrary, isn't it? Kiritsugu said that they hoard all knowledge of magic and it's Arts...

"Kirei is one of the members of the Church that is in the know and he'd been involved in the fire." Saber tells him and Shirou is a touched surprised to hear that. "He's gone missing." The blond Servant adds.

"Sakura wasn't at school today. Neither was her brother and Tohsaka Rin." He admits to Saber and she frowns slightly upon hearing that.

"There is a place I wish to check out." Admits Saber after she blanks out her face from emotions that had been flickering across it. "I would like to go alone."

"I see." He admits with a frown. "It would be faster if you drove something there."

"I assure you, I am more then capable of driving anything there is within the city." Saber is quick to assure him rather readily. "My Riding Skill is B in Ranking." It's clear she's rather proud of that fact.

"I might be able to Project something for you to drive." He admits, the Crafting system of Broken Shackles of Strife and Strike is very boundless in what people could make, as long as they have the time and resources. There's been Challenges among Players of all stripes, everyone trying to figure out the limits of everything within the game. Some things proved easier then others due to hidden qualities of resources and if there's enough overlap in Skills that would increase the success of bringing 'life' to their visions. "I can't say how long it'll linger when I'm not within a certain radius."

He has participated in some of those Challenges, ignoring the Cooking ones on principle, he knows he's more then a descent cook, bit it out of game and in game as well. Creating custom weapons and armor had been very interesting, particularly when he reframed from getting help from those Spell casting Classes, relying only on Alchemy. The odds of the result being Enchanted had been low but oh so satisfying when he managed it thrice in a row.

"It'll likely be motorcycle." He adds, out of the various vehicles he's crafted within the game, he's pretty sure that there's only three that he had designed that wouldn't draw the attention of the unaware public. Two of which had Enchantments towards being invisible along with sound muffling Enchantments, although the degree of said sound muffling various between the two along with the weather. One was a flying vehicle that's only good for short distances before it would need to be refueled and the other being something akin to a RV, a mobile house that he'd sold about ten million gold, give a few extra hundred thousand of gold concerning the various Enchantments it came with.

Given the amount of time and resources that went into the RV styled vehicle, it likely would be more like a hundred million gold but it had been a passion project for him. Just creating the plans, the parts, and putting it all together had been satisfying enough on its own. He'd likely would have just disassembled it after the novelty had worn off, so the sale of it hadn't really affected him all that much. After all, it had been far too Enchanted to be shrunk safely to be stored away in the Inventory.

It's hardly the only vehicle he's made that got sold to others, in fact, RouShik has a bit of fame as a craftsman when it came to in game armor and Alchemy created products besides just the usual, common potions and one time use cosmetic consumables that were merely temporary. He's sold recipes for permanent cosmetic consumables and created the [Enchanted Body Ink] that could be used to write spells on a person's body like one would create a [Spell Scroll] . Losing a single point of health and the ink vanishing when the spell is cast was a very minor trade off to being able to have a spell that wasn't tied up to a bit of equipment.

It's one of the reasons he's hidden his Character's name when he's playing as it's easier to ignore written requests then when people hunt him down to make such requests in person. There's always some reason for others to seek him out and while some of the commissions were interesting enough to tempt him, generally, Shirou prefers to do Quests and Dungeon runs then spend so much of his playing hours crafting commissions or selling thing's he's created. It's just fortunate happenstance that his in game Alchemy Skill proved to be able to translate into real world Alchemy, never mind learning that any of swords he created in game were ones he can Project using his Magecraft, it took a bit longer to figure out how to Project other items that he had created in game, though when it came to the bow, that was always tricky and, in the end, he found that focusing on the binding to be the key to Projecting that bow, even if he's unable to do so perfectly most of the time.

It's hardly surprising that his thoughts had wandered away from him and so, his feet had taken him out into the back of the yard, standing just before the shed door. Reaching out, he twists the knob and enters into the small building with Saber a few steps behind him, closing the door. Scanning through the various crystals, he picks out a good twelve that he'll use to help with the Projecting.

Taking them off their respective shelves, he kind of piles them on the ground, in a random spot. "Trace on." The red haired teenager states in his usual manner and there's a slight surge as his Magic Circuits come alive then a hum as power flows through them.

Standing with the pile of crystals to his left and then extends both hands, his left over the pile of battery crystals and his right has his fingers held up with his palmed aimed at the spot he wishes to Project the bike at on the floor. "From the Earth thee came, Refined through the Flames of the Smelter, thou was Shaped by My Hand by means of Will and Arcane, I call thee forth once more." He chants out as memories of the work he put into making this particularity motorcycle plays out in the back of his mind along with the list of materials he used plus the time spent putting it all together once everything had been forged. "[Crafted Mount: The Shimmering Wraith]!"

As his magic flows out of his right hand, he pulls the magic stored in the crystals into himself with his left. The motorcycle is the one with the stealth Enchantment and it's outline of its 'skeleton' frame begins to solidify at the spot he's holding his right hand at. Soon enough, the frame fills as the motor, armor plating, seat, and such begin to get hinted at before shimmering into existence. The crystals are gone with their lay load spent and the motorcycle is no longer alight with a magical aura.

Lowering his left hand as his fingers of his right hand curl up, he's done his best to keep control over his breathing but Projecting [Crafted Mount: The Shimmering Wraith] had been a touch more difficult then when he'd Projected to previous motorcycles that he'd created in game. But then, none of them sported the same number of Enchantments as this one nor did they need to exist longer then a few minutes, just to ensure that I could Project such things. He reminds himself as he begins to rub his right wrist once he brought it to his chest as he eyes the motorcycle with a critical eye.

Saber approaches the motorcycle and it takes a bit of time before she touches the handle bar and leans over the seat. "How?" There's clear emotion in that simple question.

"I've found that I'm able to Project things I've made in game in the real world." He admits. "The swords come into existence faster then the other weapons. Small things like arrows or watches can vary, still, by their smaller size, are faster then a shield or an axe. Armor can take up to a minute if I'm Projecting it onto my own body."

"I've Projected two motorcycles before this but only for them to last five minutes. They were more proof of concept then because I had a use for them at that time." He continues. "If it weren't for the crystals, I think it would have taken longer, particularly given we need it to exist for a few hours."

"Still might be a good idea to put a few crystals into the tank before you ride it though." He admits as Saber settles onto the motorcycle properly, the engine and displays coming alive a few seconds later.

There's a soft look on Saber's face as she gets its engine to roar before she sets it back on its kick stand and get off, the engine and displays die down.

"I best head back to get started on supper. I think Taiga might show up for dinner tonight." Shirou replies as he begins to head out of the shed.

(= [- + T + -] =)

It took a lot of effort on her part but things concerning the Heaven's Feel are very much under her control. And it's all thanks to a Magician's game company proving to be able to subconsciously teach those with talent in Magecraft into harnessing Magic viva symbiotic sympathy between a digital representation and the actual person. Sakura muses as she approaches the current location of where Caster is held up.

She remembers the first time she used the ARI System and, of course, Matou Zouken's quick spiral into insanity with the loss of his Soul, which he'd 'entrusted' inside of her. It had been very satisfying upon coming to research and accept what that Worm had gone through for his pursue of immortality, trying with all his mind to put off his death. Separation of Body, Mind, and Soul had been tried before and it always caused a kind of degradation on the user. Sacrificing the Body might have bought the Worm some decades, maybe even a century, but the cost to both the Mind and Soul for the lack of natural bridge between them caused changes within the user, changes that weren't going to be temporary by any means.

Did binding himself to those parasites hasten his degradation of his Soul? Why not just commission or create a Homunculus body to house his Soul and Mind in? One created using material from the discarded Body? The Master of Rider wonders, it's hardly the first time she's mused over the situation concerning the Worm that was the decayed being of the one who was once Zolgen Makiri.

The sight of the gates that lead to her destination can be seen more easily. Sakura's thoughts discard the well worn mental musings of her previous abuser to re-consider her various approaches to Caster and to Assassin. She's unsure if the two Masters have an alliance or if Caster found a way to transfer the Command Seals from Assassin's former Master like what Father Kotomine had done concerning Lancer's former Master.

Well, there's only one way to find out, isn't there? She mentally muses before coming to a stop. "I wish to speak with the Caster of this Holy Grail War. Would you mind passing along my intentions?" She calls out.

"I believe I have an interesting gift that might peak her interest." She admits after a few minutes and Assassin doesn't appear. Moving the bag she's brought, she takes out the boxes and places them on the ground, one by one, including a wireless headset.

"They might not look like much, but I am sure that Caster can figure out just why the system and the games are of interest." She states. "I'll be going. I'm sure that you have means to contact me." With a polite bow, she turns and leaves, Rider follows after a few seconds later.

As she catches sight of the dimly lit moon, she can't help but scuff at this so called Holy War, particularly after what the Einzbern pulled during the Third incarnation of this 'Grand' Ritual. "Introducing an unknown element... What stupidity." Particularly given that they're suppose to be the best Alchemists alive.

Putting the matter of Avenger's lingering presence out of her mind, Sakura considers how she's going to approach her beloved Senpai concerning the War. She's certain that once he's been told about what lurks within the Grail, he'd be willing to put the War aside and if the Saber he had summoned was the decent sort of Hero, they likely would agree that purging Avenger and putting a end of the War would be for the best for the world.

What was once tainted... The memory of the taint would only linger, long after you scrub it clean.

The End

Author's Note:

Ok, sorry about the late update but real life happened, besides Canadian Turkey Day (AKA Thanksgiving). My mother works at one of the Crown Companies that went on Strike in the province early this month, so, that was fun... Never mind upcoming Elections...

So then, it was a matter of how to write up the War only to realize that I didn't feel like coming up with a bunch of battle scene. So, I went a different angle that likely does follow one of the routes of the game but not doggedly, cause using the ARI System does have beneficial effects on the user, particularly when the user is magic capable!

Yes, this does relate to that previous story where I made use of the ARI System and Broken Shackles of Strife and Strike.

FYI, I totally couldn't fully decide on a good name for the motorcycle that I was having Shirou Project, for a bit, it was The Pale Wraith or something like that.

And yea, I couldn't really think of a better way to end it then having Sakura trying to reach out to Caster by getting her interested in the ARI System. I had known Caster would be very interested in said system, so much so that she'd accept a Peace Agreement just so she can fiddle around with this very interesting device and the potential solution about her situation in peace, without worrying about completing a Mystical Ritual that's become Tainted by the Element known as Avenger.

Also, Happy Late Thanksgiving my fellow Canadians and Happy Early Thanksgiving to those south of the boarder!

Broken Shackles of Reality Epilogue:Fate

I don't own Fate/Stay night!

The events of the Fifth Holy Grail War were kept under wraps this month viva blackmail, bribes, pulling in favors, and, of course the old classic of threats. It wouldn't do for the technophobile that is rampant among the various social tiers of the Magus to flair up and disrupt his experiment in the name of their preserving their pursuit of the Root. Few members of the Church seem incline to interfere with this experiment and, given the nature of his fellow Dead Apostles Ancestors, it's been flying under their radar as well.

Staring out of the office window of the headquarters of Kaleidoscopic Workshop in LA. Kischur Zelretch Schweinorg, mostly called Zelretch, finds the view to be rather picturesque as he stands before the window with an empty wine glass in his right hand. Behind him is a number of computer monitors that sport four profiles, the fourth one is the latest one and belongs to a certain Witch of Betrayal. It's rather interesting development, the fourth one, given he doubted that Caster of this current Heaven's Feel came across the potential of the game system and games on her own.

Given that out of the previous three, only one had been active since she summoned a Servant, Rider in fact. Illyasviel von Einzbern had stopped playing a good four months before the tainted Grail flared up more prominently and picked out four other Masters. It's a question of how long young Sakura has been planning to put an end to the total of the Heaven's Feel, hm? He muses.

There's a bit of a timeline that's been recorded viva server activity and, of course, the purchases of that system, wireless headset, and games. Then there's the reports of a destroyed lamp post and vending machine along with the fire set to a certain church, where the investigators are keeping quiet about the child bodies in the wine cellar of said church, never mind the statue that the priest commissioned of himself. It's a question of what happened to the King of Heroes though.

Things have resolved themselves in a rather quick manner, all things considered when one considered certain personalities involved. Zelretch muses to himself as he turns his back on the window and walks over to the open bottle of wine to pour himself a bit more to celebrate such a positive development. Upon walking back to his desk, it seems that not only has the Einzbern logged into the game, but also that she'd been joined by the other two plus four new others.

Three are Servants and the fourth is the Tohsaka Heiress. Wood Elf for Rider, golden scaled Dragonborn for Saber, and Archer's Character Race is that of a Black Dragon... It takes him a few minutes to investigate why the Counter Guardian is able to even pick that Race. Finding the answer, he lets out a snort of amusement, one Emiya is a Silver and the alternate Emiya is a Black... Or should it be black and white?

"No point in fixing it either, it's not like this version of the game is going to be active much longer..." He mutters out loud to himself with a glance to the calendar, which shows there's going to be twenty four hours before the game Broken Shackles of Strife and Strike shuts down its servers, give or take an hour and half. Thus, he easily puts the information windows away, he checks to see what the Tohsaka girl's first character was and is rather disappointed that she stuck to Human, never mind the Class that got chosen was Wizard. The three Servants forwent picking actual Classes, picking the Free Form Style, not getting boxed into the safety that picking Classes bring.

He does mark the latest three Servant's character to be available for the transfer into Remnants of the Shattered Era, the game that's his version of a sequel to the modified version of the aforementioned game. After all, the true owners of the system and certain titles for said game system have finished gathering the desired information about this world and have given him warning about how the original version is getting withdrawn when they leave, which means that the modified version won't function like it should.

Hence the need for a new title to carry on that game's legacy. Zelretch had plenty of time to study the fundamentals of said title and the other ones, those that he chose not to pick to 'develop' for sale. There's likely going to be some twitching, he admits, but the secondary function should work just find, might even be a touch better, without the primary function taking priority.

The ARI System that's been created to function in this world remains untouched with the departure. Same goes for certain titles that his company created. The loss of those titles he didn't chose weren't a big loss either, as he's the only one who had access to them.

With a sigh at the sound of a pager buzzing, Zelretch prepares to head back to the Clock Tower, which will take him but seconds for him to arrive there.

(= [- + T + -] =)

Plenty of worlds.

Plenty of ways to see change ripple about in the lives of various inhabitants.

Time is nothing for them. Never mind space.

It's just a matter of picking the next 'Nexus' point of another 'branch' of reality.

It's a matter of which of the selection they should offer.

How strong is the Milestones of a reality compared to chaotic forces that is Free Will?

Which 'Nexus' are they going to influence next?

The End

Author Note: Here's the Epilogue for this story and also, Happy Halloween! This chapter took a while due to trying to figure out how best to end this. The portion after Zelretch almost became game oriented for the Remnants of a Shattered Era, which was the sequel game to Broken Shackles of Strife and Strike.

I'll say this about it, it would have been eight months after Broken Shackles shuts down and upon logging into the game, everyone save for Rin's Characters have been moved, given that RouShik, ViteLite, and VonIllya have used the Reincarnated system at least twice and with them managing to be Level 10, three day countdown to change their equipment, their Skills being only two Tier Ranks, certain Perks are gone or been redone, a large sum of money plus empty Inventory, and the keeping of said Unique Items, namely the Mount and the Bow.

Changes to Archer and Shirou's Characters would be the size of their Dragon Characters, with Archer's ShikRou being the largest at being on the larger size for a medium size dog and Shirou's RouShik being the size of a normal size house cat. (Yes, Archer thought it a fun poke at Shirou's Naming sense.) Them still being a Black Dragon and Silver Dragon respectively.

Changes to the game itself have to do with the Messenger function in game and with most of the Characters not spawning at the same continent. Certain Characters spawned at the same location, giving a buddy feel due to what their Character's Race was.

So, it was likely just a lot of in game PoVs and mentions of changes since the end of the Fifth Holy Grail War. Nothing that none of you couldn't think up on your own, more then likely.

Flame Cultivation: KHR!

I don't own Kateyou Hitman Reborn.

- { [X I X] } -

With Aki No Sora at his hip, Tsunayoshi walks out of the Spirit Bones Cavern and is thankful that it's a night sky that greets him. The stars are gentle on his eyes and the rogue Cultivator stretches his shoulders for a bit before glancing around the location. He'd been twelve years old when he'd enter into this particular spirit rich location, it's well known that few if anyone who enters it to Cultivate ever exit.

He'd entered fully expecting his remains to join the numerous bones that make up the floor of the vast cavern system, it's how this location got its name after all. A nameless sword, several Cultivation Manuals (only two of which provided any helpful advice on how to Cultivate), a single set of too large kimono in black, and two years worth of Food Pills in a cheap Qiankun Pouch. Tsunayoshi's Cultivation can't advance further by staying in the Spirit Bones Cavern, leaving him to leave the place that he believed to be his tomb only for it to become a safe refuge from the world.

He's got no money to his name, having spent it first on funeral arrangements and then a month of living at his birth village. They villagers had been more then happy to see the back of him and he couldn't find it in himself to care what became of him. Which lead to said questionable merchant and being easily convinced to purchase said items in the first place along with the location of a spot to begin Cultivating. He mentally admits as he begins to walk away from entrance.

Try as he may, he doesn't rightly recall what had been the date he'd entered. His feet are bare but Tsunayoshi hardly feels the chill of the rocks nor the bumps of the pebbles, he's grown use to walking around barefoot. His unruly long hair is tied up with a strip of cloth from his old clothing, a simple ponytail while his bangs he keeps moving off of his face, he use to use Aki No Sora to shave off said bangs... Then the sword refused to be used that way, which was how they began their dialog with one another, once he accepted that the sword had transformed into a Spirit Sword from all the time he'd channeled energy into it.

Who put that Spirit Seal on me? Tsunayoshi wonders to himself as he takes in the sounds of the field once he's further down the mountain path and walking away from the mountain that houses the Spirit Bones Cavern. Once out of those Food Pills, he'd been far too close to starving to death and due to the nature of the Spirit Bones Cavern, he either exits with a Spirit Core or he doesn't exit at all. "I can't believe I mustered up the will to live..." His voice is but a whisper, the sound of it is still rather strange to his ears, it's a lot deeper then it once been.

The world seems to have either gotten smaller or he'd grown taller then he expected. "I wonder if I will recognize my own face?" Tsunayoshi wonders out loud to the starry night.

There's no answer but the rogue Cultivator hardly expected one, after all, Aki No Sora is slumbering and he can hear the Sword Spirit's gentle snorts in the back of his head. Placing a hand on the hilt and stroking the pummel of the Sword Spirit. He's awarded with a sigh of contentment and a feeling of getting pulled closer to Aki No Sora. He doesn't bother to keep a wide smile from his face and he picks up his pace, he has a mirror to find after all.

With Aki No Sora in a defensive pose, the incoming blow of the masked child doesn't budge either himself or the sword in his hands. While he's untrained in a formal style of using a sword, he's done his best to practice to grow comfortable with welding a sword, it was do that, read, or try to meditate. After all, falling into depression was something he'd been trying to break himself of doing back then and once the Spirit Seal had been destroyed and it's remains burned up with his own Spirit Energy, he found it so much easier to keep his thoughts spiraling downward as they once did into depression.

The twin wooden weapons move into a protective grip that cover the child's forearms as the child seems to growl. It's likely one of the reasons why the locals think this child is demonic, there's no way that a normal human child could make that kind of sound. That's what they said about my screeching, once upon a time. Tsunayoshi mentally admits to himself.

He's unsure of the age of the child in question, he's not really sure if the gender is truly male, but he's incline to peg this child as male. The mask is that of a crow or raven while the child's kimono is a ratty with rips and tears, it had been gray in color once, maybe even white. The wooden weapons seem to in better condition then the child's kimono and the mask doesn't seem to see the touch of age upon it.

"Are you certain we can not come to some peaceful resolution?" Tsunayoshi asks for a second time since he met this masked menace, which had been less then ten minutes ago. He done his best to keep on the defensive, not fully trusting in his ability to attack with Aki No Sora.

"Herbivore..." Oh, so they are capable of speaking. Tsunayoshi mentally muses as he goes moves into another defensive stance and keeps the child before him as the masked child tries to circle around him, trying the other direction while also in a defensive pose.

Following the urging of Aki No Sora, he manages to block the next flurry of blows that he hadn't fully been expecting. Tsunayoshi trusts the Sword Spirit and knows that their relationship is strong. There's no doubt about following the lead of the Sword Spirit, he trusts that the Sword Spirit knows its business when it comes to being used.

So, he doesn't overly react when he has the tip of Aki No Sora pointed at the now exposed throat of the masked child. From his bond with Aki No Sora, he knows that the Sword Spirit is very satisfied with this outcome. "I believe a point has been made. Please lower your weapons." He states as calmly and collectively has he can while staring unflinchingly into gray blue eyes...

Where did the mask go? The rogue Cultivator wonders and it seems that the child seems to realize that the mask is gone as well. The child huffs but the wooden weapons are put away and he allows the boy to take a step backwards.

With that, he sheaths Aki No Sora and introduces himself, "I am Tsunayoshi." He does a polite bow and upon coming up find that the child is recovering from him bowing.

"Hibari Kyoya." The boy states with a huff and the child looks away from him, arms crossing over the chest. The body turns away from him and he glances around in search of the mask but doesn't find it on the ground.

"Might I inquire why Hibari-sama was attacking travelers upon this road?" He asks politely, he's been out of the Spirit Bones Cavern for two years now and he's still trying to come to grips dealing with other people, it's not just that he's rusty, it's just that he's never figured out why anyone other then his mother seemed to see him as trash. Being a rogue Cultivator isn't easy but it's better then what could have happened to him, Like getting captured and sold to a brothel as a male prostitute.

Hibari-kun doesn't seem to be willing to answer his question. The fact that the child has a Clan name could mean anything at this point. "Was it related to the mask that you were wearing, Hibari-sama?" There's a slight stiffening at the mention of the mask in the shoulders but the child clearly wasn't going to cooperate and, well, he had heard of a Night Hunt taking place near here. He rather wishes to participate to earn funds to purchase a bestiary or two to better know how to defeat either Spiritual Beasts or Demonic Monsters along which which parts he can sell.

Watching the way the child acts, he takes a moment to look at the sun's position. "If you need an escort home, I can lend myself to that after tonight's Night Hunt." He tells the child, although it seems that the topic of Night Hunt perks the child's interest.

"Where?" Demands the child and Tsunayoshi gets this odd feeling that there's going to be a lot of this in his near future.

"Kyoya-kun." Tsunayoshi looks up to find Hibari-kun glaring heatedly at someone who is clearly shares similar features with the ten year old, it took months to get the boy's age from him and only got it due to his Birthday had been the next day. "I see you are maskless." There's a hint of mild interest in that tone.

Then the elder relative turns to regard Tsunayoshi and he notices that instead of the gray blue eyes of Hibari-kun, this man's eyes are hazel gold. The other's hair is far longer then Hibari-kun's and is braided. There's no weapon at the man's side nor does the cloths look to be common in quality. Silk? He wonders to himself.

"I'm Lan Fon." The other introduces himself, giving a minor bow. He gets to his feet and introduces himself before returning the bow, although without the fist in the palm of the other hand. "Tsunayoshi."

"So, you are the one to defeat my grandnephew." Comments Lan-san as the other gestures for him to sit down once again, joining him at the table while Hibari-kun remains at his own table, doing his best to ignore them both. "Grandnephew?"

There's a slight uptake of a smile as the other hums in confirmation. Given how young he looks... "I take it you are a Cultivator?" He inquires curiously and is awarded with another positive hum.

"The same for yourself, I would say." Comments Lan-san and he nods in agreement. The other's eyes flickering towards Aki No Sora, which rests beside him, the Sword Spirit is currently slumbering before returning to his face.

He's not sure what to say about the fact that Hibari-kun has been in his company for these pass five months. It's not like I haven't tried to get the location of his family from him. It'll sound like I'm putting the blame totally on him... Though if someone would just stop being intimidated by him when they're trying to give me information needed to return him to his parents... That's not much better... He mentally admits to himself.

"Well you be returning Hibari-kun to his parents?" He finally asks after a waiter arrives with a pot of tea for Lan-san to drink. "He's been rather tip lipped about where his home is." Tsunayoshi admits, it's not like he's got much pride to deal with. Plus, he should know his grandnephew well enough to know what kind of behavior the kid engages in, right?

"You know his name?" There's a touch of surprise and he notices out of the corner of his eye that Hibari-kun bristles at the tone. "He told me after I introduced myself." He admits and the smile seem more genuine then before.

"Omnivore..." Hibari-kun growls in a warning tone and he doesn't acknowledge it. "I only learnt his age two weeks ago and the day before his tenth Birthday at that." He informs Lan-san and the other glances towards Hibari-kun with clear interest while he feels Hibari-kun glaring at the side of his face.

"Omnivore, huh?" Lan-san muses and there seems to be more interest in those hazel eyes then before. "Perhaps you won't mind if we have a spar?" Inquires the other adult and he merely inclines his head in agreement, unsure if he's done the right thing by agreeing, but then, Aki No Sora should be happy with him sparring with someone new, right?

[TT_TT]

"You should head home, your parents are worried." He informs his grandnephew while Tsunayoshi is off bathing after their spar. Kyoyachan merely glares at him, which only makes Fon mentally coo at the adorable expression on the child's face.

"It's been nearing four years since you put on the Tengu Mask." He states calmly. "Politics have changed since then and others have looked else where for a Cloud as a Cultivation Partner." The Storm Cultivator informs the child.

The tension in Kyoya-chan's shoulder lighten up and he is very thankful that Tsunayoshi had managed to defeat his cute grandnephew as he wouldn't see Kyoya-chan's face for another six years, at which point he'd be sixteen years old and thus, a young adult. Tracking down his grandnephew had been slightly hard given the time between sightings of the 'Demon' child, it had been trying to find information concerning the young man who defeated Kyoya-chan that proved harder to come by as none have claimed to have mentored him nor knew of him beyond his sudden appearance coming to be three years ago as a rogue Cultivator. For someone able to cultivate a Sword Spirit and create a Spirit Core, he's skills are rather basic, likely self taught from a Cultivation Manual.

Throughout the spar, Tsunayoshi's eyes remain their hazel color, not a flicker of other color bleeding into those brown hazel eyes. The other had stuck to defending for most of the spar and it took some time to finally press the other into counter attacking. Throughout that counter attack from Tsunayoshi, he could see that the other had plenty of potential. Aki No Sora. He isn't sure what to make of the name, particularly the Sky portion of the name, in some way, it's a taunt and in others, it's a poorly made joke. After all, only certain families were allowed to use sora when it comes to naming their swords, cultivating them into Sword Spirits.

It's too late to get him to change the name. Fon mentally admits as Tsunayoshi comes walking back to the spot in a different kimono, this one is brown when the first had been a dark blue, while carrying his sword with his right hand. The long hair isn't bound up in a simple ponytail and it's still a bit wet, not as wet as he expects but assumes that the rogue Cultivator likely used some Spirit Energy to dry it a bit faster.

So much potential... Fon can't help but mourn that it's only a matter of time before Tsunayoshi winds up on the butt end of Sect and Clan Politics. For the over a hundred years, there's been fighting over the vacancy left behind when the last bloodline heir of the Globally powerful Vongola Clan died and the fourth son turned out to be the adopted son instead of the actual bastard son. There had been a search for an heir, a descendant of the founder of the Clan, but, rumor has it the kid died with his mother during a Demonic Monster attack of their village, here in Japan surprisingly enough.

When the head of the Clan finally died, everyone expected that the world would come to an end due to the Spiritual Treasures, a set of Rings, having not been passed along to a blood relative. The world didn't end as it seems that the Treasures didn't up hold life on this world but it was some ancient system that held back another set of Spiritual Inheritance of another seven Flames. The Immortal that had been dead set in keeping said ancient system alive had been devastated over the revelation and had entered seclusion.

And so, with a vacant power gap of the Vongola Clan left behind the various Clans and some Sects have been jockeying for the position of who's to fill that gap. The Vongola Clan had fractured into small families without a clear family head to keep them united. The adopted son is still alive and had taken over a Demonic Sect called Varia, it specializes in assassinations, who many have tried to get support from in their efforts of claiming that vacant throne.

Of course they have different practices and traditions. Fon recalls, not that he pays much mind to the Countries besides China and Japan. He's sure they use other names in place of Sects and Clans, the only thing that unites them have been Soul Fire and an incline to kept the knowledge from the general public. Spirit Energy was something all possess but few had the potential to reach beyond that pool of energy to touch upon Soul Fire, fewer still had, once upon a time, been able to fully harness their Soul Fire.

Times have changed. He muses as he watches as Kyoya-chan and Tsunayoshi interact, his cute grandnephew seem to be getting the younger Cultivator to make his favorite for supper. The brunet seems to be getting Kyoya-chan to ask instead of just giving an order and expecting him to do it. It's clear that Tsunayoshi is highly familiar with his grandnephew's anti-social behavior but stands firm instead of giving way despite the murderous glare from Kyoya-chan.

He can only guess at the reactions his in-laws would have about how Tsunayoshi treats Kyoya-chan but they should also know that if Kyoya-chan wanted to, the Cloud would have long since departed from the Cultivator's company. It says a lot about Kyoya-chan's feelings on the matter that he's still with Tunayoshi for so long. Going to be half a year. Fon muses to himself.

His gaze goes towards the sword and it's hard to control his jealousy over the successful cultivation of said weapon. It's hard for those who burn with Soul Fire through their Spirit Pathways to cultivate weapons to house their own Spirits. Skies and Mists had it the easiest due to their properties. Mist is likely Kyoya's secondary. The Cultivator thinks to himself, the clue is that the pair of wooden tonfa seem to be the same pair that the child took off with upon putting the Tengu Mask on.

He had brought a pair of metal ones for Kyoya-chan, a Birthday gift, but he'll admit, he got distracted by the Cultivator that Kyoya-chan is keeping company of. He's also here to bring Kyoya-chan back to his parent's home to continue with his studies, once more trying to round out the child's knowledge and interests. Japanese Cultivators are different then Chinese Cultivators but they do share certain values when it comes to the pursuit of Cultivating Spirit Energy, namely prowess on the battlefield and, to a degree, capacity in pursuits outside of the Martial Arts, although that's where the differences ultimately lie, for example Chinese Cultivators prize Musical Art highly while Japanese Cultivators prize their Tea Ceremonies.

Subjects that Kyoya ultimately holds in disdain... The Storm reminds himself.

[TT_TT]

It's like overnight, he's become a teenager. Tsunayoshi muses to himself as he notices just how much taller Kyoya has become in the years he's known the formerly surly child, now an unruly teenager. Hard to believe, three years... Where has the time gone? The brunet wonders to himself as Kyoya is clearly getting annoyed with the child that's chatting with him.

Soon enough, Kyoya catches sight of Tsunayoshi and something softens within the younger Cultivator's stance but particularly in the teen's eyes at the sight of him. It's been long since made clear that Kyoya is fond of him, mostly by those who saw Kyoya grown from a babe to a toddler and then into a six year old who put on a Spirit Treasure called Tengu Mask just to get out of some kind of political arrangement. Nobody ever expanded on what kind of arrangement it had been but he doubts it was a marriage arrangement, given how the whole matter got dropped upon the use of the Tengu Mask, which would have dropped off of Kyoya's face after ten years had passed if none defeated the child.

"Omnivore." Greets the thirteen year old, it's only been two months since he'd been on a mission that lead him into one of the cousin realms, namely the Spirit World. While the matter isn't resolved, there wasn't any new developments in it either. Which is how he's been returned to the Human Realm, Nagi promised to bring him news if the matter looks like it's able to be unraveled, the young half kitsune did owe him and thus, there's a tie between them, started off due to a life debt but has become something like a friendship.

"Kyoya-kun." He returns with an easy smile as he gives the higher stationed youth a polite bow along with said greeting. The other huffs, but he is a rogue Cultivator and without a Clan, he's low on the social scale. There's little in way of connections between himself, Clans, and Sects, which means he doesn't have much weight in political matters in the social circle he is associated with.

"Oh? He's not a herbivore?" The younger boy inquires and he gets a view of the Mon upon the kimono. There's a lot of curiosity in the boy's eyes but there's also something...

Kyoya glares at the child but the boy merely goes through the actions of being affected by such a look. "I am Tsunayoshi, I often serve as Kyoya-kun's bodyguard." He introduces himself, bowing respectfully.

"Ah, Yamamoto Takeshi, member of the Asari Clan." The boy introduces himself after a few seconds to recovering from the idea that Kyoya likely needed or wanted a bodyguard. "I didn't think Hibari-kun would ever need a bodyguard! You must be impressive if he hasn't chased you off yet!"

There's a clear glint in Yamamoto-kun's eyes, particularly as they flicker to Aki No Sora that's resting at his hip. Kyoya moves to stand between them in a very deliberate and threatening manner. It's clear that Kyoya doesn't like Yamamoto-kun's manners towards him.

"Kyoya-kun seems content with my company." He replies in a calm and mild manner with a polite look upon his face as he brings his hands together in the front. "It was nice to meet you, Yamamoto-kun." He states before turning and beginning to walk away from the Arts Academy, they had the whole day to spend together and he doubts that Kyoya would want to spend any more time in the shadow of the Arts Academy.

Once they are safe enough away, he slows down before coming to a stop, giving Kyoya the opportunity to take the lead. The other does so without halting and he follows in the teen's wake. It's clear that Kyoya's mood is sour rather then foul. Once they arrived at a tea house, he gets them a private room. Then, once lead there, he takes out a number of security Spells and places them about to ensure their privacy.

Their order of tea and snacks arrives, once they are alone again, he begins to speak of the events of the mission that lead to time in the Spirit World. Kyoya is content to listen and to drink some of the tea. There's often reactions from the teen at certain points, there's rarely a comment voiced throughout the telling. "Cowardly Scavengers." Rules Kyoya sometime after he's finished recounting said events and happenings.

He can only merely hum, the foreign had been rather cowardly by Kyoya's standards but over all, they had been smart to tactically retreat in the end. Although that doesn't explain how they found their way into the Spirit World in the first place. Tsunayoshi muses to himself. "It was just ill luck on their part that the portal hadn't closed fast enough for me to not follow after them." He states. "Though, I didn't know what kind of Cultivation they practice to cause such effects with mere wood."

"Not Cultivation." Kyoya informs him. "Witchcraft."

He blinks a few times at the statement. "Witchcraft?" He repeats, yes, there's something about the whole matter that did bug him, he just didn't know why it did.

"Witchcraft uses wood as their medium and they call those lights spells." Explains Kyoya. "Their practices do no yield them youthful, powerful bodies like our practice of Cultivation does but they do gain the ability to warp the world around them instead. Lazy herbivores." The teen states with a snort of derision.

"That explains the exploding head." He murmurs as he recalls throwing a punch at one of the Witches' heads and watched as the head just shattered into a bloody, fleshy mess. There's a slight blood thirsty smirk on the teen's face as Kyoya seems to hums in a very pleased fashion upon hearing that little detail. "They're teaching about foreign practices at the Arts Academy?" Tsunayoshi inquires once he gets more tea for them to drink.

Kyoya merely gives a simple grunt and he kind of wishes to ask if he couldn't borrow the teen's notes concerning Witchcraft and the Witches. Then again, Kyoya might not have bothered with writing anything down. He muses to himself. Tsunayoshi wishes to know more about this foreign practice, he also wants to pass along information about Nagi's dark blue Spirit Energy. Never mind my own orange fire like Spirit Energy... Tsunayoshi reminds himself.

A comfortable silence settles between them and they enjoy the tea plus snacks. By third pot of tea, Kyoya is ready to leave and they settle their bill before they leave. After returning to the Arts Academy, they spend some time in one of the Dojos sparring against one another, hand to hand instead of them using their respective weapons. They get cleaned up before grabbing something to eat at the Arts Academy's Food Hall. They then spend the last of the afternoon in one of the gardens, where Kyoya finds a nice spot and takes a nap.

He leaves at supper and it's clear Kyoya isn't happy that he's going, but there is a policy concerning visitation hours. He'll be in Namimori for a week before heading out looking for requests from civilians or Night Hunts to participate in. Tsunayoshi heads to find a place to eat before heading to find an inn in which to stay.

Things seem to be going smoothly during the pass few days of his stay in Namimori, he's learnt that the founding being lead by a Witch some centuries back, his name had been Giotto and he married a local woman, going so far as to take her family name as well, her name being Shimizu Kikyo. The man had, somehow, had the backing of the Asari Clan, one Asari Ugetus had been the primary supporter. Then again, it seemed that the Cultivator had left Japan back then, gone traveling beyond China, had been gone for a few decades before returning with Giotto in toe.

A few other foreigners arrived later, during the construction of the then town. Another Witch named G, a Catholic priest known commonly as Knuckles with his sister plus her orphan children, a pair of daughters by the name of Elizabeth and Samantha, a visitor, who would visit either one every two years for a month, he'd also a Witch named Alaudi, and then a series of messages getting send to and received from some Vongola Famiglia once a year for as long as Giotto been alive and was living in Namimori. It's clear that the Vongola Famiglia had, back then, invested some money in the founding of Namimori, it seemed that Giotto had some kind of relation to the head of the Vongola Famiglia, perhaps they'd been cousins or maybe half siblings.

The Vongola Famiglia's interest in Namimori had waned by the fourth head, leaving the Asari Clan to claim the young city as theirs, leaving it in the care of a branch of their Clan, the family is now called Yamamoto. The Yamamoto family had personal assimilated some Witchcraft practices, creating unique style for their family to practice when it comes to Cultivating. There's not much in the way of finding out much about Witchcraft teachings but the locals of Namimori do tend to have the influences of foreigners imprinted on them as Namimori has always been open to those who come from beyond the shores of Japan.

There's a larger variety when it comes to alcoholic drinks, there's imported kinds along with local creations using foreigners brewing techniques, and while hard to import food ingredients, they've modified foreigners' recipes to fit with what's grown within Japan. There's influences seen in some of the clothing from visiting or immigrated foreigners, the materials used have been imported along with weaving techniques. There's some interesting weapons that he's been able to find, pistols and rifles, good on fellow people but aren't that effective when it comes to Demonic and Spiritual entities. There are a few horseless carriages, which stink, that roam about Namimori, huge things that are used to carry large loads between the nearest sea port and Namimori's warehouse depot.

In learning what he can about foreigners, Tsunayoshi has heard about chemical powered flight carriages, they are similar to the horseless carriages, he learns, only for traveling in the air. Which is unlikely to be getting imported any time soon given that there's no need for them. There's plenty of ways to fly about within Japan, ones that are known to be safe along with cheap, and that's not including Teleportation Seals, based on Teleportation Talismans from China. It's like their guns, clever but impractical. Tsunayoshi muses to himself.

The only reason that the horseless carriages were being use has to do with trade deals with foreign sellers, they don't seem to trust the various means of flight travel and seem very skeptical of the safety of Teleportation Seals. There's also been attempts at laying down metal tracks for something call a railway for a train to use to ride upon. While the foreigners who never visited Japan might think that was a good idea, it really wasn't as that's just inviting trouble from the local Demonic beasts and Spiritual creatures but a certain phenomenon that's still unknown how to prevent. Travel routes change over time due to this phenomenon, which is the creation of a rift that will begin to open up on said road at certain times in first a yearly schedule, then during a certain season, then monthly, and if it people continue to use the road, weekly.

From the sounds of things, the Cultivators have kept the construction of said railway but for how long is unknown. After all, they had stood against the introduction of the horseless carriages some decades ago only for that stance to be relaxed. He generally concludes that it's likely some combination of brides and politics that lead to that relaxation.

Which makes how those Witches figuring out how to create a rift rather bewildering. Tsunayoshi thinks with a soft sigh escaping out of him. And worrying, after all, what's stopping that meadow from having that rift open up again? Without prompting? Will it develop like the road rift phenomenon?

There's a lot of questions but few ways to get the answers. Never mind trying to find any reference about Spirit Energy that's colored. Or sports characteristics of fire... He muses to himself as he sits in the local public library.

He suspects that he shouldn't be surprised over the lack of findings in a public library. Tsunayoshi had been rather optimistic over the idea regardless of his gut feeling and Aki No Sora's own agreement with said gut feeling. He'd hoped to find a clue, a lure, but found none at all. Should I be surprised? Past experience should have taught him to be skeptical when it comes to getting easy access to Cultivation, he still remembers how five of those seven Cultivation Manuals he'd bought had been a waste of paper and money.

In the end, he puts the various books he'd collect to read away, returning them back to their respective shelves. As he exits out of the library, he finds a pair of Cultivators, the Mon on their backs are of the Asari Clan, the main Clan Mon at that, there's no individual family Mon like with that Yamamoto-kun had on his front of the kimono. The pair are late teenagers, still gangily in their limbs and not yet filling out their kimonos.

The one to his left sneers after giving him a glance while the one to the right asks, "Tsunayoshi, owner of Aki No Sora?" Inclining his head with his face carefully a mask of polite disinterest.

"Your coming with us. It's beyond time for you to learn your place in the world." The one to the left states with a very ugly sneer, a glance at Aki No Sora, which gets both the Sword Spirit and himself very alarmed and already suspecting that they're not going to like what this meeting is going to be about.

"I see. Please, lead on then." He says and the one on the right takes the lead while the one to the left moves to walk behind him.

[TT_TT]

He's more then pissed off at the insolence of this fake carnivore and would very much like to break more then a single arm bone. Which would be more painful, the thigh bone? Or the two in the legs? Kyoya wonders to himself.

He's not paying the bleating coming out of the fake carnivore's mouth any mind, his focus is solely on the Omnivore. There's little of the man's true thoughts on display but he Knows that there's numerous emotions playing out below the Omnivore's carefully crafted mask. Particularly given that the issue of Aki No Sora is 'finally' getting 'addressed'.

There's a sour taste in his mouth at how these lowly herbivores are offended by such a simple name of a Sword Spirit. He'd love to break up this crowding that the fake carnivore set up but he has a number of distant cousins surrounding him to ensure that doesn't happen. Their excuse had to do with if the Omnivore couldn't deal with this without Kyoya's interference then he's Weak.

He knows that the Omnivore isn't weak. He knows that appearances are deceptive. He knows that none are bothering to See what Kyoya saw back then, what Kyoya Sees in regards to the Omnivore.

His twin colored Soul Fire has long since found a powerful and kind Sky to wander about in. It makes him wonder if they are being willfully blind as well, given that there's been paintings of a man who's features the Omnivore clearly takes after. Sure, the Omnivore is a practicing Cultivator and the other had been a practicing Witch, then the minor details like coloring and, of course, the length of hair. If his hair is short like that, would they See? Or would they still ignore it?

And yet, there's not much he, a Carnivore, could do as he knows his strengths and talking with others isn't one of those strengths. The Omnivore demanded that if he wishes for something of him, he's to ask, to verbalize what it is he desires. "It's to ensure that I know for sure what it is you want, Kyoya-kun. Not just guessing which could lead to us misunderstanding each other." He recalls the Omnivore telling him once.

It was the annoying smiling small animal that pipes up and the building tension seems to subside. "A honor duel then. Death or surrender." He snorts at the assiduity the fake carnivore speaks with.

There's a few eyes flicker his way while the Omnivore gives him a mild smile, one he's learnt from the Dragon Carnivore. His gaze goes to Aki No Sora before turning, the crowd migrates to one of the Dojos to get the so called honor duel over and done with. He hopes that the fake carnivore doesn't surrender after first blood had been drawn, he wants to see if red could improve the look of this fake carnivore.

The duel begins with them bowing, although not to the same degree, the fake carnivore still thinking he has a chance of winning. Their respective swords are out and the fake carnivore is the first to attack, not that it matters, the blows are all blocked with ease. The fake carnivore continues to try to match his strength and skill against the Omnivore but it's very lacking, for all that the Omnivore is on the defensive, none of the strike have managed to touch any part of the Omnivore save for Aki No Sora.

Again and again, the fake carnivore attacks, the strikes aren't as fluent, they aren't as emotionless. Insecurity is the first emotion besides unwarranted pride that gets displayed. It's soon converted into anger laced with fear. Spirit Energy begins to flow in the fake carnivores veins but do little to aid in landing a blow, the edge getting within a centimeter of touching but that's it. His Omnivore, his Sky, is taunting the other, enraging the fake carnivore, causing the fake carnivore to lose himself to his anger, forgetting the fear that laced that anger.

The herbivores and small animals seem to have finally become silent, a few seem to get the dawning realization that the fake carnivore is going to lose. The fake carnivore finally loses his head fully and calls upon his Soul Fire, proving himself to be a Rainy Storm, Soul Fire coats the sword, flaring mightily as well, the edge will be ruined but the fake carnivore doesn't seem to care. As the fake carnivore slashes the sword and sends a crimson tainted energy slice at the Omnivore, orange glimmers along the very edge of Aki No Sora and orange bleeds into his Omnivore's eyes and with ease, the Sword Spirit slices through the incoming Soul Fire slice, dispersing it with easy and then the blade is at the fake carnivore's throat.

"Surrender." Orders the Omnivore, the orange gone from both the edge and from his eyes. The others murmur in shock at what just happened, of not sure if they should believe their eyes.

He's smug at his cousins' reactions. "My Sky ." He sings out, not that they seem to hear the musical nature of his declaration but he does get a flicker of eyes his way for a brief half a second, not that the fake carnivore was in a position to take advantage of that very minor distraction, not in the right state of mind to do more then gawk at his Omnivore.

"Your... How... What..." The fake carnivore stammers out as the remains of the sword falls from his hands. The edge having been eaten away at by the Soul Fire that had been flaring about the sword's blade wildily.

"Sora Tsunayoshi is the winner." States the duel officiator, who's one of the senior combat teachers, Sora in lieu of an actual Clan name, their Soul Fire primary will be used. The Omnivore withdraws Aki No Sora from the fake carnivore's throat, he's disappointed by the lack of blood drawing and he'll be sure to make his Omnivore aware of that fact when they have time to themselves.

He remembers how his own first encounter ended, of having glimpsed orange in the eyes and upon the sword's edge for such a brief moment. The weight of the mask fading away with his defeat. His own disbelief of being confronted with a Sky Cultivator, one that he would learn was unknowing of Soul Fire and not sure how to begin explaining the subject. Of thinking, upon learning the Sword Spirit's name, how fitting the name was, particularly when he learnt of the Omnivore's birth season.

He had his guesses concerning his Omnivore's origin and it seems that confirmation of his suspicions will be coming up in the coming weeks. Over a hundred years in seclusion... Hundred years of Cultivating with barely acceptable manuals... He's going to find out how it was that they couldn't divine the Omnivore's location to retrieve him and pay his respects to said place for keeping his Omnivore from fake carnivores and herbivores until he'd been able to meet him.

[TT_TT]

Well, I thought it would have happen sooner. Fon mentally admits upon reading the letter from his sister. Then there's mention of the revelation of Tsunayoshi being revealed to be a Sky along with the results of a Witchcraft test to get the names of his parents.

The results don't lie, they tested Tsunayoshi twice more and the results all revealed the same bit of information again and again. Tsunayoshi is a bloodline descendant of the founder of the Vongola Clan, he's the son of the exiled and disowned Sawada Iemitsu of the Shimizu Clan and one Nana, who's father had been of the Asari Clan, of a family that had one of Giotto's great granddaughter married into, she'd been a bastard child and had died which resulted in Tsunayoshi leaving a month after the funeral.

According to Tsunayoshi, he'd been conned into buying a number of things from a questionable merchant along with the location of a place to go into seclusion, it's the infamous Spirit Bones Cavern. Which people found had gone 'dormant' but couldn't figure out why. Well, we know why now. He muses to himself. Tsunayoshi had been taught how to read and write from his mother, who learnt from her own mother. Which explains why he's literate when most people in his situation would, generally, be illiterate, particularly back then.

Nobody seems to know how to take the news, particularly the two Clans in particular as the Shimizu Clan had disowned Iemitsu when the Sky had been trying to learn Witchcraft instead of learning to Cultivate, which was expected of him. For the Asari Clan, it was the fact that Nana was never legitimized as her father's daughter. Which also made it hard to figure out just where Tsunayoshi should fit in Japanese Cultivator Circles as a Sky, he's highly valuable but due to his parents, he's something of a disgrace.

There's plenty of pros but the sticking point is always going to be the identities of his parents and their status. Lineage has always been an important part of social circles, with the right lineage, lots of things are a lot easier, often regardless of talent or temperament. Which was how Iemitsu got his position among the Italian Clans and Sects, by confirming his blood connection to the Clan's Founder.

It hardly matters that Tsunayoshi does have a Spirit Core, he wouldn't have been able to leave that location until he had possession of one, and had succeeded in cultivating a Sword Spirit, it boils down to his parents and the lack of teacher. Fon sighs, feeling older then he looks. Over a hundred years old... I never would have guessed. He's spent some time with the Sky Cultivator over these pass three years and his lamenting over the waste of the others raw talent never really went away.

If only he weren't already so old, I wouldn't have minded stepping into that role. He thinks to himself. Then again, for someone of his age, he still has gaps in his knowledge... Not that he'd been well versed in Cultivation before entering the Spirit Bones Cavern.

He finds his place once again and snorts softly at how the Hibari Clan stepped in to help 'fix' that particular issue by enrolling Tsunayoshi in the Arts Academy while arranging for one of the students to aid in tutoring him. Then there's information and a request to fetch a half kitsune by the name of Nagi, who's a Mist, it's seems that during his time in the Spirit World, Tsunayoshi saved a young half kitsune who had Awaken her Soul Fire, which is actually rather odd as half breeds might be carriers of Soul Fire but they rarely able to access it.

The mention of Witchcraft is brought up along with more details of what Tsunayoshi had experienced when it came to pursuing the foreigners, of these Witches, about the Spirit World and the hints of experiments they've been up to. He isn't happy with the thought of these foreigners toying with forces they aren't familiar with, he finds it rather rude that they thought they had any right poking their noses in their cousin realms that are the Demonic Underworld, Endless Abyss, and the Spirit World. Nothing good will come about ignorant foreigners touring around any of those realms and, sadly, it seems that enough of them manage to survive encounters with the natives to develop misplaced pride and confidence in dealing with those natives.

Fon skims the letter a few more times before putting it aside and begin writing out a reply to his sister, accepting the request to look into said matters. It's clear that Tsunayoshi would like to deal with this but he's not going to be able to do so for the time being, not when he's got catching up to do. Never mind the political mess he's found himself forced to deal with. The Storm Cultivator muses privately to himself.

The fact that Kyoya claims Tsunayoshi as his Sky wasn't really that shocking. His grandnephew had always shown a preference of who's company he enjoys the most. I'd thought it was just a childish crush. He admits as he muses how to word his reaction to the news the letter had for him.

Ending it Here

Body Alteration Flu, is real?: FateStay

I don't own Fate/Stay Night nor A/B/O.

Emiya Shirou does kind of recall the day when the world seemed to... Well, even at seventeen, he's pretty sure that the panic that went through the population was unwarranted, then again, as a Beta , he 'wouldn't understand'. That he's still closer to what was 'normal'.

Tapping his pencil on the desk, he's trying to come up with what to write about this essay concerning the topic of what happened about eight years ago. The wide spread fever that affected teens, adults, and elderly that caused them to develop an increased sense of smell, the developing four scent glads with two at the back of the neck and one on either wrist which meant that most teens and over were giving off more dense body odor with a cocktail of pheromones from said areas, change in a certain percentile's sex drive, and alterations to their sexual organs, some men and women becoming fertile hermaphrodites while retaining their usual, previous' gender's dimorphism traits. It's only these past three years that they classified the people into three categories besides someone being a man or a woman, the labels, becoming more common place terms used are Alpha , Beta , and Omega .

Still have no idea what became of Daifu... The young man muses to himself with a slight frown as a flash of frustration fills him for a brief few dozen seconds before fading away. His frown vanishes with the emotion, leaving him, once again, trying to get his mind back on track concerning the essay concerning this almost decade phenomenon that's still classified as the most bizarre and world altering change to happen in the Twentieth Century.

Reaching a hand towards the cup of water, he drinks as he decides to write:

Date 199X is when the Japanese Government decided to address the concerns that have been going through the population concerning the strange fever that caused those it infected to under go changes to their biology. It was the day that made it official here in Japan that there is a plague of a sort going throughout the world. It was one that focus heavily on the teenage, adults, and elderly population for generally a month as it caused their bodies to alter in subtle but profound ways.

With lips pressed, he rereads that paragraph and while there's nothing truly wrong with it, he wasn't sure if it was how he wants this essay to begin. Might as well call this a rough draft. He decides and that seems to help ease up the 'pressure' to get this right.

As mentioned, this fever that caused alterations to the biology of those afflicted. Their bodies at their back of their neck, on either side of the spine, would develop a glad that is the primary release point for pheromones of a sexual nature. At the wrists, glads of a similar nature would develop and they would produce a unique scent from person to person, a individual, personal scent. In some individuals that would be placed under the categories of Alpha and Omega , these scent glads are more active and thus, gives them a stronger body odor compared to those who would be placed into the category of Beta .

On that note, the sense of smell in all those affected also became more sensitive and once more, there were those who had a more developed sense of smell then others. Those that are given the Alpha designation are recorded to have a larger scent range and pick up on who's designation is Omega the fastest. Those classified under the designation of Omega are noted to have a better memory when it comes to picking up individual scents and seem to notice emotional states of those classified as Alpha by their scents alone. Given the more developed scent glads those with said designations have, it would make sense that the two designations would develop such a keen sense, particularly given the alterations to their respective sex drives that causes what's termed Ruts in Alphas and Heats in Omegas as changes in their scents are often the only warning of the on set of said sexual behaviors, generally, within twenty hours before the individual in question will experience either condition.

His own sense of smell is fairly good, only he had to train himself to pay more attention to the scents of other people. He's fairly good at picking out Alphas from crowds as they have a very bold scents for their personal scent plus sporting a far more steady amount of pheromones compared to Omegas , who's scents are subtler for their personal scent and who's pheromones only become thicker before they experience their Heats. Betas' personal scents range between the boldness of an Alpha 's scent to the subtle one of Omega 's.

Shirou's heard from others that his personal scent is akin to smoke that seems to sport a heavy dose of ash smell with subtle hint of roasting meat on charcoal fire. It's a smell that likely play homage to the Fuyuki City Fire, the one that saw him saved by his Daifu. He's quick to push the matter of the Fire from his mind as he refocus on what he's suppose to be writing about, reading the three paragraphs before thinking over what to write next.

The likely most talked about change that came about from the fever has to do with alterations to the sexual organs of those that have been given the designation of Alpha and Omega . For those now getting called Alpha Men and Omega Women, the changes weren't that overt as said genders already in possession of the correct organs, but for those now getting called Alpha Women and Omega Men, they experienced the growth of a new and more fertile set of sexual organs. They would also experience changes to certain portions of their brains, particularly the regions of the brain that controlled the production of pheromones within the human body to produce a chemical pheromone cocktail for the rather changed people who had become functioning hermaphrodites.

As mentioned, these new sexual organs are more fertile then the original set that the Alpha Woman or Omega Man previously possessed. It's far easier for the Omega Man to get pregnant during their Heat then it is for them to be able to impregnant a woman of any of the new designations. It is the opposite for the Alpha Woman, she has an easier time impregnating another woman of the Beta and Omega designation as well as an Omega Man then getting another Alpha Woman or getting pregnant herself. It is also noted that Alpha Women's impregnating ability is greater during the Alpha Rut then outside of it, it is unknown if this means that outside of Omega Heats, Omega Men can become pregnant. Perhaps we'll know more about this in the future as more case studies are brought to light.

He recalls how Ryuudou Issei had been when he came back from the week off, his friend ended up as an Omega , having gone through what's being coined Presenting. It had taken a lot to talk Issei out of giving up his position as Student Council President, it hadn't only been Shirou who'd talked him out of it during that month. Issei came out of his depressing mood after his first Heat, which occurred four weeks after he'd Presented and only lasted three days, although he wasn't back until it had been a count of five days, the first Heat/Rut is said to take a lot out of an Alpha / Omega .

It seems that Omega Heats can very from person to person, some people experiencing it only twice a year while others thrice a year. Stress can also cause an Omega to enter into a Heat, this kind of Heat is the shortest kind, being only a single day but it's far rougher on the Omega 's body. Stress Heat occurring in Omega Men are far harder then when it happens with Omega Women, it's likely due to the lack of preparation the body has when it occurs.

Alpha Women don't get the usual monthlies that Beta and Omega Women do. Which is likely why they have a harder time getting pregnant. Shirou reflects as he stares at the wall as his pencil taps on the desk once more. Getting it either once every two months or once every three months... There's a bit of envy on that particular matter.

The hormone indicators in Alpha Women and Omega Men are rather messed up. He admits as he reaches for the glass again and finds it's empty. Getting up, he stretches a bit and despairs a bit upon noticing the time. I thought more time had pass then that!

With a soft sigh, he heads out to fill up the glass once more. Leaning on the counter of the kitchen, he gulps some of the water from the glass before filling it again, trying to untangle this topic to get at why he's having so much trouble with particular essay. His thoughts keep circling back to the disappearance of his Daifu and finally mentally admits that, yes, when the plague did get it's press coverage, he'd become concerned over his Daifu's health, which hadn't been that good, for all that he tried to hide it from Shirou and, looking back now, had likely been getting worse instead of better.

The thought he'd done his best to hush, to ignore, had been... Is... Could this fever have been the tipping point?

Looking down at the cup's semi still surface, Shirou's eyes burn and blinking seems to see something wet begin to roll down his right cheek before a slight chill settles at the edge of his cheek's bottom. Leaving his left hand holding the cup, he wipes the wet trail from his cheek. Another tear falls down his left cheek and he wipes that away with his left hand as well.

Putting the cup down, he walks over to the back of the yard and stares up at the sky, the moon is waning from crescent phase into the new moon phase. There's merely a sliver of the moon to see while the sun has yet to fully set. All the emotions he set aside, ignored rising to the surface, breaking through the previous barrier to flow through him and out of him in the form of tears, wet leavings from his nose, and soft sobs. For the first time in... Well, he doesn't know, maybe since the Fire, he felt so... lost, helpless...

He'd only Presented just two months ago and he's found his previous emotional numbness to be a thing of the past. His Presenting as a Beta had taken almost three weeks, which had been rather odd and the fact he only ended up as a Beta was... Odd and yet, everyone seemed to notice that his Presenting had changed something in him.

Something had been restored one might say...

Shirou's emotional storm finally subsided with the sun fully down and the sliver of the crescent moon hanging in the sky with the light pollution keeping most from seeing the stars that share the night sky with the moon. With his sleeves sporting wet spots and mostly breathing in from his mouth, the seventeen year old finally finds it within himself to head back inside. He felt lighter, some how as he decides to put off working on the essay for tomorrow.

He has a quick shower before going to bed.

Calling it here!

Author's Note:

So, one person voted and, yea, Shirou would be a Beta. And yea, I did something different by focusing on something more character focus and Shirou learning to deal with his emotions cause Presentation help heal his brain from the Fuyuki City Fire, which had a magical start and fueled with a certain intent.

Also, I used Daifu, which is another Japanese word for Father, instead of the typical Tosan or Otosan, which means daddy or dad.

The italic words are meant to be some Latin term that's being used for Alpha, Beta, and Omega and I just wasn't going to try to find said Latin words to use, so, yea.

Check out the Poll for Week 2!

Error Detected: DxD

I seriously don't own High School DxD or A/B/O!

Go... away... Sleeping... Issei thinks in a distant, distracted fashion as the shaking begins to rouse him from his blissful rest. There's murmurs but he ignores the voices as he tries to grasp the slowly vanishing blankness that is sleep.

In the end, his thoughts became more organized as he begins to breath in and out as he tries to move from his back onto his left side, away from the sudden brightness that's taking over from behind his eye lids, only to feel something preventing him from doing that. Eyes open and he lets out a yelp at the sight of a face far too close to his for his liking, he couldn't back away as his arms sport straps that are anchored to the railing of the hospital bed.

"Why... A Hospital?!" His voice is rough and he is suddenly aware that his mouth seems to be dry. Thirst comes next as he tries to pull his right hand to touch his face, it doesn't move much and it's then as he realizes out sore his body is.

Issei's fairly sure that he'd been fine before he went to sleep Saturday night, the next day being Sunday and the day of his date with Amano Yuuma that afternoon. So wrapped up in his own thoughts and the strange emotions that surge on the thought of Yuuma-chan, which causes a phantom ache in his chest that's like a burn. As he tries focus on his memories, his thoughts get derailed by the smells around him, particularly of one of the people wearing what appears to be a lab coat, marking them as either a doctor or scientist.

Said man smells... The nearest Issei could think of is sweaty from a work out with undertones of spicy chili sauce. He doesn't know why but he already dislikes the likely doctor, after all, this was a hospital, right?

There's three people besides said doctor, one is a tall man with red hair, a woman in a maid outfit with silvery gray hair, and a woman dressed up as a nurse. Other then the nurse, the three seem to be engross in a talking with the doctor. The nurse seems vary wary of him, almost skittish, there's a slight jerk of her head when their eyes meet, she's quick to look away and that doesn't help him at all, after all, how could he be danger to her when he's arms are strapped to the railing?

He finds himself yawning as the adrenaline rush fades from his system. Issei is beginning to feel aches of his body more keenly and it's not like he's able to really hear what's being talked about. He occupies himself with noticing the various smell that seem so much more keen, it's the absence of that sweaty chili smell that alerts him that the doctor is gone.

Glancing around Issei finds himself alone and, well, he settles as best as he can, there's something about this that's fishy and he's not sure why but he kind of feels like his date didn't go as plan. He's not sure why, but the phantom ache in his chest is courtesy of Yuuma-chan and he can almost feel like how it happen evade his attempts to recalling it. After a while, he finds himself drifting off to sleep due to boredom.

-{ = Error = }-

When he woke up the next time, he finds himself at a gate that goes into a park that he had planned to visit for... Oh yea, for the date. Issei recalls and slowly begins to look around before he walks down the path.

There's a feeling of being watched as Issei goes through the park, it's an eerie feeling that causing a lot of different feelings to whirl around within him. He walks off the path and for what feels like five minutes, finds himself arriving at the path once again. Getting kind of alarmed by this, he tries to veer off in a different direction only to arrive back at the path minutes later. There's a feeling of lack of control slowly creeping up on him as he keeps trying to walk everywhere but on the path.

Fed up, Issei finally just follows the path and after a bit, he spies ghostly images of himself and Yuuma-chan walking just a foot before him. The images are still shoots and flicker away as another comes into being. Reaching out, his hand goes straight through while it seems like he catches snip bits of conversation, mostly him talking and he gets this feeling of lead in his midsection that doesn't get better when he keeps his hand to himself.

Once at a certain spot, things change and he watches as the formerly ghostly images seem to become more solid, more real. Then, things play out and he tries to deny the scene as it plays out, the reveal of the request for him to die and then the transformation that Yuuma undergoes before she kills him viva some kind of spear of light. But the memory doesn't end there, even as he feels cold and numb, he watches as something from his pocket glows and how Rias-senpai arrives.

He and whoever is watching as well, witness the number of attempts with chess pieces on his cooling corpse. In the end, it's the seven normal looking pawn pieces plus the one odd ball piece seem to work but he watches as his left hand changes seconds before the past him begins to scream and a green glow erupts from his eyes as they open up to reveal them being wholly green in color. Issei feels warmer with every second and then the memory begins to glitch then the him of the memory is gone with Rias-senpai vanishing half a minute later.

"It was like that." A voice rumbles, it's deep in an inhuman way. "Dead by Fallen Angel." The voice states with a snort as the park scenery begins to break apart as it vanishes until he's in a black space.

"So... are you suppose to be my partner? Or my Partner ?" The voice rumbles and he's not sure what kind of inflection to be had concerning the second partner. There's a bemusing tilt to that voice and he's not sure if he really wants to know what kind of being the voice is.

"Who... Who are you?" Issei's voice is rather shaky as he asks.

A huge head that is that of a reptile with dark red scales with green eyes. Dragon! He realizes as the voice answers, "Ddraig."

With that, the head vanishes and his whole body jerks as he opens his eyes, his hands aren't strapped to the railing so he's able to put his face in the palm of his hands. It's not long before he remembers how he died while getting bits and pieces of his body being too hot along with impressions of snarling at various people, echos of anger and of outrage at some... [blank] Darning to Command Him! He feels something happen to his left hand then see it and bites down a yelp as he stares at the crimson gauntlet with an emerald gem.

"What the fuck?" His voice is harsh as he stretches his fingers, curling them one after another before turning it so he can look at the palm of his hand before balling the fingers up into a fist before relaxing it once more. He's not sure what to make of this gauntlet and it's connection to the dragon called Ddraig.

Issei isn't really sure of anything any more as he does his best to organize certain things into a list of sorts. What he knows is this, Yuuma was a Fallen Angel, Yuuma wanted him dead, Yuuma asked him out to do just that, Yuuma left after killing him, that hand out summoned Rias-senpai, and she tested out a number of chess pieces before using seven plus an odd pawn to revive him. There's plenty of question he would like answers to, like, why does he have this crimson gauntlet? What's it's connection to Ddraig? What is he to Ddraig? What is Ddraig to him? And, what's the date?

What brings him out of his thoughts is a familiar pressure and looking around, he does spy a slightly open door. It takes him a lot of effort to stand and using the walls, manage to get to said door, finding the light, he let's out a soft sigh. Issei is glad he had guessed right about where it led and is sure to close the door plus lock it.

As he walks pass the mirror to get to the toilet, he notices how pale his skin is along with how his eyes are now a dark green instead of their previous dark brown. He stills before the mirror for a few seconds, his hands still before he begins to lower the rim of his underwear before moving to stand before the toilet. It's not long before the pressure is gone and he's before the mirror once more, washing his hands and finally moves the hospital gown to see his chest and winces at the sight of discolored skin, which is a darker shade then the rest of him.

He lets it go and his chest is once more covered. Issei makes a number of faces but, in the end, he checks his back and moves the gown to get a clearer sight of the same discoloration on his back, directly where the front one is located. He turns his head away from the mirror and lets go of the gown, finding it hard to really think that the person reflected back at him in the mirror is himself.

Looking at the door and then about the washroom, he moves to sit on the toilet and manages to bring up a single leg to hug to his chest. Issei's emotions are a mess and he can't find it within himself to try and find the silver lining in all of this. "I died... I should be dead..." His voice cracks at should and dead.

Tears take their time pooling in his eyes and he just lets them flow freely. He sniffles wetly as his fingers curl into the hospital gown as he feels his throat tighten up. "Mom... Dad..." He whimpers and let's out a sob as he tries to bury his face into his knee.

He's not sure if he only imagined it because he wished for some form of comfort but he swears it felt like someone covered his back and there had been weight on his shoulders at some point as he broke down crying. Wishing for his parents to be here for him, to comfort him, to lie to him about how everything is going to be alright.

= [- Diagnosing -] =

Issei isn't sure what to feel about Rias Gremory, never mind her... Peerage that proved to be members of the Occult Research Club either. He's back at living with his parents and living in Kuoh Town after spending two months at that Devil run hospital due to the aftereffects of the Booster Gear becoming fully awake, the lingering residue of the Fallen Angel's spear's energy getting purged, and the use of the Evil Pieces on him, like his strictly male body needing to undergo changes to match his new Omega status, namely, growing certain formerly woman genitalia.

He's not sure what to feel about not being strictly male now, particularly given he's got to deal with Heats, although he can expect dealing with that only twice a year unlike Omega females, who experience it once every three months, aka four times a year. Issei also has to deal with keeping track of his stress as he gets too stressed and he'll experience a Stress Heat, which will be only a day but far rougher then his 'natural' Heats. He hasn't experienced a Heat as of yet, although he apparently had five weeks after his new genitalia fully formed, not that he'd been aware as there had been a conflict between the Booster Gear taking offense to the presence of the Evil Pieces within him, which is what caused Ddraig to wake within said Sacred Gear and that had its own effects on his new biology status as an Omega.

Letting out a sigh as he lays on the grass, staring up at the sky as he's mentally chews on the changes to his life, the information dump he got pretty much the day before he'd been returned to Kuoh Town by the Alpha doctor that had been charged with his care during his time at the hospital. It takes him a few seconds to relax his lips from the snarl that formed on his face at the thought of said doctor. He can't help but feel nothing beyond disdain and distrust towards the Reincarnated Devil who's an Alpha.

"How am I kind of a Reincarnated Devil?" Issei wonders, not even Sona Sitri seem to know why he's not a Reincarnated Devil and those who might be able to explain it aren't anyone he's met as of yet. "I have the so called Secondary Gender that happens when a human becomes one..." Not that he's complaining all that much about not being a true Reincarnated Devil as Ddraig had filled in some of what that means, like being considered property of the Pure Devil who bound the Evil Pieces to him.

"Secondary Gender comes from their trying to increase their birth population by trying to preserve a human's natural fertility, brat." Remarks Ddraig, who seems incline to talk to him and not keep napping. "It's has nothing to do with applying the state of Reincarnated Devil to a person."

Issei blinks as he reviews this news. "I'm guessing that it's obvious if I had more experience in magic?" He asks curiously with a slight frown.

"Given I doubt majority of the other beings have given it much thought so it's unlikely they figured it out. They might not even care much either." Remarks the dragon who's soul that's housed in the Booster Gear. "Never mind the odds of an extreme case like yours." Adds the original Red Dragon Emperor.

"Point." He admits as he recalls the short explanation he'd been given concerning Secondary Genders. Alpha, Beta, and Omega were the titles given to the certain traits of that get displayed in humans who have become Reincarnated Devils. Majority of the time, being a man tends to equal being either an Alpha or Beta while being a woman tends to equal being a Beta or Omega. Beta status isn't all that different from normal humans, only an increase sense of smell and body odor, it's also the Secondary Gender that is simplest for newly Reincarnated Devils of humans to adapt to.

He hadn't been told but he'd been able to figure out that he's the first Omega male case to have occurred since this Secondary Gender became a thing. The reluctance of releasing him from the hospital was just one of the clues, the first and foremost had to be when a pair of nurses had been gossiping while straightening out the room while he'd been 'asleep'. How they referred to him as 'the first of his kind' and other, similar titles but also mentioned how its a shame that he's already 'Bonded', which he now makes him think that there's more to his relationship with Ddraig then he ultimately is aware of.

He does his best to not think about the other remarks he'd heard the nurses talk about, he wasn't ready to consider the implications. He really doesn't want to think about what that means for Reincarnated Devils, of which he might kind of fall under the category of. Issei isn't sure what he'd do if he's forced to acknowledge just what it means for a person to be considered property when it's in regards to himself. In fact, he has long since packed away any of that kind of material references within his room, he's kind of incline to burn it instead of selling it in fact.

Wrenching his thoughts from that direction by grasping the first other topic to cross his mind. "So... How many other possessors of the Booster Gear have there been?" Issei raises himself from laying on the grass, waiting for an answer, he sits cross legged now with him gently rubbing his left hand's knuckles with his right hand's index finger.

". . . Wasn't keeping track." States Ddraig in a flat tone. "It's not like I wanted to keep track of them either."

"Well, at least your honest." He states in a dry tone. There's a feeling of depression in his chest and he frowns as he moves his right hand to rub over the spot where his heart rests. "Guess I'm not all that special..."

"Oh, I highly doubt I'll ever forget about you." Remarks Ddraig and he blinks, it's not long before the dragon continues on. "Never had a possessor who ended up being both a man and a woman! Usually it's one or the other, never both."

"Are you talking about trans?" He asks curiously with more prominent frown. "Like, someone who was thought they were born the wrong gender?" He explains when he gets the feeling that he lost Ddraig.

"There are people who think like that?" The crimson dragon inquires. He nods as he tries to think of a way to explain it, if this had been before he'd died and been resurrected, he might be-mourn the fact that there are women out there who think they were men.

"Transgender is what it's usually called. They often dress in the cloths of their 'proper' gender and use the right pronouns." Issei does his best to explain. "I know there's medication and surgery available for them to help their bodies feel more like they should."

He still considers himself male, Issei grew up thinking of himself as a boy and can't really see that changing just because he can now become pregnant. His nose wrinkles at the thought of giving birth as he's not sure he really wants to know how that would work given he doesn't have the hips for it. "I doubt that surgery will do anything about..." He trails off, it's not the first time he'd thought of inquiring about getting said parts removed, only reason he doesn't has to do with dreading of the answer he'd be given.

"What's usually created by magic can only be removed by magic." Ddraig remarks before adding, "Of course Curses are in their own class but that's not what ultimately caused your Secondary Gender to be what it is."

"So... You think it's something inherit to me?" Issei muses thoughtfully. "That I might have certain traits that proved more dominate when compared to the usual traits of the other genders?"

"Sure... Let's go with that." And he snorts before shaking his head. Getting up off the ground, he dusts himself off and takes one final look around the park before heading home with his book bag.

He's been out of the hospital for a whole month now and in some ways, his life hasn't changed all that much but in other ways, he never could go back to how he'd been as he can't find the same drive he had to do the same things, like spying on the girls locker room or looking up images of naked women. Which has resulted in straining his friendship with Matsuda and Motohama, given the two had continued their usual antics of peeping on girls as much as they had before. They haven't been happy about him not wanting any part of it any more, even if he'd been disinterested in peeping, they seem to think he could be their sentry while they enjoy the sights.

Why hasn't Sona done anything about those holes though? I mean, they shouldn't be that hard to find, right? Plus, she's loaded, she should be able to spend the money to get someone to do something about the holes... She could even, I don't know, do a bit of magic to make sure nobody finds them in the short term, if she doesn't want to disrupt the students during the meantime, until there's a break... Issei muses to himself as he heads home.

"In the here and now, brat. We're got company." Ddraig states to him in what he knows to be a private way. With a slight frown, he does notice that it's not that busy on the street, in fact, he isn't where he expected to be as this isn't the street he walks to head home.

"Well, well, well, what do we have here? A Stray Devil by the looks of it." And some guy with a tiny cowboy hat in a trench coat makes his appearance.

"Oh god fucking damn it." He curses, he'd learnt rather early that invoking god causes Devils to wince and when this guy doesn't, he discards the idea that he's a Devil. He's not sure what he is though, given that human could be an opinion.

"It's just a lowly crow. Nothing to get your panties in a twist." Remarks Ddraig and the guy seems to freeze up, with the mouth open like that, it's kind of funny.

"A crow? So, he's what, a Youkai? A Tengu?" He asks and it seems that Mr Trench Coat gets all offended.

"I'm not some lowly monster." Snaps the guy while Ddraig replies, "Just a grunt of a Fallen Angel, same with that girl that thought you were dead."

"Ah, so, a Notice Me Senpai grunt?" He's pretty sure that's an accurate summery of the lecture he'd been given on the subject of Fallen Angels, which he'd been given at least three different versions of from three different people, namely Rias, Sona, and Akeno, in that order in fact. "Who thinks I can't invoke god because I'm suppose to be a Devil now, right?"

"Pretty much and yes." His left arm and hand are soon covered in the crimson gauntlet that's called the Booster Gear. "Roast his feathery ass, I'll give you fifteen minutes in which to do so or else I'll assign you some magical course work that will take up this coming Sunday."

"You heard Ddraig. So, yea, I'll be sure to give the locals your ashes." He pipes up as he holds up his left and before flickering it so his palm is up, uncurling his fingers and a white hot fire ball gets summoned.

"You think you can kill me, you fucking brat?!" The grunt in trench coat snaps as a pair of light spear get conjured up, but he's already sending the fire ball at the guy with simple flick of his arm, not unlike how one would throw a Frisbee only in this case, it wouldn't have gotten very far given the lack of force in the 'throw'.

The grunt tries to dodge while sending one of the two spear at him, which he blocks using the Booster Gear. The fire ball follows the guy around as he moves, trying to not get hit by the fire ball. Which proves to be a mistake as he conjures up a bunch of tiny ones behind him, about three and waits for the second spear to get sent before using one of those to block the spear and the other two to hit the nearest leg.

The white fire ball hits the guy squarely in the chest and it takes three minutes before there's nothing but ashes of Mr Trench Coat. "So... How do I create a jar? And how do I get the ashes into it?"

"Just inform them of the location when you get home." Ddraig suggests instead of answering his questions. "It's not your problem as you aren't one of the two owners of Kuoh Town." Reminds the dragon.

"So... You'll go over how to conjure inanimate object this Sunday?" He asks as he takes out his cell phone and takes a few pictures to send to Rias and Sona.

"Don't see why you wouldn't just focus on perfecting your natural incline with Fire Magic." Remarks the dragon. "Because I can conjure up cloths that I accidentally burn or get destroyed?" He counters.

"Humans and your fear of nudity." Ddraig huffs and he counters, "Oh, yes, sorry for not having a god damn fur coat."

"Your forgiven." Remarks the Red Dragon Emperor in a rather smug way. They bicker as he continues heading home, only switching to their telepathic bond instead of allowing people to hear him curse and snipe at thin air.

Switching from out door runners to in door slippers, he calls out a greeting to his mother before heading upstairs. He still has school work to catch up on and assignments that he needs to complete. Issei likely shouldn't have spent so much time at the park but, he felt to be in the right mood, not when he realized that he'd been back in Kuoh Town for a month, that it's been three months since he died. Not that he can share that information with his parents or classmates and teachers.

The matter of the Fallen Angel does get reminded as his cell buzzes with a text from Rais. It seems that another Fallen Angel had confronted her and her group, taunting them about him being in danger. He sends the photos he took of the ashes plus the photo of the street signs. Then does a selfie with him holding up a peace sign to send to show he's alright.

Once he gets a reply from her, he puts down his cellphone and considers what to do next. It's like Ddraig said, he's not one of the owners of this town nor does he have much weight, as of yet, in the Supernatural World he's been dragged into. If they didn't want Fallen Angels around, then maybe they should set up something to alert them when they enter into Kuoh Town. Issei thinks as he decides to have a shower.

"Just take it one day at a time." He recalls Ddraig telling him on more then one occasion. Issei despairs that it's often all he can ever do, that he's not fully in control of, well, anything right now. That he's at the mercy of events and schemes of people he has either only heard of or have yet to be told about.

I'm not alone though. He reminds himself as his gaze flickers to his left hand. "One day at a time." He reminds himself.

Ending it Here

Author's Note:

So, yea, I figured out a different angle for A/B/O to take and yes, Alpha females and Omega males aren't overly affected by the enchantments of the Evil Pieces that cause them to be classified as Reincarnated Devils. They've seen about five cases of Alpha females over the fifty years the modification had been added but Issei is the only case of an Omega male and yes, Ddraig is considered to be Issei's 'Bonded' Alpha as far as Issei's Omega instincts are concerned.

Thanks for the votes and hope the next Poll will prove to be interesting enough for people to vote on!

Reforged Through Flames: KHR!

I don't own Kateyou Hitman Reborn!

Minor Warnings : non-consensual body modification, mentions of gore, and side character death.

TI [- _ -] IT

Few people pay Tsuna much attention and he's too wrapped up on the report card that's in his hand. He's chewing on his lower lip as he despair over the marks he got from this year of school. Given his inattentiveness, he finds himself stumbling and ends up leaning on someone, their regal blue feathered wings sporting an odd set of inner secondary coloring made up of emerald green with ruby red barb markings.

"I'm so sorry!" He exclaims as he is quick to pull away from the other boy. Tsuna bows deeply to the other.

"Err, it's no trouble! It was just an accident, right?" The other says while the two boys that had been chatting with the owner of the blue wings glare spitefully at him, their feathers on their own wings puff out, showing their annoyance. "Scram." States the one sporting mousy brown with creamy white markings akin to dapple on the outside of the wings, he notices that the other boy sports dark yellow feathers and very small wings that weren't unlike his mother's small, bluish purple colored wings.

He's quick to bow again, once more apologizing to the boy and walks quickly away, doing his best to ignore the comment from behind him. "You should have smacked him, Takashi! He likely did that on purpose! He's wingless after all, maybe he wanted to grab a feather off of you!"

"Hahaha, it's fine, he's known to be clumsy! I think I saw him once trip on thin air once, when nobody was around."

It's far enough away that he doesn't hear more from that trio and he does his best to stir around people as he walks out of the school gates, he only stumbles thrice more before he's out onto the street. There's murmurs of people sighting the Demon Prefect and he mulishly keeps his eyes on where he wants to go, trying to ignore the desire to see someone flying with their wings. It's rare for people's wings to be strong enough to allow the owner to actually fly and there's plenty of theories about why some are able to fly while others can't, there's myths about it having nothing to do with the size of the wings either.

As he manages to make it home, Tsuna looks at his report card and his previous despair returns along with the soreness of the bruises he got from this morning when he got bitten by the Demon Prefect for being late. He'd forgotten his lunch bento again, so he hadn't eaten anything since breakfast and yet, he finds he doesn't have much of an appetite. Tsuna stares at the front door, he's hunches over at the thought of his mother's reaction to his report card and wonders why he even bothered to bring it home, he could have found a way to get rid of it, after all, she might not remember what day today is.

Tsuna sighs as feels his eyes burn already from tears wanting to fall but they don't. He finally swallows and takes a deep breath before entering the house. Calling out the usual greeting, he closes the door behind him and switches footwear with ease.

He listens for an answering call but there's nothing, in fact, the house is darker then usual. "Mom?" Tsuna calls out from the bottom of the stairs but there's no answering reply.

Searching the house reveals that his mother isn't home and it's not until he's in the kitchen does he find a reason for why that is. He wrinkles his nose as he does his best to read the characters on the note. Closing one eye and turning it slight to the right, he then closes his right eye and tilts the note to the left, it takes him some minutes to figure out the gist of the note. "Second... honey pot? Honey... pot..." He murmurs before realizing that he got it wrong and it's honey moon.

"Second honey moon." He murmurs and turns the note to see the back but there's nothing else written on it. Tsuna reviews the front but there's not much more information written, most of it is likely well meaning wishes or maybe reminders to take care of things while she's gone.

Rubbing the bridge of his nose, the eight year old isn't sure if he should feel relieved that she's not here to give the report card to or if he should be distress over being left alone at home. Putting the note on the fridge using a magnet, he pulls out a carton of juice and closes the door before grabbing a glass. Once he's poured himself a glass of juice, he puts the carton back into the fridge and then wanders over to the couch in the living room, leaving the report card on the counter.

Grabbing the remote, he turns on the TV and begins channel surfing. Finding something he wants to watch, he stops with his channel surfing. Tsuna slowly relaxes as he allows himself to merely watch what's on the screen, for a time, he forgets the aches of his bruises and his concerns about his mother's reaction to his report card.

! i ! = T v T = ! i !

Groaning, Tsuna isn't sure where he is, nor does he seem to see very clearly either. Everything is a fuzzy light and no amount of blinking clears up his vision, nor does he really understand what the voices are saying once the loud ringing in his ears dies down a bit. He's on his stomach with his hands behind his back, tied up and there's a binding on his ankles as well.

His vision is beginning to black out and he finds himself trying, and failing, to remain awake. The voices sound angry and Tsuna dimly notes that he likely should worry about his own safety but that... that seems to be took much of an effort on his part. As he gives in to his urge to sleep, Tsuna dimly wonders if he'll wake once more when there's sounds... No, screams.

Not that it matters to Tsuna, really, all he wants is to rest and his vision is fully black now. His eyes close, it's more of feeling his eye lids over his eyes then seeing the back of his eye lid. Something keeps him from fully falling into sleep, into resting. He dimly realizes that he's on his back, that his hands aren't tied but there's still the bindings on his ankles.

He kind of hears sounds, but it's the odd warmth that's beginning to seep over his skin that he finds to be nice and focuses on it. It tries to sink in but something keeps it out. Tsuna can't recall the last time he'd felt warmth on his skin, never mind within his body. When he'd been younger, he recalls dreams of warmth engulfing every bit of his being and of the feeling of down on his back.

Then the nightmares of follow on those dream's heels and recalls the fluff falling out until it was just skin touching skin. Of painful aches and an urge to scratch an itch. Of no amount of scratching every being good enough. Of liquid on his finger tips, under his nails... Of how it felt when lifeless appendages finally just fell off, bones, muscle and all... Of the itch that remained long after the appendages had fallen off leaving gaping wounds that bleed and bleed.

That warmth seemed to find that itch that's been with him and can't help the sigh that comes from his lips at the feeling of something rubbing up against that infernal itch that he's gown so use to having. The warmth continues against the itch, it's rather soothing to feel. He's not sure but there's this pinching feeling of pain briefly but then, then that warmth begins to sink past his skin, through his muscles and into his bones in his upper back.

The warmth's temperature begins to climb as he feels the itching get worst now. It's like the itching is trying to cut off the warmth but he tries to cling to the warmth. And so, the temperature goes up and up while the itching becomes more of a chill, becoming to feel much colder as the heat raises. Despite how hot it becomes, he wants that heat, he can feel it stocking his own body's heat that had become barely burning embers that could keep him warm.

As the itchy cold begins to win and he can feel the withdrawing warmth beginning to fade, Tsuna reaches out in as many times and in any directions as he can through the cracks in the itchy cold. He finds something, something that's so much MORE and Pulls on it blindly. He doesn't want to feel that itch any more nor does he want his inner warmth to begin dying back down to what it had been.

Even though what he's Pulling on is far too great for him to handle, there's something lingering from the previous warmth that he uses to Make Himself able to handle it. It's slow at first but it's pace increases and then overtakes the now easily channeled More . The More causes more cracks in the itchy cold and then it causes those cracks to begin breaking apart around the edges becoming bigger and bigger. Some of the cracks join together to create large openings but he doesn't care, he wants all of the itchy cold GONE from him, to never be able to reform and it would, if even a tiny bit of it is allowed to remain on him.

He's not sure when but he Remade Himself to ensure that there will never be a way for ANYONE to take his warmth from him without his approval nor interfere with his warmth without him knowing it. The last bit of itchy cold is finally gone, melted away by the MORE that now can flow into and out of him very easily. With his wishes fulfilled, the More flowing into him dies down and he releases the More from his grasp.

Comfortably warm now, Tsuna lets himself fall asleep. There's nothing more to be done and feels SAFE for the first time since that itch had been affecting him.

i ! i _ v M v _ i ! i

Arriving in Namimori, he begins to set up a temporary hideaway in order to scout the city. Regardless of how prepared he'd been,

Reborn spends about three days setting up things around Namimori before visiting the Sawada Residence to get his first glimpse of his next project. There's not much for him to pick up coming from the house and when it's usual time for the soon to be Tenth Don of the Vongola Famiglia to arrive home, nobody approaches.

Deciding that something must have come up, the Sun continues to wait. It's by eight pm local time does he realize that there's no lights on within the residence nor had there been any indication of anyone being home. And so, he lets himself into the house, it's clear from the layer of dust that nobody's been living in this house for years. There's mail piled up by the door and another collection of envelops on a kitchen counter.

A few tests show that the water and power have been turned off. Finding the rooms upstairs show that one of the rooms have been packed up, although the cloths in the boxes remain. In the master bedroom, there's little evidence of anyone doing anything within it. What valuables in the form of jewelry weren't around in this room, likely the whole house had been searched for anything value and taken before whoever took such locked up the house.

Before investigating further, the Cursed man makes a phone call to the Young Lion of the Vongola Famiglia, one Iemitsu Sawada. "When was the last time you spoke with your wife, Sawada?" He demands in Italian the moment the idiot and clearly incompetent Mafioso, particularly one that's so high ranking as the CEDEF Boss is positioned.

"Eh? Why would you ask that?" The Young Lion asks in a clueless tone. "Has anything happen to my darlin' wife?" Gets asked in a slightly curious tone that sports a slight underlying edge, not that it bothers Reborn in the slightest.

"Would I be calling you if everything was dandy?" He inquires with a load of hostility. "Given this gross of an information error, perhaps I should consider my contract void as I don't recall a clause of having to track down my future student, never mind figuring out your wife 's fate..." There hadn't been any kind of watch, it seems, over the External Advisor's civilian family, which makes him rather pissed at the clear signs of neglect concerning this Mafioso's responsibilities to his 'darling' wife and his 'cute' Tuna-Fishy .

"Who...? Damn it, how much do you want to not cancel the contract?" It's clear that the man is getting some of his act together. Too little, too late. He mentally thinks as he gives a number while mentioning that if his future student isn't found within twenty-four hours and he's not in Namimori within that time, he's canceling the contract.

With that, the call ends and Reborn heads out of the house in a foul mood. He's a professional so he doesn't 'disturb' the house all that much. There's a sushi chief he can speak with to get an idea of how long the house has been empty. His wings twitch under the illusion hiding them from view as children his 'age' only have fluffy down on their wings. His bright plumage's base color is a warm yellow with varying shades of a darker shade with a creamy white feathers on the inside of his wings, a simple row of feathers that continue with black feathers for the two rows below it.

i ! i _ v M v _ i ! i

Sitting across from not only his fellow Acrobaleno but the elderly Ninth Don of the Vongola Famiglia, plus his equally elderly Storm Guardian, and, finally, one Sawada Iemitsu. Three of the four are sitting across from himself and his niece, Hibari Nee Song Qing, mother of his grandnephew Hibari Kyoya. This meeting is attended by a single Vindice, acting as a neutral party to put a stop to any attempts at physical violence.

Fon suspects that Reborn found a way to contact Viper as what happened to the former Sky child had long since 'dried up' as it were. Tsuna had been nine the day of the kidnapping occurred, from what they learned, Sawada Nana had been dead within a month of their attempted ransoming. Killed when it was clear that she was of little value to the CEDEF as nobody came looking for her nor did they ever get through to contact Sawada himself. They only moved onto Tsuna when the blood tests confirmed that the child at the time had indeed been Iemitsu's son.

Both Skies sport orange among their plumage, which is a typical when it comes to wings, although it looks like the Ninth's feathers are going gray, which is likely why he's actually going through with naming an Heir. Generally, there does tend to be a tell tale hint of what kind of Dying Will Flame possesses when it comes to a person's wings. He's a rather uncommon example as his wings had been stylized after a crane's own, but also included the white plumage through and through. Not a single crimson feather could be found among his plumage or non-white feather of any kind.

His great nephew took after him, with sleek black feathers through and through but the style is after an eagle then a crow or blackbird. Wings made to soar through the sky with ease. Fitting, for a Cloud, in truth.

"Where is MY Son ?" Sawada finally demands after the usual polite pleasantries are had. He ignores the idiot while his niece glares at the rude Sky, who seemed to think he could get an answer to said question by lacing Sky into his question.

"Safe." A-Qing states stiffly, her lavender marked primaries of a golden brown hawk shaped wings raise up a touch before resettling with a bit of a shake. His niece likely finding the oppression in the room getting a touch heavier, a simple rattling of the Vindice's chains causes it to stop.

Flexing his own Storm Flame, he eliminates the Flames that are trying to press into his A-Qing. Compared to Tsuna's Sky Flame, it was like cutting butter with a hot knife. Trying not to think of his Sky, he adds, "And at this point, it's rather debatable if you still have a claim to Tsunayoshi." He is sure to switch his gaze between the two Skies, which cause Coyote to bristle in offense on his Sky's behalf.

"I'm his father!" Snaps Sawada and there's three snorts in reply to that declaration. Two from A-Qing and himself with the final one coming from Reborn, which isn't all that surprising given whatever respect the Sun might had held for Sawada had taken a large hit, it wouldn't be surprising if some of the 'splash' also brought down Timoteo's ranking in the infamous Sun's eyes by association.

"You were a husband who didn't realize that his wife had been taken to be ransomed for a month before they killed her when they couldn't get in contact with you." Fon states in a deadly calm tone. "Given what we learned about what happened to cause Tsunayoshi's wings to rot away enough before they fell off." He couldn't stop his anger, his rage from showing beyond keeping it to only his eyes flashing crimson before returning to his normal coloring.

There's a stiffening from Coyote's pose and the Vindice's own at the mentioning of what became of a child's wings. "You pretty much disinherited him." The Storm states. "Disowned the moment you choice to Seal his newly Awakened Sky Flames instead of training him."

"I wanted to keep him out of the Mafia!" Defends Sawada and he resists the urge to sneer while it seems that Reborn hadn't known that little fact, given the slight narrowing of his eyes and the way the head dips down a bit, hiding the Sun's eyes from view for a brief few seconds. "I wanted him to live a normal life!"

"You didn't even keep track of what happened after you retreated upon Sealing him. If you had, you'd have known how his feathers fell out and never grew back. How he'd feel an itch and would scratch the skin of his wings to the point of breaking through the skin, to exposing raw muscles." A-Qing growls out before he comes up with a rebuke to that claim.

There's a bit of a wince from Timoteo who looks away for a brief few seconds before schooling his reactions. Sawada's reaction is to glare at A-Qing and to flare his Sky Flame once more as he stands up in a threatening manner, only his niece reacts in anger and defiance as she continues on, describing the condition of Tsuna's wings before they fell off, ripping skin, tearing muscle, and popping out of the bone from its rightful socket. It's a gruesome description and not for the first time he wonders if they had been informed of Tsuna's circumstances, could they had done something to alleviate the symptom of receiving that Flame Seal?

He takes out copies of the medical history of that time in Tsuna's life, being sure to hand the Vindice official a copy as well. Reborn opens his envelop up and skims while Coyote takes the copy on Timoteo's behalf. Sawada pretty much pulls it towards him but doesn't open it. He returns to his former position as he notices Reborn's eyes narrowing, no longer skimming the information printed upon the papers, the subtle signs are there that shows that yes, Reborn isn't happy with the information provided.

Fon isn't sure if this would be enough to cause Reborn to cancel his contract. Not that Tsuna is any shape to ever be a Mafia Don. The Storm thinks as he recalls the last time he'd seen Tsuna.

Dull orange scales with streaks of brownish red about the head, neck, and the back of the wings. While capable of assuming a more... human vintage, Tsuna can't be classified as human any more. The changes the Sky had undergone when he tapped into something beyond human imagination... A human couldn't properly channel or really forge a permanent connection with it, not without dying or coming close to that state.

There's a number of pros and cons for what Tsuna had become, the teen, although that's debatable if he's still aging the same way as before the transformation, is something of a power house, able to reshape things to his satisfaction, well, when he feels motivated to. On the down side, the Sky has a hard time realizing that not everyone possesses the ability to see the world as he does and in turn, makes it hard for them to understand any explanation he'd give about his insight.

Given the size of Tsuna's body, they are rather thankful that the other doesn't need to eat to maintain his body weight. Might be some kind of conversion going on when he's basking in the sun though. It's unusually cool around him, particularly when it's sweating hot out... He reflects as it seems that the Skies are awaiting Reborn's judgement.

Sawada and his niece sit down, Fon can only guess it depends on how bored and how much of a challenge Reborn thinks trying to 'whip' Tsuna into a 'respectable' Mafia Don. Fon highly doubts that Reborn will have any success, not when they're still trying to press the importance of cloths on Tsuna on a monthly basis when the Sky shouldn't have any trouble relearning that aspect of human behavior and yet, in almost five years since the transformation, he has trouble remembering that cloths are important when he's plans to be around humans in a humanish shape.

While it would be amusing, he rather not witness the mess Tsuna would make of Reborn once the Sun pushes pass the Sky's personal boundaries after a certain point. Though, that would only bring more trouble to their door and cause more people to become aware of Tsuna's situation. Given the base 'values' of the Mafia underworld, the odds of their greed and lust for power overwhelm what little sense they have...

The Icy Flow Under Bamboo Triad were gone after that group attempted to gang press Kyoya into their ranks. The evidence of there ever having been a Triad of said name had almost been totally erased until A-Qing managed to talk Tsuna into stopping the eradication of said Traid, mentioning how they can't serve as an example if nobody remembers or have evidence of their existence. No group has yet to take over the former's territories or businesses. He recalls and that's likely a side effect that Tsuna hadn't meant to have happen either.

Realizing that his hand had gone, he forces himself to let go of the pacifier. Fon isn't sure if he's desperate enough to make that request yet, but, he doesn't want to die and for his legacy to be swept under the tag of Storm Acrobaleno, to be forgotten when the pacifier is given to the next chosen Storm Acrobaleno.

Ending it Here!

Author's Note:

I'm not sure why this turned out to be as dark as it is only that it did. Can't really see why all three of these see the MC going through some emotional trauma...

The next poll should be up and I wonder how many of you will vote?

Here's hoping I'll write something a little more... bright?

Settled Dreams: Digimon Tamers

I don't own Digimon or these Daemons are kind of based off of the ones in His Dark Materials trilogy.

There's a strange phenomenon that occurred nearly fifteen years ago. Spacial Rifts began intruding throughout the world and caused certain people to go through a process called Dividing, in which caused a entity that became termed Daemon to appear next to said person. Once more, these Daemons could speak and were generally the opposite gender of their human.

The Dividing also means that the humans could enter into these Spacial Rifts, nicknamed Dungeons, and found they interacted within said Dungeon in a game like fashion. Only within these Dungeons could the humans be able to use unusual powers and access a feature called Inventory without limit, outside of the Dungeons, there is a limited times that this Inventory could be accessed outside of Dungeons, which refreshes every two days. As the Governments of the world would learn, only these Divided individuals, these Players as it they could be called, could deal with the monsters that lurk within the Spacial Rifts.

Through tragedy called the Raid Wave, a month after these Dungeons appeared and those affected by the Dividing, in which a lesson was learnt as those monsters lurking within those spaces surged out under the so called 'leadership' of a Boss Monster . Many people lost their lives in the ensuring event and the usual weaponry welded by Man-kin proved to be able to dent or scratch upon the monsters. It was in Japan that the means in which to counter the Raid Wave was officially discovered when one Kita Nariko, a sixteen year Kendo student who experience Dividing, ending up with a Daemon by the name of Koji that would go through the phenomenon termed Settling in the form of a wolf-dog.

None know how, but in the end, Kita Nariko managed to get her hands on a live steel katana and succeed in defending a group of panic civilians who had been in the process of robbing a mall. Someone had the presence of mind to bring out their cell phone and would record the famous four minute video of Kita Nariko and Koji causing not just damage but death to large, spiny shelled turtle monsters about the size large dogs.

This video of her and her Daemon's success in killing said monsters went viral within a minute of it getting uploaded on YoTube.

Thus the beginning of the end of the Raid Wave would begin, with anyone who had gone through the Dividing had been given weapons of any sort. It was soon proven that weaponry of older times prove to be more effective against the rampaging monsters along with the attacking Daemons being able to cause damage, perhaps more damage then their human partners. Swords, axes, hammers, bows, daggers, crossbows... All proved themselves invaluable and would come to staples of a Player's armory.

In this counter-defensive it would become known that if a Daemon dies, so does their human but it is also flipped, if the human dies, the Daemon vanishes in a cloud of golden dust. Each country mourned the dead in their own way while the intellectuals would toss around the cause behind the Raid Wave. It from sending in Divided, as they had been mostly been called by then, and their Daemons into the Spacial Rifts that would give the investigation much needed answers. Which is why these Rifts would earn their nickname of Dungeons due to how game like the nature of it proved and, in particular, how to close them.

Time marches forward and there have been babies born with a Daemon, their age tend to match their human. One in three babies have been born with a Daemon and it's unknown if the other two thirds would go through Dividing when they are older. There's varying degrees of discussions about what this means for the future, particularly the ethics of raising these born Dividers, these future Players, as defenders of humanity, as child soldiers .

Regardless how much people wish it, Daemons and Dungeons seem here to stay.

x _ W v W _ x

With Chinbo weaving about his ankles, Henry does his best to not step on the current ferret Daemon who's clearly excited over the idea of a field trip through a Rank 1 Dungeon. He almost stumbles when Chinbo shifts into the form of a large house cat and he can't help but send an annoyed glare at her. Not that it seems to deter his Daemon as she leaps up at him and he manages to catch her in his arms, the fuzz ball is purring while rubbing her head about his chin and jaw line.

The permission slip that he'd been holding onto crumpled under the weight of the current feline Daemon in his arms, who's being overly affectionate towards him. "Chinbo..." He sighs out and she replies, "Yes, Hen-kun?"

"Can't you be something... smaller?" He asks after looking at the face that Chinbo gave him along with her use of her nickname for him. The Daemon chuckles before turning into a more leggy feline that sports a coat is a dark yellow tan with black markings upon the fact along with spots upon the sides. So much longer and harder to keep in his arms, it takes him a bit of effort to keep his balance while Chinbo's head moves along his right side of his jaw before getting a face full of furry shoulder as the Daemon moves to his shoulder, rubbing her body against his face.

Chinbo continues on showering him with affection on his right side of his face. With a soft sigh, Henry reaches up and scratches behind one of her ears. "Must you be so contrary?" The teen mutters and gets a tail hitting him near his left eye.

And so, he makes sure that he has the letter concerning the announcement of the trip. With his Daemon purring in his left ear, Henry makes it to the apartment door not long after a few minutes. Unlocking the door, he finds his father seated at the kitchen table with a number of papers on either side of a laptop. "We're home!" He calls out as he closes the door while Chinbo leaps from his shoulder, shifting into the form of a Snow Monkey, she races to the table, pulling out a chair before getting up onto the table.

"Welcome home, Henry. Chinbo." His father says upon looking over at him and then at the clock. "I didn't realize it's... Ah, what do you have there?" His father notices the letter upon pushing up his glasses.

"There's to be a field trip in a Rank 1 Dungeon." Henry tells his father as he approaches the table. "It should have the needed information within it." He adds, offering the letter to his parent, who takes it from him.

He walks over to the chair that Chinbo pulled out and sits in it, watching as his father pull out the contains of the envelope. He notices Chinbo peeling an lychee with draft fingers before taking a bite out of the fruit. Although Daemons don't need to eat, it doesn't mean they can't. Chinbo consumes food for the experience of the taste of it then because she needs too.

Noticing his attention on her, Chinbo puts down the fruit and goes through the fruits in the bowl. Then she hands him a Dekopon, with a slight smile from him that the Daemon returns, she returns to eating that lychee while he holds the fruit in his hand, turning it around as he tries to find purchase of where to start peeling the Dekopon.

Henry waits for some reaction from his father and a slight sigh does escape from him. He knows his parents have come to terms with him being born with a Daemon, with him being Divided, a Player, and given that Suzie had been born with one as well, the Daemon has been given the name of Eiji. It doesn't mean they weren't worried about him or for Suzie. With the danger of Dungeons and the dangers of another Raid Wave happening...

The world doesn't work the way it once did when his parents were kids themselves. Henry looks at Chinbo as he tries to picture his life without her and finds it rather impossible. He knows his schooling is different then those who aren't Players but he's found parts of it to be enjoyable. There's plenty of kids who are envious of him for just having Chinbo at his side, always there for him, keeping him company.

"I'll inform your mother later." His father assures him and Henry does a single nod before he pushes the chair back. Once he's standing, he walks over to retrieve his book bag and as he heads for his room, waits for Chinbo to enter in first, her form that of a corgi sporting white with dun blue splotches.

x _ W v W _ x

With Yoshimi sitting at her left side, Rika looks at the entrance of the Dungeon, often called a Gate. Her Daemon is in the form of a wolverine, which means that most of the milling students and their Daemons take as a warning of her mood, thus giving them both a wide berth. Everyone is either sticking to kids they know from school or are busy trying to get to know some of the newer faces, after all, this trip sports students from three schools.

"Eh? Huh? Oh? OH!" Blinking at the masculine voice, Yoshimi snorts and she looks down to find a reptile Daemon looking up at her with seemingly wide eyes.

"Tatsuo? Tatsuo!" And a boy comes into her buffer zone, going right for the geko, only the Daemon shifts into the form of a barn owl, taking to the air. "Tatsuo!"

She can't help it but stare up at the now circling Daemon before looking down at the boy. "Tatsuo?" She can't help but voice in a flat tone.

"Yea, I know, I know, but he's a he and he is mine." Admits the brunet that sports reddish hazel eyes. "Takato." The boy introduces himself after taking a few seconds to stare at her then back up at the now Raven Daemon. "Nevermore! Nevermore!" Getting crowed out softly by the flying Daemon.

"Never seen anyone with a Daemon the same gender before." Yoshimi remarks and she glances down at the wolverine Daemon, rather surprised, after all, Yoshimi rarely talks when there's others around, let alone to another human besides her. Not that she doesn't agree with her Daemon but she didn't see the point in talking further with this boy.

Takato smiles softly and for a second, she finds her cheeks heating up at the sight. He's not looking her way, so she is certain that he doesn't notice her reaction. Looking away from him, Takato replies to Yoshimi, "There are some rare cases reported, they have proved themselves to be rather unique? Like, having a longer stretch distance..." The boy trails off.

Rika's gaze lands on Takato before looking up at the crowing Raven Daemon. The Daemon shifts into a butterfly before coming down to land on Yoshimi's nose. "Hey!" She shouts and finds that Takato seems to jerk before looking to see where Tatsuo is.

The butterfly Daemon moves off from Yoshimi's nose before turning into what appears to be a crimson fox, only it's far too big and sports a black mane. Tatsuo walks in a circle around Takato as Takato seems to study Rika. She isn't sure what to make of the emotion that seem to shine in those hazel red eyes.

"You... might want to pick a staff out." The boy tells her. "I think it'll suit you plus it's got a lot of uses, like triggering traps from a distance!"

"What...?" Just as her brain catches up to what he suggests, the kid and Daemon are quick to say, "See you later Rika! Yoshimi!"

"We didn't give him my name." Her Daemon comments and with pressed lips, Rika watches as the brunette vanishes into the crowds of students. "Forget about them. We won't be seeing them." She states, although her thoughts linger on what he meant by a staff being suitable.

Never mind that she's had minimum training with one. Yes, she hasn't picked out any particular weapon to focus on but she never thought about staffs being something she'd find to be her thing. "We're... not getting weapons for this... Right?" Yoshimi voices and she frowns as she looks towards the Dungeon Gate.

"We're students. We aren't going to be doing any fighting." We shouldn't be expected to do any fighting.

The strangeness of the meeting with Tatsuo and Takato causes her to feel a bit concerned but also kind of excited. Then she does her best to push the matter and the feelings from her mind, after all, there's been plenty of field trips through Rank 1 Dungeons before. She doubts that this one will be any different.

x _ W v W _ x

They're different. Takato and Tatsuo are both the same gender, it's a rare occurrence and kids never really accepted either of them, once the fact that it's far more common for a Player and Daemon to be of opposite genders. They're freaky in the eyes of their classmates, almost unnatural, even in their eyes while the adults are wary but also sporting expectations of studying them, of gathering data about why they are who they are.

"As if such studies could ever help them understand, never mind explain us!" Tatsuo scuffed when they'd been eight. "We're who we're meant to be." He'd agreed back then.

'We're growing into ourselves.' Tatsuo chimes mentally when they'd been on the bus heading to this Dungeon. They've had this Feeling ever since the announcement of this trip and then dream snippets, lingering impressions of a weight in his right hand and something heavy resting upon his left arm. Savings spent on supplies such as bottled water, food, and medicine, any he can find.

They'd sneaked through a Dungeon Gate just to put all of it into his Inventory. With Tatsuo having been the one who had packed up a bunch of his cloths along with some towels and blankets. Tatsuo had given him a very flat look and he felt sheepish about having forgotten such important stuff but the other had huffed softly at him. He's thankful his parents were busy with the Bakery, else they'd have noticed how empty his dresser drawers have become along with missing a number of other things, minor things but a lot of it having been packed up by Tatsuo in the end.

Before leaving in the buses, Tatsuo had them run into Chinbo and Henry. Before entering this Dungeon Gate, Tatsuo had stumbled upon the final members of their 'Trinity', Rika and Yoshimi. He doesn't know why he thought it a good idea to mention her picking the staff before they left, maybe to nudge her into picking it when the time came? It hadn't mattered all that much, at first, if she hadn't chosen it at the beginning?

Shaking his head in an attempt to clear it, he notices that Tatsuo is in his favorite form, a Maned Wolf. The grips of Knowing fades away and it's not long before Tatsuo shifts into a red squirrel and climbs onto his right shoulder then begins to move about his shoulders, excitement surging within the currently tiny Daemon. An excitement that he shares, in fact, as everyone around them is excited about this trip through the Dungeon, although they know that this is the beginning of something different for them and for a few others, neither Tatsuo or him know the exact number of people who'd end up with them besides Chinbo, Henry, Rika, and Yoshimi nor if any of them will be counted among the adults escorting them into this Dungeon.

Soon enough, the adults begin to exert control over the mass of students. While Tatsuo shifts into the form of a red panda and with a paw upon his head, the Daemon listens while Takato's attention is on the adults wearing protection and carrying weapons out in the open. It's the sight of such protection upon their person along with weapons that's meant to cause feeling of safety and security. They didn't need to have it out as they weren't through the Dungeon Gate as of yet and it would be a simple thing to Equip it all, the swapping of gear within the Dungeon is rather simple for those that are Players, after all.

As they get into line, Tatsuo's form shifts into a far more imaginative one. Crimson scales cover the body, bat like wings, a long neck and tail plus black spines and a set of black curly ram like horns. He doesn't need to see the white scaled belly to know the bio-like hazard symbol is affixed there as a warning. There's a number of people looking at Tatsuo with a bit of awe and bewilderment, after all, dragons don't really exist, never-mind why it would be a western dragon of all shapes.

'Nether did Dungeons, once upon a time.' He mentally remarks to Tatsuo as he reaches up to scratch under the tiny dragon's chin. 'Indeed.' Tatsuo agrees as they move with the crowd of students towards the Dungeon Gate to enter the Dungeon proper.

They are eager for their adventure to begin, to come face to face with what they've dreamed of for these pass two months. As they enter through the Dungeon Gate, he wonders what kind of condition they'll find their starting weapons in along with which routes they'll take. The future isn't set in stone, only the past is. Some things are more certain to come to pass while not so with everything that they've caught glimpses of within their dreams or linger periods of Knowing.

Ending it Here!

Happy New Years people!

Curses that Vices Bring: KHR!

I don't own KHR!

Dying Will Research Entry # 94:

It's the Winter Solstice, a day feared by every Dying Will Flame user for it is commonly known as the Eve of Judgement. Where ever they are, they gather together, some at grand functions that the Vongola Famiglia hold for their Allies to attend in witness to who is found guilty of which of the Seven Vices, or called the Deadly Sins. There are Families that prefer to keep such an events private, leaving those outside of the Famiglia to create a rather impressive betting pool concerning whom among those closed off Famiglia affairs would be affect and by which of their Sins out weight all the others.

As the Winter Solstice is feared, the Spring Equinox is a day of hope, yet, it's also dreaded in its own way. It's known as the Eve of Return as those who finish serving out their punishment are returned to their rightful physical forms, what's dreaded learning what cost to the Returned's mental state their time punished had been done upon them. After all, the minimum punishment endured is the time between the Winter Solstice and the Spring Equinox, it's often a taste for first time offenders but the time spent in an inhuman shape, forced to live a life far different then the one a human is born to lead, leaves it's marks all the same. Recovery takes time and a lot of patience with those that Returned.

There's plenty of regional tales concerning the origins of the two events, Eve of Judgement and the Eve of Return. The fact that few dispute concerns that the first to ever experience the Eve of Judgement is Giotto, who is better known as the Primo of the Vongola Famiglia. It's well documented that the event that likely caused the Judgement to settle upon the man has to due with the Massacre of the Sinclairs that saw not just the men put to the 'Flame' but the elderly, toddlers, children, teens, and women. None fully know why Giotto had been so vengeful in the regards of the Sinclairs but, come the Winter Solstice at the Inn they'd been staying at, its said that the Sky had sensed it coming, for throughout the daylight hours, Giotto had been filled with nervous energy and found it hard to stick to a single activity.

As the sun goes down, Giotto seems to collapse upon the floor in the middle of pacing before the window. Before his Storm Guardian and fellow vigilantes eyes, they witnessed the Sky's hair and teeth fall out before his head began to alter, a beak beginning to grow out of the mouth. Giotto's finger nails did as well before the arms began to warp into wings. Giotto's body began to shrink, warp as it goes, with the beginning of feathers spreading about the skin that the men could see. Within minutes, where there was once a man, there was a peacock struggling to get out of the cloths that the former man had worn.

Giotto wouldn't regain his birth form until that Spring Equinox but the effect of having witnessed the Judgement saw many men leaving Giotto's band of vigilantes. It also wouldn't be the last time Giotto would experience Judgement for his conduct in pursue of his justice for the common people. Giotto would undergo the losing of his humanity three more times, his second Judgement would see him transformed into a horse for roughly two years, his third would be a magpie for roughly three, and his final recorded Judgement would see him transformed into a stag for roughly five years. The Sins he committed would be Warth, Lust, Greed, and, finally, Pride.

Among his Guardians, they would all end up receiving being Judged at least once in their time at Giotto's side. Although the most well known member of the Primo's Guardians would also serve to show that some Judgements can be final, it would be Deamon Spade, who's second Judgement saw him transformed into a stag, it had been the year that saw the passing of the reigns of the Vongola Famiglia to Ricardo, more commonly known as the Secondo.

Looking away from the page of information, Skull rummages around until he finds a section documenting the species of animals that Flame Users have been transformed into. "Elk... Mule Deer... Reindeer..." Beyond the listening of deer is snakes.

He wonders if he'll find the answer to his question among these old reports and entries. He might have been looking for a week but already, it seems nobody knows the answer to his off handed idea of if they would still be Cursed if they Returned after experiencing Judgement. After all, surly they can't be exempt from getting Judged, right? There has to be documents concerning previous Arcobaleno committing Sins and thus receiving Judgement...

"There should be records of previous Arcobaleno at least?" The Cloud murmurs to Oodako, who's clinging to his back like a backpack. The Octopus gives him a light hug, clearly getting the downward spiral of his thoughts and emotions at the lack of answers or records of former Arcobaleno.

"Envy, Gluttony, Greed, Lust, Pride, Sloth, and Wrath. Rabbit, snake, magpie, horse, deer, squirrel, and peacock." Skull mutters as he frowns as he considers the off handed idea of his that's become something of facial point for him six days. Since none of the other Arcobaleno answered that simple question, which should have been easily answered with either a yes or no.

It's been six years since they've been given the title of Arcobaleno, that they've been Cursed into their current looks. For all that they look like toddlers, they weren't. They kept their adult mental state of minds, that's never changed, not like those who are Judged and are transformed into beasts.

Not that I know what that's like. Muses the Cloud as he gently causes the stool he's sitting on to slowly turn around in circles. "Never did anything that warranted getting Judged for." Skull admits with a sigh.

"Not that I actually want to do something that bad, of course, but..." Is it something I want to gamble my humanity over? And if it doesn't work... Will I still be me? It's something that Skull has observed over his time pre-Arcobaleno and post Arcobaleno.

What's the point in getting free of the Curse if he won't be fully himself? Fully human? Skull gets the feeling he's at something of a crossroads, he can roll over and accept that he's Cursed into the shape of a toddler or he can do something desperate but could affect him.

"Although, it kind of feels like... I'm missing something? That it's kind of..." Skull knows himself fairly well and suspects that in hindsight, it'll be something he'd curse himself for overlooking, that it's something so simple...

He stops himself from spinning the stool one way only to begin having it spin the other. All the while, he has Oodako keeping him company as he sits upon a stool in Verde's paper archives.

] - = Time Passes = - [

"I received a request that might be something you'd be interested in." Viper's voice states upon him picking up his phone. Skull blinks at the blunt statement before asking, "How much is this going to cost me?"

"How about wager? I heard of your little inquiry concerning Arcobaleno and getting Judged." The Mist remarks and he blinks before nodding, stating, "Well, it's not like I could find anything saying we're immune."

"What would the wager be?" He asks after a few seconds of no reply to that little statement. It's early in the morning and he's pretty sure that the sun is only beginning to show itself given that the alarm clock says it's a bit over four am.

"Two parts, one, you can create a Mist Contract that would be the effect of a Scapegoat or Sin-Eater. The second would be answer your question of, what happens if an Arcobaleno was to undergo Judgement." Viper explains. "The odds of the first one working would be one in a hundred while the other would be one in seven."

He tries to figure out just what it is Viper means by those odds. "So... if I accept some guy's Sin, I'll get...?" The Cloud asks.

"Upon signing it, you'll get twenty-five percent of the payment up front. You end up Judged, you'll get the rest." Viper states before continuing on. "And if you do get Judged, I'll fork over seven times that upon seeing the results."

It might be due to how early it is, but that doesn't sound like a bad deal. Mostly, he'd be getting money for doing something he'd been thinking of doing away way. Even if this contract fails, he'll at least have money to fund whatever dubious crime he kind of plans to put into action at sometime in the future, even if he's still not decided on anything. "Any idea what Sin it is? And the duration?"

"Also, I'd want Oodako looked after if I end up an animal." He states. "I'll be happy to make those arrangements, I'll have a contract ready for the meet up for my services." With that, Viper ends the call before him verbally agreeing to any of it.

Skull lies on his back as he stares at the phone in his right hand, blinking a few times as he mentally tries to figure out just what the hell happened. In the end, he puts the phone back on its receiver and moves onto his other side. "Too early for this shit." He murmurs as he then does his best to ignore how wide awake he is and tries to let his mind drift off into lala land.

] - = Time Passes = - [

"Huh, it's been a while since we'd have an Arcobaleno seek a cure viva being Judged." Remarks a man with fairly dark skin with black hair in corn braids and yellow hazel eyes. "Never mind one who never committed any of extreme acts in order to do so."

Skull tries to speak but his body seems rather... unresponsive. "I believe you'd call me a Cloudy Mist? We're in a Territory of a sort, more pocket dimension then a step outside of time." He does manage to blink and then, he's on the floor.

Looking around, he finds everything smaller... "So, explanations... I assume you want to hear a few of those, huh? Like, who am I? Perhaps, what's up with this Eve of Judgement? Maybe even asking why we never did anything about stopping you and the others from getting Cursed?" The man muses while he's busy staring at the body that's in the middle of transforming into a magpie. There's still a few teeth in the air while the arms were beginning to grow feathers.

"Well, I and nine others, we're fairly old and well... The Eve of Judgement thing is more aimed at the last surviving bastard, it's been that way since he'd set up the Curse on those pacifiers, you see." The man rambles on for sometime on the subject and Skull just lets it wash over him as he does his best to collect himself from the experience of what had been going on, at the sight of proof of what had been happening to him.

"I'm sorry, but what?" He focuses in on the man with a frown, he couldn't have heard what he actually did, right? "Hmm, which part? The fact that in two months, some clone will 'hatch' and he'll never make the connection concerning the Eve of Judgement? That he'll start the process of cloning himself like he'd been cloned?"

"The original Checker Face has been dead for...?" Skull knows Mist Flames are a capable of a lot but the idea of a series of clones living less then a year... That each of them end up transformed and often times killed by the succeeding copy...

"Before the creation of this criminal empire composing of Soul Fire welders." The man admits and it's clear that he's doing some mental counting. "Let's see... That civilization fell to inter conflict about mid way into Julius Caesar's reign of Emperor... The survives would cut up those stones... Oh, about, three hundred years after... The Betray of Trust happened with the thirteen generation of what would become Arcobaleno... Leading to that generation and all after getting Cursed... Not sure if the Mist ever fest up to his temper getting the best of him on hearing that refusal from two of the selected candidates..."

"It sounds like that's over two thousand years, give or take." Skull decides to comment and the man blinks before looking at him. "Sure, that sounds like a decent estimate." The man agrees and the Cloud finally gets up off the ground, taking in the fact that he's got nothing covering his upper body.

"So... the pacifiers weren't always Cursed?" He asks and the man nods. "The Curse is the caster fuelled type instead of having an ending clause, which means you'd have to kill the caster or, in this case, the whole line of copies. Not that I can't get why most find it hard to kill them, the Curse affects pretty much all of humanity, after all, and the nature of Curses being what it is..."

"I am confused..." He admits and the man seems to smile in an understanding fashion. "Yea, I would assume so. Let's just say, the so call Flame system that you were used for? It's a degraded privilege system, it's purpose is to allow only a select portion of mankind access Soul Fire, it's also only allowing half of the Soul Fire aspects be available as well."

"Not that some of that other half hasn't slip out into the world, the dam as it were, has it's leaks since it took a while for them to get around to designating a group who's authorized to possess Soul Fire. Which, I'm pretty sure, you know what kind of people have been given access to it." He nods, it makes a kind of sense, in a out of left field way as to why Dying Will Flames users all seem to drift into the criminal underbelly.

"So... now what?" He asks his... Host? The man hums a bit before beginning to walk away from the sight. Skull follows after a few seconds.

"Now? Whatever you want. You're free, I really do mean it." The man explains. "People are going to forget that there ever was a Cloud Arcobaleno by the name of Skull. In fact, that Contract you sign is going to vanish and the actual person who committed those crimes is going to be receiving what they sowed."

"Unlike the others before you, you won't be spending any time transformed as you didn't commit any crimes." The man explains. "Oh, yea, I totally forgot, I never gave you a name to call me by, huh? Suna, it can be translated into Time but also into Desert. Just call me that!"

"Why not just call yourself Chronos?" He asks Suna. "Best not invoke powerful Titles, after all, you never know what you find yourself settled with. Relics of bygone eras aren't just in the form of items, someone powerful likely inspired certain myths, were the base of legends."

"Once the system is gone, it's going to be chaos and having ancient Titles waiting around for people to claim them? Not going to be helping overly much." Suna remarks with a shake of his head.

"It's lasted this long." He points out. "I might hold strong for centuries to come." Skull points out as they continue to exit out of the Iron Fort.

That provokes a chuckle from Suna for a few minutes. "Ah, yea, I didn't mention how the other half of those stones ended up, huh? I mean, the pacifiers were created from half of the stones that had been used as... Ah... Oh yea, hardware? The concept that they are whole is more... Software? Like a program?"

"Ok, other half ended up getting made into these rings. One set of rings were given the concept of Time while the other was given the concept of Parallel? The Parallel is like a balancing pole to help make it exist without swaying over and having it all collapse downward as it were..." Suna does try his best to expand on the Parallel concept and mentions these Mist Territories that make up the 'pole' that's being used to balance out the system.

It's... rather descriptive and he does find it easy enough to imagine how hard it must be to try and simplify just what this Parallel function is. They are out of the Iron Fort by the time he finally asks, "What of the Time rings?"

"Those? Oh, yea, those. Yea, Giotto's pretty much the one responsible for why this system is going to be crashing soon." Admits Suna and he blinks as he tries to wrap his head around that statement. "How?" Skull asks.

"Oh, that's simple, he cut the effect of the Time in half. The concept of Time isn't operating at its fullest. Never mind the fact that they tied it up with a Blood Seal with a set of requirements when it comes to who's allowed to take the post." Suna explains. "Families end all the time, officially documented bloodlines came be wiped out in any number of ways. The requirements for the Vongola Rings are generally, have the Second in their family tree as an ancestor and be legitimized, with documented record of tracing their connection to said man."

"Don't they need be a Sky as well?" He asks and Suna snorts. "No, as long as the descent of the Second is wearing one of the rings, it'll function. Being a Sky wasn't an issue, I doubt they ever could have coded that into the Blood Seal in any case, that's more tradition then actually how it works. It was likely hard enough coding the rings to accept the Blood Seal."

"I'm hoping that I win the pool." Suna changes the topic once they have come to an inn. "After all, I doubt he thought he needed to set up a back up Cloud."

"Eh?" He pauses ever so slightly. "You didn't do crime, remember? He likely didn't see how that Sin-Eater Contract was a threat to this age old system. He couldn't get a warning from the simulations about it going through, after all, this animal Vices doesn't register with the clones but that doesn't mean that it doesn't give warning that an Arcobaleno did something that threatens the stability of this system."

"And he just became an animal himself." Suna adds and Skull very much pauses at the thought. "And there's not going to be a Checker Face around until..." Skull trails off and Suna nods.

"Still, won't know until some point next year. Never know if there was an old back up of some kind just waiting around to come into play." Suna admits with a sigh. "You'd be surprised at how often we think it's going to come to an end only for something to pop up. After all, that system use to do a heck of a lot more then just block access of Soul Fire outside of the designated group. At least, once upon a time it did. They had to create some kind of pressure control for that dam."

Skull recovers enough of himself to continue to follow Suna up the stairs of the inn. He's found a information source and answers, there's a lot of things for him to think on, none the least of which is... What's the world going to be like if everyone has access to Dying Will Flames?

This is the End

Author's Note: Yea, no internet on my computer and I end up writing this... The idea had been kicking around in my brain since reading a story called Medicine from the Moon by Felinis, which can be found on AO3 and, well, it's rather... Well, the story possesses Body Horror tag along with You get horrific body transformation, And you get a horrific body transformation, Everyone gets a horrific body modification tags. It's written in the Grandmaster of Demonic Cultivation world and... I can't seem to not check it daily to see if there's been a new update.

Just a list of what cause which:

Envy = Rabbit

Gluttony = Snake

Greed = Magpie

Lust = Horse

Pride = Deer

Sloth = Squirrel

Wrath = Peacock

History of Divergance: Grandmaster

I don't own Grandmaster of Demonic Cultivation.

/ Y [O | T | O] Y **

There's a pair of ghostly wings upon his back when ever he gets a glimpse of his reflection from buckets of water or rain puddles, or the very rare time, a really polish panel of metal. The wings he spies are bare of feathers and the only reason he knows they are wings has to due with having seen naked bodies of various birds, generally chicken but there's been a few times he's seen duck flesh and, rarely, tiny bodies that were wild pheasants. The sight of them always cause him sorrow so he doesn't linger long to stare at them as he promised to always smile and if he stares long enough at the sight of them, then he is reminded that he's alone, that his parents aren't with him any more.

A-Ying does his best to put the sight of those ghostly, naked wings from his mind as time marches on without any head to the wishes of a single street urchin, once a beloved son of a pair of Rogue Cultivators. As autumn begins to rob the trees of their leaves is when he encounters Wu Hui, not that he knew who that was besides a well dressed person compared to the usual people he's seen living in Yiling and that it had been midday, so he'd been hoping to find something burnt or spoiled that's been tossed out. As evening nears and he managed to get some scraps, he had been wandering the alleyways to find a warm and dry place to spend the night when a hand gets placed upon his shoulder.

Yelping, A-Ying is quick to shrug the hand off, take a stumbling sprint forward with his heart beating rather fast within his chest as he moves to bring his body around to see who it was that touched him. "Little nephew, you are the child of Cangse Sanren? Wei Ying?" He blinks before nodding as he blinks rapidly to keep from crying. "I am your martial aunt, Wu Hui and I am here to offer you a place in my household as my student."

"You knew mama?" The almost six year old asks, not sure if he believes the person about them being his aunt, given that they look to be a man. The cloths don't look like ones that women would wear.

"Not personally." Wu Hui admits. "We share the same Master, although, when descending from the mountain, I choice the profession of Alchemist instead of that of a Cultivator."

"Alchemist?" A-Ying isn't sure what that entails as he gets up off the ground while sporting a slight frown. He's not sure if he should believe her.

"It's a way to use Spiritual Energy to create pills and potions, although that's not all it's limited to creating." Wu Hui explains. "It's an Art that the majority of Cultivators see as lesser as they believe that those who take it up are in it for worldly wealth."

"The Wen Sect were once the foremost Sect that counted Alchemists among its numbers and were proud too." Wu Hui states with a slight smile. "Back then, they were putting most of their time and effort into medicine, of which Alchemy is a big help in as it allows more potent medicines to be created."

"It's different now." Wu Hui admits with a slightly sad hint to her smile now. "They place more empathise on martial Arts like the Sword and Bow these days, choosing to combat threats with a blade and leave then to sheath the sword afterward and lend their aid in the aftermath towards the common-folk, be it in removing rubble, helping with attending to those injured, or just helping to perk up their spirits with telling stories or playing music."

He frowns as he does his best to think on what he's just been told. "Ok..." A-Ying isn't sure he knows how else to respond as he is aware that he's legs and feet are beginning to ache.

"So then, will you come home with me? You don't have to become an Alchemist if you wish to follow in the foot steps of your parents by becoming a Cultivator." Wu Hui states and he blinks.

"Ok." He states and begins to approach Wu Hui. "But, you don't look like an auntie, more like an uncle."

There's a soft snort from the adult. "Alchemy has been mistaken for sorcery at times." Wu Hui remarks and offers her hand. "I do go out of my way to dress and act like a man for my own reasons."

A-Ying takes her hand and asks, "Then, what should I call you when we aren't alone?" He's smart enough to know that this is a secret after all.

"Master Wu will do, Ying-er." Wu Hui tells him as they leave the alleyway.

His body is covered in sweat as he's been on his knees for some time without any thing covering his upper body. Wei Ying can only imagine what the skin of his back looks like at this point as he recalls the lumps near his shoulder blades and how the skin over them plus around them were rather discolored. Wu Hui had offered to help him with getting his wings out but he had refused, wanting them to come out naturally on their own.

A year ago, when he'd been eleven, Wu Hui had informed him of the changes that he'd been noticing concerning his back and the odd behavior of his Spiritual Veins. Wei Ying winces at as his fledgling wings try to stretch out under layers of, now useless flesh, and skin, wondering if, perhaps, he should have chosen to allow his Master to his wings come out by slicing into the area, shallowly at that. Yet, he wanted to go through with doing it without aid besides some medicine balm to cool the skin on his back.

Falling forward and having his forehead resting on the chilly stone floor that usually serves as a secure storage room to store priceless alchemic ingredients. Some of which are stored in specially created crates sporting time halting Spirit Arrays, to keep them fresh as the day they'd been put into the crates. It's been emptied, it would be the easiest room to clean up after his wings breaking through as they'd just need to use water directing Spirit Arrays to wash the resulting mess of blood and the fleshy bits that will be falling out of him.

He can feel his fledgling wings stop trying to stretch out to their fullest and he finds himself panting as his hands move to engulf his head. His hair is in a tight bun with a bit of cloth helping to secure his hair so it doesn't fall out. It takes him a few minutes before he's gathered up his strength and can feel the itch of his wings wanting to stretch out once more.

Moving more onto his kneeling legs, his bum is on the heels of his feet with his hands gently moving up and down on the thin pair of pants. Moving his upper body into a proper pose, Wei Ying closes his eyes as he focuses on the feeling of Qi that's circulating within his Spiritual Veins. Doing his best to focus on the more alive Spiritual Veins on his back then the fading ones, he, again, tries to force his wings to burst through.

Grinding his teeth, he forces himself to keep breathing steadily as pain on his back slowly becomes unbearable but he just wants this over and done. Then the pain becomes more overwhelming then before and something seems to be trailing down his back as he begins to pant while curling up once more, his head getting fairly close to touching the floor once more as he reaches back to check his back, which involves twisting and causing prig pricks of pain.

Pulling a hand back, Wei Ying stares at the red that's staining his pinky and the finger next to it. It's uneven before he rubs his thumb through the blood that's on his hand. He mourns the fact that there isn't a polish metal mirror for him to look into to see the stat of his back but, he finds himself smiling at the evidence that he's getting close to having his wings come out. The feeling of liquid trailing down his back does cause his fingers to twitch as he would like to use something to wipe it off.

He's not sure how long he's been in the room but, hopefully, it won't be long before he successes in having his wings burst forth. Wei Ying tries to imagine what it'll be like, having a pair of fluffy wings on his back. He knows it'll be a week before the fluff will grow in.

"Heya Senior Xie." Murmurs Wei Ying as he greets the lesser kestrel as he reaches out with his fingers to gently stroke the breast feathers. The kestrel's left eye opens just a bit before closing upon making sure he's the only one before him.

Xie, or Senior Xie, has been with his aunt and master for over a century, the kestrel had been fed various pills to help cultivation and been exposed to an experimental Spirit Array to help speed up the creation of a Golden Core, although in non-humans, it's generally called a Spirit Core. His aunt has created many a Spirit Array for unspoken communication so that Senior Xie didn't need to manipulate his own Qi in order to voice his opinions and requests.

The kestrel doesn't react much as he begins rambling his thoughts concerning the latest news concerning which Sect the Wens had targeted for 'merger'. There's little reaction from this Senior of his but there's little hints that Senior Xie is listening to his thoughts as the red stained bird's wings would shift slightly or eyes opening to pin him with stare before staring off at the window. As he quiets down, Senior Xie places foot upon his index finger then gives it a gentle squeeze.

"Nothing for it, Shidi." Senior Xie informs him. "It's for the best that you do not join a Sect, less you get dragged into the political firestorm that's going to be happening among them."

"I know, Shixiong, I know." Wei Ying lets out a sigh as Senior Xie lets go of his finger. "I just don't like the thought that none of the other Sects seem to care about curbing the Wen's now instead of letting them gain more and more confidence along with practice against fighting their fellow Cultivators."

"It's likely they don't see it that way. That it's unlikely going to touch them, particularly the other four major Sects." His Shixiong muses to him. "They likely think that they are avoiding conflict by not confronting this trend that's going on with Wen Rouhan's current 'hobby'. It's sad that the other, smaller Sects also seem to be of the opinion that it can't happen to them. They are all looking at their own self interest and it's working in Wen Rouhan's favor."

"I only worry about the common people." He confesses, really, it's not like he's overly invested in any of the Sects, in the end, he's more investigated in what it means to be a Cultivator then being one. "If all of the Sects go to war, the usual protection for the common people won't be there. Never mind the thought of undead Cultivators wandering around without anyone giving them their rites."

"I can see it now, Rogue Cultivators getting pressed into joining a Sect one way or another." Wei Ying says with a sigh. "I know that the smart thing is to keep to my studies and leave such deep thoughts to our Master, but, it just doesn't seem right not to... But I don't want to kill another person."

"You are only fifteen, you are far too old to still think that the world revolves around you, my silly Shidi." Senior Xie remarks with a clear mental huff. "Are you a God? No? Then what makes you think you can control the actions of other people? Particularly those of the power hungry or blood thirsty?"

He feels his wings shift as he manages to not shift his body's weight. "Think of it like this, when it does come to a head, it will also come to a messy end. Whatever the aftermath is, you'll be ready to help clean up from the mess. As long as you continue with your studies and keep yourself safe from harm."

"I know it's a human trait, this worrying about the future." Remarks Senior Xie. "Just leave the future of these Sect to sort itself out. Best focus on sorting yourself out instead! I seem to recall you wish to research and investigate Resentful Energy."

Wei Ying chuckles as he feels some tension ease out of him. "Xie-shixiong is very wise, this Ying-shidi will do his best to follow through with such wisdom." He makes sure to bow very respectfully once he takes a few steps back from the perch that Senior Xie is resting upon.

"Brat." Senior Xie states at the sight of him bowing. "Now then, how's your feathers coming along?"

Wei Ying smiles at the change of subject and is happy to chat about the few feathers that are starting to grow as the now dark gray fluff falls off. By the time he's twenty, he'll have adult feathers and coloring but, until then, he's going to have bright plumage along with very long, broader feathers, it's shows just how young he is and is suppose to make it easier for his seniors to spot him easier. The few feathers coming seem to be a bright teal. His wings have grown larger then they had when they burst out of his back and he doesn't feel their weight anymore or are overly aware of them against his back.

The ending of the Sunshot Campaign was and wasn't that surprising, then again, Wei Ying had been fairly deep in studying how Resentful Energy compares to Spiritual Energy along with aiding in creating plenty of various medicines and the odd, specific order. Under Senior Xie's watch, he'd gone around to help when the problems of a supernatural nature went pass a certain point and none of the Sect Cultivators seem incline to deal with said problems. Then, when his Shishu came down from the mountain, he had in partner as Xiao Xingchen, who had been the third who descended down to join the Cultivator Society.

The number problems that went unattended during the war cost many lives of common people, mostly small and/or isolated villages, never mind those places that had been near various battle fields. Even those of noble birth outside of the Cultivator Society had been getting nervous about the idea of a Cultivation Sect raising to power, to simply take the position of Emperor and there would be nothing that they could do about it, fearing for the lives of their families and their livelihoods. So, yes, the collection of three major Sects that once made up the five major Sects received a lot of side funding and children, typically third sons or daughters and such, to train in their ways so they might help boost their number in the war.

With the end of the war, his Shishu has decide to make his presence more well known along with promising to keep silent about Master Wu and concerning Wei Ying himself. All that really meant has to do with not consuming Disguise Pills and letting his wings be seen. His Shishu's wings are modeled off of an golden eagle, even in coloring. The coloring is rather at odds of the usual cloths his Shishu prefers to wear, which is white, Wei Ying wonders how many will almost mistake Xiao Xingchen for a Lan or some other Sect that prefers to wear primarily white cloths as a Sect uniform.

So, yes, the first thing he thinks of upon seeing the white uniform in the crowd was of his Shishu, only upon noticing the lack of dark golden wings along with none of the usual black upon the cloths does it register that the Cultivator he called out a greeting to was a stranger. The headband that's tied up on the forehead means that the man is a member of the Gusu Lan Sect. So, yes, he did stop trying to get through the crowds to approach the man and calls out an apology about mistaking him for someone he knows, Wei Ying turns his back on the rather beautiful man and returns to moving the crates filled with liquor into the shop, he'll take it to the cellar once it's all within the building.

With the seventh crate in the building, he hears the store front door open. Wei Ying heads to the front, he doesn't find his Shimei, one Mu Liling attending the counter. He does blink at the sight of that Lan Cultivator for a second before putting on a polite smile. "Greeting Respectful Cultivator! What can this humble one help you with this day?"

Golden hazel eyes seem to look coolly at him before his eyes flicker at the shelf behind him. While he does have the urge to tease the stern looking man, Wei Ying easily suppresses the urge. Just because the Sunshot Campaign is over doesn't mean it's safe to let down ones guard, particularly given that Master Wu has been in operation for a few decades and his aunt hasn't aged much in that time. Like Cultivators, Alchemists seek Immortality, the difference, in the minds of the non-trained populace, is that one can pay an Alchemist for the Elixir of Life, if they have enough money.

The Elixir of Life can only be utilized by those that have trained to wield Qi. Those that have not been trained to use Qi, drinking the Elixir won't be of any benefit to the majority of them. Then there's the rare few that could end up running into negative issue with drinking it. While there are ways to diluting the Elixir could grant the untrained an extra decade or less to their life span, that's all it could provide and that's generally not the answer or result that many want.

It's likely why there's so many different ways to disguise oneself viva pills, elixirs, and potions. So that they can evade the general ire of the world at large who would allow their envy and jealousy to overwhelm them, killing said Alchemist and burning any research or Alchemist manuals they possess as well. It's a sad that none of them would accept the truth of why the Elixir of Life can not be utilized by the majority of the world at large. It's a harrowing lesson concerning the nature of people and how truth is easily discarded if it doesn't fit in the world view of the people.

The Lan Cultivator doesn't seem to be incline to speaking and after a bit, Wei Ying breaks the silence, "Master Wu is a master of his craft. We have many kinds of pills that could aid in Cultivation! Or is it that you are looking to commission a special perfume for a young maiden?" He wonders about the woman who'd have catch this man's attention, Is it a love match? Or a political one?

There's a slight stiffening of the shoulders and the lips seem to frown a touch. "Many apologies Honorable Cultivator! I just can not see how such a handsome man as yourself does not have a special someone in their life!" He admits. "Given the end of conflicts among the Sects, it just seems that there would be many match makers being called upon to help speed up the recovery of the various Sects!"

He can see that he's not helping his case in anyway, so he changes the topic. Turning his back, it takes him five seconds to pick a jar off the shelf, the label upon the jar declares that the pills within are Marrow Cleansing Pills. Wei Ying finds himself rambling about what they do and about his own efforts to make acceptable pills.

"You are an Alchemist?" The Lan Cultivator inquires as he keeps himself from diverting into personal stories, keeping to his effort in learning pill recipes at this point. It takes him a second to realize that yes, the man had indeed spoken.

Wei Ying blinks before beaming at the man, "Well, I've had training in that profession. I'm not sure if it's how I see myself as fine Spirit Arrays to be rather interesting."

"I kind of want to see if I can't do something with the Qiankun bag Spirit Array! Like, make a tent that's larger in the inside! Or apply it to a field?" He muses, he knows that his aunt has figured out how to apply it to room made out of stone. She maintains that she's helping him by not just teaching him that Spirit Array, that he needs to learn to use what she's taught him in order to work out how he could go about doing it his way.

He's had success when it comes to creating an effect on his back for his wings. Which, he's rather proud of and had shared with his Shishu, so that the man could modify his own cloths if he has need to hide or protect his wings. It's unlikely that this particular discovery is his alone, given how his various aunts and uncles have managed to stay hidden among the common people.

After all, everyone knows that Boashan Sanren has wings, which are that of a male mandarin duck at that, and all of her students end up with wings as well, Wu Hui's own wings are that of a common kingfisher. Then again, they are only aware of Yanling Daoren, Cangse Sanren, and, recently, his Shishu, Xiao Xingchen have descended down from the mountain. It's unlikely they need to know of those other students that have descended from the mountain and chose different profession then that of Cultivator, that they pick out personal disciplines that have the potential to do so, of which his Shimei is in the process of doing, nor do they know about said students' own children are also capable of growing their own wings if nurtured correctly, like how he grew his azure winged magpie style wings.

Silence hang between them once more and Wei Ying take the jar of pills off the counter, he puts it back on the shelf. With his back to the Cultivator, he does his best to regain his composure. He isn't sure why he's been so free in his manners towards the Lan Cultivator, regardless how handsome he finds the other, he's had years of experience of keeping himself from talking about himself when he's with customers. As he turns around to regard the Cultivator with a polite and friendly smile.

"So..." He trails off as he considers a safe topic to inquire about. Wei Ying had heard about the burning of the Cloud Recesses that marked the one of reasons that started up the Sunshot Campaign. How many years has it been since that fire? He wonders while the Cultivator's gaze sweeps the shelf beyond him, it takes him a few seconds to realize where on the shelf the Lan is staring at.

A quick flicker of his eyes out of the corner of his eyes has him confirming that Shimei's study material resting on the shelf, in clear view for customers to see. "It seems my junior forgot to take her books with her." He walks over and collects the three manuals from the shelf. "Not for sale, although if you would like copies of beginner Alchemist tomes, perhaps you should check out your Sect's infamous library? Although, the editions you have might be out of date by... Some decades?" He ventures to remark, given that he's not sure if any of the Sects ever keep up with Alchemist teachings.

There's a slight hum from the Cultivator and it's then that he realizes that they hadn't exchange names. "Ah, forgive me but I'm Wei Ying!"

He introduces himself with a beaming smile and the air seems to change, like it's now charged.

"Wei... Ying." The Cultivator says. "Wei Wuxian."

His spine stiffens upon being called Wei Wuxian as a beginning of a headache sets in. "Lan... Zhan?" He inquires in a puzzle tone. "Lan Wangji." Then in a fond voice, "Hanguang-Jun." There's a bubbling of emotions swirling within him and impressions of a life never lived.

Tears threaten to fall as he begins to ramble, "I guess it work, huh? Only, things didn't play out like they did... I don't even have crow wings this time! Can you believe that?"

At some point, he's moved out from behind the counter and is hugging his former... future husband. It's then that he notices how much taller he is, even compared to when he'd been in his own body. It's not long before they are kissing and their hands wander about one anothers' body. It's when a throaty cough for the fourth time causes them to recall where they are and that they were suppose to be stranger to one another.

"You left your post at the counter, Shimei." He states to the young teenager. "Never mind that your books were on the shelf."

"You... You... Shixiong!" The thirteen year old exclaims with both out rage and likely in embarrassment of what she just witnessed.

He counters with a, "Shimei!" It's not long before he has a teasing smile and can feel the urge to chuckle.

"I'm telling Shifu about this!" And with that, Mu Liling stumps back into the backroom, likely going up the stairs to fetch their mutual Master. Once more, the books are left behind, although, in fairness, she hadn't been near them in the first place.

"My martial aunt, Wu Hui." He explains before he gives his Lan Wangji a mischievous smile. "I need to introduce you to Senior Xie too!"

There's a clear questioning look in Lan Wangji gaze about both. "It seems that in this world, there's a number of students who descended from the mountain, only, they pursued other walks of life instead of that of a Cultivator." He explains. "Auntie Wu chose to posse as an Alchemist but she's been teaching me a lot more besides that."

Comparing his current life under Aunt Wu's care and lessons verse his previous life with Madame Yu, Uncle Jiang, and lessons at the Yunmeng Sect... He finds that, while guilt does eat at him, his preference between the two would be with his aunt's care, that there's something very appealing about a life where he wasn't the cause of marital issues between Madame Yu and Uncle Jiang. "There's something comforting to know... I wasn't the cause of the Wen's burning down Yunmeng Sect." He confesses.

"Not Wei Ying's fault." Lan Wangji states calmly. "Wasn't then either."

He's pretty sure that, given a few days, he'll have sorted himself out more and he'd find that his... future husband to be right. "The war went on far longer then it did." He reflects, three years verse nine years, it's a rather big difference.

"Wei Ying." His Lan Wangji states softly and pulls him in for a hug. "Was not involved."

Letting out a sigh, Wei Wuxian allows himself to be cuddled to Lan Wangji's chest. That's how his aunt and Shimei finds them in. "And this gentleman is?" Master Wu inquires after a minute had passed while Mu Liling seems slightly smug but also uncomfortable.

"Lan Zhan! Courtesy name Lan Wangji." He introduces once he's left his future husband's arms, giving a respectful bow at his aunt. "Err... It's complicated... We were married and only just meet in this life just now?"

There's a slight look of thoughtfulness before Master Wu gestures for them to follow. "Mu Liling, please hide your study material. We are not book sellers." With that, his Shimei murmurs apologies and heads for the counter to put the books behind the counter.

Wei Wuxian takes his time when it comes to taking off his top cloths. Having his wings folded upon before taking it off, his eyes glue to his husband's face as he slowly reveals his wings. Once the last of it falls to the ground behind him, he stretches his wings, ensuring that the wings come into a hug so he can show off his plumage, he's rather happy at how much more color there is on display then his previous set of wings, that had been fair smaller, the feathers in a poor state, and they never felt a part of him, he'd always been aware of their weight at his back, that he'd been different compared to his martial siblings, from all of the Cultivators that make up the Sects.

Even when they grew when he'd been given Mo Xuanyu's body and had a bit more experience with the process, they had been about the same size as before. Although, with Lan Wangji's efforts, his feathers had been far healthier and better groomed. He'd still be self conscious about them and about a particular ability that popped up once the feathers had come in, the ability to see ghostly wings at the backs of children and some teens, be they count among the common folk or Sects, it had been something he'd written off as an after effect of Mo Xuanyu's body becoming his.

"Wei Ying." Lan Wangji murmurs with a great deal of fondness and a ghost of a smile gracing his lips. Moving the wing to show off their length and show the underside, he moves forward and then, holding his husband close, bring the wings down and wrap them about his husband's shoulders and resting upon the back.

"Lan Zhan." He murmurs before he kisses his husband. It's not long before their hands wander about one the other's body. Soon enough, Lan Wangji picks him up and he uses his wings to help steady him while he laughs as he's carried to their bed.

"My my, so eager, eh Lan-Gege?" Wei Wuxian says in a teasing tone. All he gets is a hum in agreement and a few kisses about his neck and collarbone.

It's not long before they move on from being groping and kisses. There's something about the fact that they both weren't scarred from their previous experiences that also sends a thrill through him as his feels Lan Wangji's back and find it bare of the scars, never mind that there isn't a brand on either of their chests

Ending it Here

Author's Note:

So, yea, there was an accident involving a supposed Time Traveling Spirit Array only, it sent their souls to a different reality where they are reborn as themselves. Only in this dimension, things went differently, particularly regards to the number of people that left Boashan Sanren's mountain, only, they didn't get involve with the Sects, just the cannon three. Hence, when Cangse Sanren died, it wasn't Jiang Fengmian the one who'd take Wei Ying in nor did Wei Ying spend years as a street urchin either, just a few months.

I also took liberties when it came to Alchemy and the Elixir of Life that grants Immortality. That only those that have trained to use Qi was able to benefit from the elixir, that it also means that there are other kinds of Alchemic concoctions that could be fully utilized by those trained in Alchemy, while those trained in Qi could gain some benefit but not the full benefit.

I also figured that the Sunshot Campaign would be fought for longer if Wei Ying wasn't around being a Necromancer and I also figured that the common people would become invested who won. I think that those nobles would also realize that their way of life was under threat as Wen Rouhan didn't care about whether or not he kills non-Cultivators or toss them into his torture dungeons to kill in a drawn out matter.

The Lanling Jin Sect, under the management of Jin Guangshan, played at trying to have a foot in both sides, but it's also what got him killed five years into the Sunshot Campaign and saw Jin Zixuan ascend to leadership, which saw them finally join the other three major Sects. Not sure if he did marry Jiang Yanli though or that Jiang Cheng lost his Golden Core during the attack on Yunmeng Jiang Sect, never mind if both Madame Yu or Jiang Fengmian died during that attack either.

Concerning the marital problems between Madame Yu and Jiang Fengmian, yea, they still existed but that's because Wei Ying was never the true source of the trouble of their marriage. Adults involving children or blaming them for the actions of grown adults... It was never any of the kids' faults for their problems but, that didn't spare them. So, yes, Jiang Cheng does still have an inferiority complex, it's just that it's not focused on Wei Wuxian as he wasn't around to be compared against. The Wens also didn't use Wei Wuxian as an excuse for their attack on their Sect.

A Gift Beyond Compare: Grandmaster

I don't own Grandmaster of Demonic Cultivation.

! i - v T v - i !

Coming out of the Burial Mounds, Wei Wuxian's herald is a black bird, one might mistake it for a crow from afar but it was far too large once one sees it upon the Demonic Cultivator's left forearm and the beak sports the hook of a predator. Bright crimson eyes that glow the same shade as the infamous mischief maker often sports when making use of his new path's energy. Few can find it within themselves to match the bird's gaze for long, for they can not help but feel unease concerning the bird's presence.

Gossip spreads like fire that consumes dry tinder. Murmurs of its origins range from some ghost fusing with a carving that Wei Wuxian made and due to a foul ritual, the wood has become flesh... How it maintains the transformation is widely discussed. There's others who suggest that it hatched from a crow's egg that's been absorbing Resentful Energy for decades, waiting for the right person to hatch for, one who would be willing to feed it's infant form at the expense of that person's own life, their blood, or, perhaps, their very own Golden Core.

None have felt confident enough to approach the subject straight with the mercurial Cultivator concerning the monstrous bird. Nor would they likely trust any answer that the man would offer, given how they might not get the truth out of the man. It's clear, though, that there's something between the bird and the man, some kind of agreement or binding, for, there are many a times that Wei Wuxian would stare into that bird's crimson eyes without seeming to be aware of others.

Lan Wangji isn't sure what to make of the presence of the bird, after all, it's not as though Wei Wuxian has a prominent bloodline with a Family Guardian nor is he the heir of his Sect, which is the Guardian of both, the Sect and the main line, which is a Spirit Kingfisher. The bird with Wei Wuxian is far too fleshy, too much mortal to be a Spiritual Beast. The bird has been seen attacking and being attacked during battle, which isn't proper, most of the Spiritual Beasts appear on the battlefield to lift the moral of their charges, helping to keep their spirits up. They do not attack enemy Cultivators, nor do they get harmed upon the battle field.

The Spirit Crane that watches over the main bloodline of the Lan Clan is also the one that watches over the Sect as a whole, is transparent with the feathers seemingly made out of clouds as it seems that the edge of the feathers seem to become clouds, these clouds seem to float away, vanishing away less then three centimeters from the Spirit Crane. The body is primarily white but instead of sporting red, the Spiritual Beast sports a very particular shade of blue.

Where the Crane is, generally, is where his brother is. According to Lan Xichen, the Crane appeared during the Full Moon after he'd been on the run, after the burning of their home. The Crane is not the only Guardian to become manifest, then again, given the danger that the Wens represent, there were many. There had been sightings, back when the Wens had been focusing on the smaller Sects but few of those Sects' Guardian had been very powerful.

The only relief that the Sects find in the manifestation of so many Guardians is that the Wens' own, which is a Spirit Tiger, one said to be black as coal with bright red stripes, has yet to descend to the Mortal Realm. If the gossip isn't cycling over the various rumors concerning Wei Wuxian's black bird, then speculation circles around the topic of Sect Guardians, those that have descended and those who have yet too, and whether there will be ascension for new Spirit Beasts as bloodline Guardians as various Cultivators prove themselves as worthy of such attention, of such note.

The black bird that accompanies Wei Wuxian is an unknown and Lan Wangji isn't sure what he should feel towards the bird. Envy, perhaps, for being at the other's side so easily. Concern, as the very presence of the bird is gaining negative attention. Relief, that, at least, Wei Wuxian isn't alone. Fear, that, there might be truth to the idea that Wei Wuxian has made a deal with a Monster of some sort, that the price will see the dead of Wei Wuxian once this war has been won.

Catching a glimpse of the man in question, Lan Wangji notices that, yet again, Wei Wuxian doesn't have his Suibian with him. The sight of the dizi that's hanging there instead, his gaze travels up to the man's face before trying to make sense how the bird can be carried so easily upon Wei Wuxian's left shoulder. He gets a headache just looking at the bird as he tries to make sense of how something so big can so easily fit on the shoulder space.

The bird seems to notice him staring and he does his best not to look at the bird, feeling the gaze of the bird upon him regardless, focusing on Wei Wuxian as the other walks through the camp, heading for the woods. A mass of whispers surge around him once they believe Wei Wuxian is out of ear shot. The topic has to do with what business Wei Wuxian has or if there had been another argument between Sect Leader Jiang Wanyin and his martial brother.

An ethereal brightly colored Kingfisher darts towards the tent that Wei Wuxian had exited, confirming that Jiang Wanyin had been speaking with Wei Wuxian. It's not long before murmurs circle around what they'd been arguing about before Wei Wuxian's leaving the tent. He's unsure what he should do, follow after Wei Wuxian? Or try and get answers from Jiang Wanyin about what had been discussed.

He reminds himself that he has no grounds to interfere with Jiang Sect business or relationships. So, he considers his reasons for being at this portion of the camp and then, heads back to the Lan portion. He'd come here mostly to see Wei Wuxian.

As he stands in the cave that Wei Wuxian is now living within, Lan Wangji wasn't expecting to be addressed. "You will regret it, you know. If you do not learnt to speak the words you wish to say to him."

Stiffening, he finds the black bird now perched near him, he hadn't heard the tail-tale wing beats or felt the air alter like when the other Spirit Beasts move about. "Time is running out and it's will not belong before they find a way to lure Ying-er to walk the trapped laden path. He will be caught, for they have had the time and resources to create so many of them." The black bird states in an almost matter of fact way.

"Ridicules." Lan Wangji states firmly, doing his best to believe that reply but, finds that, in his heart of hearts, that it confirms his fears. His thoughts stray to A-Yuan and recalls the lunch they'd had recently.

"You have seen Hei Taiyang just moments ago." The bird states simply and he is slightly startled at how easily this bird says the name of the Spirit Tiger of the Wens. He had seen another two Spirit Guardians along side the Tiger Spirit as well, a green furred Stag and another had been pale blue winged Moth. "You should know by now why Guardians descend to the Mortal Realm."

He recall having seen the Crane ascend at the head of the other Lan Guardian of various bloodlines within the Sect follow after. The day of but before news of Wen Ruohan's death had spread to them. The threat of the Wens ended that day and all of the Guardian Spirits had ascended.

There had been much celebration and the fact that Wei Wuxian's bird remains only reignited the gossip and theories surrounding it. Which turned to consider what should be done with the matter of Wei Wuxian's Demonic Path. His heart speeds up at the thought of a future without Wei Wuxian. "Will help." He states.

"Can you kill human envy?" The bird inquires with a hint of bemusement. "No, you can't win. If it were so simple, Ying-er wouldn't be living here." The bird adds, "If the Sects were interested in doing what's right, then Ying-er would not have been the one these Wens look towards for safety." The bird's head turns to face out of the cave.

He thought he heard a hint of sorrow. As Lan Wangji walks to stand next to the bird, what he sees is a specter of... something. There's no sound to the vision that he witnesses and the attackers' uniforms are ever shifting, but it's clear that all Sects were among the attackers. The dirt huts are being destroyed and the Wens killed by Cultivator blades. Fire burning the fields, it's a heart wrenching vision that, after a few blinks, fades.

"What Righteousness they will display." There's scour in the bird's tone. "What grand victory they will think they achieved."

"Wei Wuxian?" He asks after and the bird turns to regard him with crimson gaze. "Death. And, perhaps, Rebirth."

"He is my Chosen Candidate." The Phoenix states and it should be an earth shattering revelation but Lan Wangji is far more concerned with the certainty that this Fallen Spirit says is his beloved's fate. "It depends on how he faces his death." Adds the Phoenix that has long since fallen from it's previous grace and position of power.

It's not long before the man in question is coming up the path with A-Yuan clinging to his robes while Wei Wuxian carries a tray with a tea pot and cups. "Lan Zhan! I told you I was coming with tea! Didn't I tell you to made yourself at home?" There's a slight pout and he merely hums in agreement with that statement, for that is what Wei Wuxian had requested of him.

As he does his best to recover from the revelation of a future that is coming, Lan Wangji makes plans to try and save Wei Wuxian. He will do his best to protect the man he loves, he does his best to take in Wei Wuxian's everything. Lan Wangji is his father's son, in the end, all he can do is hope that his efforts will be enough, even if he's setting himself up against the very Heavens themselves.

It is the Phoenix that guides him to the tree where A-Yuan rests. In the toddler's hands is a crimson ribbon and a black feather that almost seems to be made out of shadow and Resentment. As he picks up the child, he finds the Stag and the Tiger seemingly appearing from out of no where. Both look so faded, but their gaze is upon A-Yuan.

"He will not remember his time here." The Stag states in a soft, wistful tone. "He is still ours, when he is grown, you will tell him of us, of what happened here." The Tiger orders at Lan Wangji while the gaze doesn't move at all from the feverish A-Yuan.

There is not much he can do besides nod in acknowledgement. "Wen Ning still exists." The Stag adds and that startles him, particularly as the Stag gives him a Look before stepping forward, the nose touches A-Yuan's forehead before the Stag vanishes in a green mist. "Justice, Vengeance... How similar they are, in the end." Huffs the Tiger before stepping forward and licking A-Yuan's from the tip of his nose to his brow, then vanishing away as ash being carried upon the wind.

"I have strength enough to get you out of this place." Says the Phoenix. "The rest of the way, I leave to you, Lan Zhan."

Then, the Phoenix leaps onto his shoulders and as the wings cover him, there's a dizzying sensation. As the wings move back and the weight upon his shoulders fades away, Lan Wangji takes a few seconds to orient himself. His back is oddly numb as he moves to stand up, it's not long before he is flying back to the Cloud Recesses with A-Yuan held close to his chest.

His brother and uncle are who waiting for him at the Gate. Lan Wangji stands as straight after he gently takes the red ribbon from the toddler's hands, the feather has become something rather mundane, it's then that he can find the strength from within to confront the pair. As calm and collected as he can, projecting a finality into his voice, he declares at the pair but also to the Sect that birthed him, raised him, and punished him, "This is A-Yuan. He is my son."

Then he begins walking pass the pair, for there's a storm of emotions that rage within his being. Lan Wangji is feeling far too much right now, there's so many emotions that its hard for him to keep them all straight, so he resorts to being silent. There's so many things he wishes he could say, to shout but, in the end, he can't help but remember that conversation he had, back when he had lunch with A-Yuan and Wei Wuxian.

He very much regrets having been too late to speak the words of his heart, of his feelings to Wei Wuxian, for it seems he had, in the end, pick the wrong time to spoken them. Wei Wuxian hadn't been in his right mind and he regrets allowing himself to be removed from his beloved's side. Lan Wangji isn't sure if the next time he encounters Wei Wuxian if it'll be the incarnation he's familiar with or if it'll be someone different, for to be reincarnated, they drink the tea before reentering the cycle.

! i - v T v - i !

As he comes to, Guiwang let's out a sigh and open his eyes. Finding that he's curled up, he begins to try and stretch his body, but it's hard as it seems as though he's trapped in something. He begins to feel alarm at this and thus begins to thrash about, to break out of this trap.

Something cracks and instinctively, his nose towards the spot. It takes much shoving to get his nose out but the fresh air tickles his sensitive nose. Guiwang takes some time to try and work out how he got himself in this position. He'd been... Human, a man born under the name of Wei Ying, courtesy name of Wei Wuxian.

The memories aren't that sharp but then, just causing that crack exhausted him. Feeling tired but still safe, Guiwang falls asleep. It's the gentle tap upon his nose that startles Guiwang awake and pulls his snout back for a few minutes as he tries to make sense of his current predicament.

Feeling energize from his restful sleep, Guiwang focuses on making that crack larger. Using his fore-hooves to beat on spot, his efforts are rather clumsy but then, he's not even a new born just yet, so, of course he's clumsy. Still, having a hoof break through causes him to yelp in startlement of this happening. It takes him sometime to recover and he sways the hoof a bit before pulling it back.

He pushes his snout at the hole and continues to press until he manages to get most of his snout through. Then he yawns but is intent to get his head out before taking a break. It's hard and he's had to pull back to once more stomp his fore-hooves at the edges of the hole. There's light now, coming into the space from the outside.

With the hole much bigger, Guiwang manages to poke most of his head out, there's only one ear out and it takes a bit for his eyes to adjust to the world beyond the egg. There's a trio gathered around, he knows Hei Taiyang and Taixian Senlin from when he'd been Wei Wuxian. It's the Spirit Crane that he doesn't really know personally, of yes, from his previous life. Yindao Huoyan hadn't spoken much about the Spiritual Heavens nor about her time there.

"Wei Ying." And he snorts before correcting the trio, "Guiwang now." His voice is young and soft sounding, which causes him to huff while Hei Taiyang cuffs in a chuckle.

"A Qilin." Murmurs Taixian Senlin with a hint of disbelief upon examining him and checking his meridians with a gentle touch of an antler to his stubby horn upon his forehead. He yawns as best as he can, given that his whole head still isn't fully out of the egg.

"I imagine Yidao Huoyan would be proud." Comments the Crane, which he's fairly sure if the Spirit Crane of the Lan Sect. Still, he's young and it had taken a lot of effort to get his head out of the egg.

"Who you?" Guiwang inquires as he tries to fight off the urge to sleep. "I am Yun Zhinan, the Guardian Spirit of the Lan An's blood line."

With one last yawn, Guiwang allows sleep to overtake him. With Hei Taiyang, Taixian Senlin, and Yun Zhinan watching over him.

Scales of shades of red, furry mane and tail being golden, bright blue eyes, black hooves, and a silver antler like horn. Head takes after a bull, the antler horn growing from his brow, there's a beginning of a mane at the point between between his ears, the neck will one day be hidden by the said mane that comes to the end at the front by his shoulders but for now comes across as a horse's mane. His body takes after that of a stag with the hooves of one as well, about his hooves, his forelimbs sport feathery fur growing from the back elbow down the back of the leg but begins to circle around his forelimbs near the hoof. His back legs are beginning to sport the same, at the moment, the fur mostly covers the back of his legs with it primarily seen when it's circling where his hooves are. His tail is like a lions with only the final fourth of its length sporting the fur that's going to be doing its best to grow about as long as a horse's own or, perhaps, like a donkey's.

Guiwang is certain that it's been a decade since he hatched out of that Spirit Egg and he's still considered a child by the standards of the world he finds himself living within. Although he does have his memories of having lived as Wei Wuxian, there isn't as much weight to them, it's kind of freeing, really. If there's been cases like his in the past, the lack of written records ensures that such cases have been lost to time.

It's something that's bemusing and a bit irksome, in Guiwang's opinion. It's also rather understandable as well, given the lack of hands among the various Spirits, be they Guardian Spirits with ties to the Mortal Realm or those without such ties. His own classification is confusing as he does have a proper name, one that only Guardian Spirits receive but, he hasn't step foot onto the Mortal Realm since his hatching.

Then again , Guiwang muses to himself, there are a few and fairly minor shrines to the Yiling Patriarch. The number of which seem to reach nearly a dozen at once before the number decreased, likely due to them getting destroyed, and then there's the attempts at Summoning his ghost, either by Rituals, Arrays, or Musical cultivation.

Of course the prayers he gets from those who visit said places aren't ones he's able to answer, after all, he's only now getting his Spiritual Foundation to form up. It's nothing he can rush either, unlike when he'd been a man, Qi Devastation is different as a Spirit. Among Spirits, it causes age regression in both appearance and in behavior, if it's major, the Spirit ends up in hibernation until their bodies settle down.

Given his age, any Qi Devastation he would experience would be the hibernation one as he's far too young for the age regression to affect him. So, seeing as he doesn't want to sleep for a few years, Guiwang has done his best to be careful when he's learning, or is it relearning, how to pull in Qi and have it move throughout his meridians. It'll take decades before his being will be ready for him to start pooling Qi permanently in his body to create the Spirit Beast equivalent of a Golden Core.

Realizing that he's not really meditating, he does his best to banish contemplation of any thoughts besides feeling out his Qi. He's not sure how much timed passed before he's whole being gets a giant sensation of a yank. Guiwang can't help yelping and then moving onto a side as he tries to calm his breathing, which has sped up. Then, there's another yank and it hurts him so much that for a bit, his vision goes black with a ringing in his ears.

The sensation returns and there's not much he can do as he's already off kilter from the first yank on his being. There's rhythm to it and it wears on him as he's not sure he's powerful enough to survive this assault upon his being. Unsure of when it finally happens but there's this sense of falling, of being deaf and blind to everything.

Then, there's light, it's blinding to his eyes after having experienced so much darkness. Guiwang twists his head and body just so, allowing him to see a village that he's falling almost towards. Time is an odd thing for him as it seems to go so slow and yet, before he knows it, he's slamming through a roof of some small building, landing on a warm body that's likely a mortal given there's clothing involved.

They are a tangle of limbs, clothing, and hair. "Watch it!" Complains his summoner and he's sighs because his limbs feel far too weighty along with there's a lack of something around him, something that had been far more abundant in the Spirit Realm.

There's a rush of feet out beyond the tiny building along with shouts. By the time Guiwang is standing on his own hooves, he gets a look at his summoner, who's face is painted like a hanged ghost, which is bewildering while the young boy? Young man? Either way, his summoner seems to be at a loss at the sight of him. The mortal, his summoner, is fairly tall... Or I'm just smaller.

Yip, smaller, after all, I am fairly young for a Qilin. Guiwang decides as he lifts his head a bit more in hopes of seeing pass his summoner to the mortals at the door. "You summoned a Monster?! You ungrateful wretch!" A voice yells and it's then that his summoner realizes that they have company.

He's not overly impressed by the person that is attached to that voice, after all, he's not a Monster, he's a Spirit, a Qilin and for another, he's not sure that the mortal has much room to be speaking about who's a Monster given the mortal's overlapping looks. It takes him a bit to realize that no, the mortal isn't that deformed, well, not physically, he's seeing the degradation of the mortal's 'soul' due to unrepentant crimes and a reflection of the mortal's morality.

Taking a look around, he realizes that there's a bit more as to why he's seeing it, as there's cuts on his summoner's arms and looking down, there's a blood created Array. Guiwang does his best to puzzle out how he'd been Summoned and the conclusion he reaches by the time a group of Lan Disciplines arrive is that his summoner had attempted to sacrifice his body to an evil ghoul, likely wanting the ghoul to kill his enemies in order to truly take possession of the body, the soul of the summoner scattered to the four direction for a time, which would take centuries before the soul would pull itself together to reenter the Reincarnation Cycle in such a way that it might as well register as a New Soul from the experience. And that's why I'm seeing that overlap despite my age.

There's an argument over what to do about him and Guiwang can't help but snort, for all that he's rather physical at this point, he's still not something that can be easily killed with a swing of a Cultivator's sword. Young as he is, he's pretty much immune to most methods of killing, at most, they could try and Seal him away, but that would only result in him getting set free once a Guardian Spirit intervenes upon the matter, after all, he's just a child, might as well be a baby when compared to most Guardian Spirits. So there's really nothing for him to be overly concerned about this, in fact, given that at least one of the Lan Juniors seems to be of the main line, it's likely that Yun Zhinan will be alerted to his predicament soon enough.

"Well... what do we do now?" Asks one of the Lans towards the one sporting the main line forehead ribbon after silence descending now that they've managed to get the target and co away from the shack.

"I guess we send for help." Admits that one. "It's not registering on the compass, right?"

There's an agreed hum from the one of the Lans and he finds himself rather curious about what compass they're talking about. "Just what were you trying to do? To, you know, end up with... That!" The more outspoken Lan asks of his summoner.

"It wasn't... I didn't... I just wanted everything to end!" It's clear that things haven't gone as his summoner has planned but the Lan juniors seem rather startled by that out burst. He can smell the depression rolling off of the older, yet younger man.

He gingerly walks over, nudging the summoner with his nose. It takes a bit before there's a hand going through his golden mane. It's like the collection of juniors blink, look at one another before staring at him once more, like it's the first time they are seeing him.

"Is... is it a...", "A Qilin?", and "It's doesn't look right, right?" Other such murmurs circle through the crowd as his summoner doesn't pay them any mind, focusing on something Guiwang can't see. The stroking is done at a rhythm while he's getting gawked at with expressions ranging from bewilderment to awe.

Silence again descends among the Lan juniors, they all seem to be at a loss as to how deal with either his summoner, one Mo Xaunyu, and himself that none of them seem incline to try and snap the man out of his thoughts. He finds it odd that there's a weak Golden Core within Mo Xuanyu, yet he isn't part of a Sect, nor does it seem that he's a wandering rogue Cultivator either. There's something about this that just wasn't adding up.

And then Lan Wangji descends from the sky. It's then that Guiwang is very certain that things just got complicated as, well, he'd thought a heck of a lot more time had passed during his incubation in the Spirit Egg. None of them said it had only been a few years! The juniors greet the much older Cultivator and the junior, Lan Sizhui, gets asked to report on the situation.

Just how long have I been dead? Guiwang wonders, it seems that him stiffening at the sight of his old nemesis and comrade caused Mo Xuanyu to snap out of own thoughts. The man stammers at the sight of Lan Wangji, "Haunguang-jun!"

Golden eyes sweep over Mo Xuanyu and he feels rather self conscious all of a sudden, he kind of tries to hide behind Mo Xuanyu before Lan Wangji could look at him. It's foolish impulse, after all, Mo Xuanyu isn't that bulky nor tall enough to hide his total body. Echos of emotions washing over him, they are surprisingly hard to reign in.

A bit lost in memories from his last life, Guiwang jerks his head when he realizes that Lan Wangji is crouching down before him, almost looking at him on an equal footing. His heart is pumping and he wonders if Lan Wangji can tell who he'd been, that he remembers his life as Wei Wuxian. It's irrational, after all, he doesn't look human nor can he really speak to them, he lacks the Cultivation to do so.

"A Qilin." States Lan Wangji. "Young." Those golden eyes and face turn away from him, Guiwang shakes his head as if that would dismiss the feelings warring within him, of disappointment of Lan Wangji not looking at him and of shame of the mess he'd caused as Wei Wuxian.

He moves out of the shack, moving to where Mo Xuanyu is, wanting to stay close to the only one who might be as lost as him. Guiwang is doing his best to gain control over the pounding of his heart along with his own thoughts. He's not above seeking comfort from Mo Xuanyu, demanding it even, as it's what he craves at this point. While not his first choice, Mo Xuanyu is all he has at this point, and, perhaps, he's all Mo Xuanyu has as well.

All he knows is that Mo Xuanyu tried to shatter his soul due to the tragedy that has been his life up to this point. And part of Guiwang can very much relate to that. To just wanting it all to just... end. The Yiling Patriarch's life by the end, it had been filled with despair and so much heart break. So many died because of... Wei Wuxian and it's something that Guiwang had managed to put to the side, after all, everyone Wei Wuxian had known was surely dead, right?

So, why would Guiwang need to linger on all of Wei Wuxian's regrets? He'd been in the Spirit Realm, there's no humans there nor did there seem to be much of an issue about him recalling his last life. It's not like there's a great deal of pressure for him to get powerful as quickly as possible. Nor did it seem likely that he'd encounter Resentful Energy at the Spirit Realm either.

Feeling a certain someone's eyes on him, Guiwang looks back at Lan Wangji, who's back is towards the shack. There's something in those eyes that puzzles him but the elder Lan turns his attention towards Mo Xuanyu. "Come with me to Gusu Lan Sect." It kind of sounds like a request and Mo Xuanyu is startled by being addressed.

"Ah... Are you sure? After all, you should know why I was kicked out of Lanling." Is Mo Xuanyu's response.

"Eh? You were part of That Sect?" Guiwang can't help but exclaim out loud. He doesn't get the how of it, particularly given the clear poverty that Mo Xuanyu seems to be living in.

A few of the juniors also have their own verbal exclamations at this offer. There's a familiar hum and he tilts his head to see Mo Xuanyu's reaction and isn't disappointed by the various emotions that flicker across the face nor in the eyes. There's clear desperation but a wariness.

Then his summoner looks down at him, as if expecting him to decide for the both of them. Guiwang isn't sure why he's getting pulled into this, it's not like he's sticking around in the Mortal Realm for long. Someone is going to becoming to fetch him, so, in the end, it's Mo Xuanyu who's going to be living with this decision.

"Yes." Mo Xuanyu states in a surprisingly firm voice. Then, as if realizing how that answer sounds, the younger adult is a bundle of nerves and stammers, "That is... This unworthy one would like to accept such an offer." Complete with a proper bow of respect.

Lan Wangji gives a slight nod of acceptance before eyes flicker towards him, clearly gagging his reaction to this. Guiwang does his best to look undisturbed by any of this, after all, it's not like he's here to stay, right?

- Ending it Here -

Strength of the Pack: Grandmaster

I don't own Grandmaster of Demonic Cultivation.

Jiang Caihe watches as his Shifu, Lan Jizhi, who is the head of the Zhuanbian part of the Sect speak with Jiang Fengmian, who is the head of the rest of the Sect. His Shifu came to into his position about the same time as Jiang Fengmian's father took his own post and has yet to name his replacement, after all, it's not a post that gets past from one family generation to the next. Lan Jizhi's an old Zhuanbian, he's animal shape is that of a fox, which is held up as the most common animal shape among Zhuanbian and Jiang Caihe wouldn't be that surprised if that's his own animal shape. Or a civet.

Glancing to his right, he notices Jiang Yanli studying him. They are nearly the same age, he's the elder of them by two years, which makes her eleven to his thirteen. Unlike him, though, she's capable of Cultivating a Golden Core, but she's not very talented in that style. In fact, she's far more suited to the Cultivation practices that the Zhuanbian have developed in order to keep up with their non-transforming 'siblings' or 'cousins'.

Although, once he experiences his first transformation, it's more then likely that he'll out pace her by leaps and bounds. After all, it's been developed by Zhuanbian for Zhuanbian, but that doesn't mean that there haven't been humans who developed a style using the basics that most Zhuanbian are encouraged to learn. The Jiang Sect does, in fact, have it's own, human techniques and style, which is what Jiang Yanli is likely going to be mastering in. In the end, the Yunmeng Jiang Sect is the only Sect that has membership of both human and Zhuanbian, a hybrid of both a Zhuanbian School and a human Sect.

His Shifu's position is that of a School Header in the social circles of the Zhuanbian as he represents the Yunmeng Jiang Sect at all Zhuanbian functions and School tournaments. Most Zhuanbian Cultivation practices use the term School instead of Sect, they are also a bit more lax about who they'll accept as students compared to Sects. Not that they are more open minded then the Sects when it comes to accepting human students, but then, there are a few Schools who's membership is all human.

"Your elder siblings are Jiang Xuan and Jiang Feng?" He blinks in surprise at the question before giving a sharp nod, Jiang Caihe is the only son of Jiang Xing who can't Cultivate a Golden Core, which is a sign that he was born a Zhuanbian. "So, we're cousins then as well."

Jiang Caihe finds it rather nice that she thinks so, his parents and siblings are rather uncomfortable around him, so what relations he has with them have deteriorated to the point that he mostly addresses them by their courtesy names and him getting addressed by just his name. "I guess?" He admits, it's not like his blood relations ultimately matter among the Zhuanbian branch of the Sect, it's not like it means he's automatically going to be Lan Jizhi's successor, given his Shifu's Cultivation and the natural long life expectancy that Zhuanbian have simply due to their transformation abilities, old age isn't likely to claim his Shifu's life.

Looking away, he takes a bit to find the right words to explain things. "When it was proven that I couldn't form a Core, things changed." He admits slowly and softly as he finds himself looking up at the sky. "Out of my brothers... Out of my siblings, I am different. I'm Zhuanbian."

"It's cause problems between my parents." He admits simply as he tries not to wince at the memories of the various fights between his father and mother. "They don't have any problems with Zhuanbian, it's just... They never expected to have a child who was Zhuanbian." Jiang Caihe admits with a bitter smile and a slight shrug of his shoulders.

"It must be hard." Jiang Yanli says with clear sympathy and he glances a her before looking back at where Shifu is with Jiang

Fengmian. "With my lack of affinity with typical Cultivation, I think my mother's starting to put a lot of pressure and expectations on my little brother."

"Won't know until he gets to that age." He murmurs, Jiang Caihe had been nine years old when it had been discovered he couldn't condense the Qi within his body into the typical space where one creates a Golden Core. Some don't learn to do that until age eleven or twelve.

Given how capable he'd been with Qi manipulation, he's parents had been rather proud of his potential as a Cultivator. That he'd out strip both of his elder brothers and had a bright future as, maybe, serving as Jiang Cheng's second in command and being the eldest martial brother of the Sect. Four years and a lot has changed in that regards. Jiang Caihe thinks to himself as Madam Yu approaches with her hand maidens.

The wife of Jiang Fengmian came to Lotus Pier with certain opinions about the place of Zhuanbian in the world and didn't like the fact that Lan Jizhi stands as Jiang Fengmian's equal when it comes to matters within the Sect. So, things changed and not for the better, as far as the Zhuanbian of Lotus Pier is concerned. Yes, the other Sects never particularly liked how Jiang Sect was organized but the previous leaders had been firm about it not being any of their concern, that the head of the Zhuanbian part of the Sect should be given the same respect as the human head.

"Maybe you should go." He murmurs softly at Jiang Yanli as the hand maidens give them a look. They had been sparring earlier but then, they were given leave to take a break while Shifu noticed Jiang Fengmian's approach.

"Grandmaster Lan Jizhi hadn't dismissed me." Is her reply and Jiang Caihe gives her a particular Look before flickering his eyes towards the clearly angry Madam Yu. "She doesn't have the authority." Jiang Yanli states but he gives her a skeptical look.

He gets a look of resolution in return, so he drops the matter. "Have you read Jiang Song's treaty concerning Spirit Infusion with living plants?" Jiang Caihe asks. "I think it's not that dissimilar to how Zhuanbian can infuse dying animals that inhabit areas around Sects and Schools so that when they die, their souls linger around to be transformed into Spirits, which are then generally used as messengers or sentinels of the School."

"Wouldn't that bit a touch harder? Plant's aren't the same as beasts." Jiang Yanli reasons.

"Point." He admits. "But it's been noted that the local plant life around Sects and Schools are in possession of more Spiritual Energy then those that generally grow elsewhere."

"The lotuses do seem different then those found in Yunping City." Jiang Yanli muses. "We have more white flowers, they are larger, and look more green."

"He Xin's suggests eating their seeds to help with replenishing ones' Qi." He adds. "Which makes you wonder if we internally infuse crops with Spirit Energy if their produce would have the same tendency to do the same."

"But that might take generations to occur, after all, the lotuses of the Sect have been exposed for centuries." Jiang Yanli points out. "They had time to adjust to the local Spiritual Nature that Sects and Schools create."

Then Lin Xiu comes padding over in her animal shape, which is that of a Pallas's Cat. The size is gigantic when compared to the actual feline, which is typical for Zhuanbian. The animal shape of a Zhuanbian might be either a foot shorter or bigger then their human one. Jiang Caihe resists the urge to reach out and pet the fluffy coast that Lin Xiu sports when she comes to where they are standing, then she bows to Jiang Yanli before a shimmer then blur that signifies a transformation, then Lin Xiu moves up from the crouch, looking strictly human without a hint of feline feature and clad in the Zhuanbian uniform.

"I think it's best that we take this as a dismissal." His elder martial sister states, he glances around to see that the other students have been slowly stealing out of the training yard. Many of whom are in their animal shape, thus his elder martial siblings. The trio of bears are very eye catching, the black furred one is the most eye drawing one compared to the two sporting brown coats.

There is several canines Zhuanbian grouped together, three of whom are dholes and the remaining four are wolves. There's no other feline Zhuanbian besides Lin Xiu nor are there any of the foxes and civets. Exchanging a look with Jiang Yanli, he agrees with that, after all, it's clear that Madam Yu is just getting started from the still frosty look upon her face.

With them heading out, so do his elder martial siblings. He wonders if they'll receive punishment for leaving without getting an actual dismissal from Shifu. As his elder martial siblings head off, most assuming a more human shape, although there are plenty who flaunt their control of their shape by keeping features of their animal shape while human. Typically in the form of hair color, eye color, or having their finger nails look different, either sharp or just the color matching the claw color.

It's a display of control, a visual way to show how well they can control their Cultivation achievement, a mark of pride for a Zhuanbian who's a member of a School. Untrained Zhuanbian typically can transform completely between their animal shape and their human one. Their cloths often victim to the process.

During the tournaments he's visited since he'd turned twelve and have participated in a few underage matches, Jiang Caihe recalls the ultimate display of control mastery that a Zhuanbian can show. It's when a Zhuanbian kind of looks like a uniformed hybrid, with the stance of their human shape but with their head and arms displaying their animal shape. Of course the hands are the hardest to mingle as having fingers instead of paw toes seems like a tricky thing to maintain.

That level of control, there's not many who've achieved it among the Zhuanbian of the Yunmeng Jiang Sect outside of Lan Jizhi and three of their instructors. Those three are Su Heng, who's animal shape is that of a Small Indian Civet, she teaches history, Mu Chao, his animal shape is a Binturong, he is their calligraphy teacher, and, finally, Qing Gou's animal shape is that of a Corsac Fox, he's the Core Library's caretaker, Lan Jizhi's fox shape is that of a Tibetan Fox.

"You'll be experience it soon, right? You're thirteen." Jiang Yanli assures him and Jiang Cai is a bit surprised at her deciding to assure him.

Guess it must have shown. He mentally admits. "It comes when it comes." He parrots out the various words of reassurance he's gotten from his elder martial siblings.

As they begin walking towards the public library, it's one that allows civilians to enter and read the contents, although most of that are novels as the Cultivation books and scrolls are located else where, never mind the Core Library that's protected by various means and methods, not all of them orthodox by either traditions. To be able to freely access the contents, you need to be keyed in by both heads of the Sect.

"Are you worried about what your animal shape will be?" Inquires Jiang Yanli, it's clear she's a touch wistful. "I know that they say that foxes are common but, well, this is Lotus Pier."

Jiang Caihe can't help but grin, he knows what she means. "Civets don't have that rich... history to them, you know?" He continues, "Everyone knows that it's easy for Huli Jings to walk among the population due to how many fox shaped Zhuanbian there are!"

The eleven year old snorts and giggles a bit. Likely humoring him a bit, given how dramatic he tried to make that sound. Just as they reach the public library, a certain seven year old comes sulking out of it with his hand wrapped around the collar of one of his pet dogs.

"Really A-Cheng? You know better then to let one of them linger out of their kennel." Jiang Yanli says as she speeds up to stand before her younger brother.

"Sorry sister, but I thought I closed the door properly!" Jiang Cheng states.

He's not sure which of the three dogs this one is but she does try to raise up to lick Jiang Cheng's face. It's not long before Jiang Yanli leads her younger brother to the kennel. Jiang Caihe continues on, entering into the library, he's hoping to finish reading The Flute's Calling, he'd stopped reading with just two chapters left of the novel. He's hoping to finish it before supper.

It's October when Jiang Caihe catches his first glimpse of the stray that Jiang Fengmian brought home, Wei Ying is the son of a Zhuanbian by the name of Wei Changze and one Cangse Sanren, who had been a discipline of one Baoshan Sanren. The boy is scrawny and still rather shy when it comes to people outside of his adopted father, Jiang Fengmian, and his adopted sister, Jiang Yanli. Things between Jiang Cheng and Wei Ying seem to be strained due to the new family member having a deadly fear of dogs, which has caused talks concerning giving up Jiang Cheng's three dogs.

The kid is seven, will be eight come the end of the month, which will be in about a week's time. Rumors, of course, run wild about the topic of Wei Ying, his parents, and about how Jiang Fengmian's relationship was with the pair, although most seem to be leaning that he's still not over the crush he had for Cangse Sanren. Although, from what he's ease-dropped from some of the older instructors, people might have the wrong idea of which of the two Jiang Fengmian is pining over.

Wei Changze's animal shape had been that of a Raccon Dog, which bring into question if Wei Ying could be a Zhuanbian due to that. It's hard to say, given that the kid only started learning new techniques a few days after arriving, which had been by the end of September, beginning of October. What little Cultivation Wei Ying had been taught by his parents and he'd been practicing, doesn't really mean anything as it's a mixture of Zhuanbian practices and very simple Cultivation practices.

According to Jiang Yanli, Wei Ying had gotten very upset when Jiang Cheng wished he's a Zhuanbian, then he should be dog shaped. Jiang Fengmian have gotten more particular concerning the kennels due to Wei Ying's fear, although he figures its a matter of time that they are given away, after all, Jiang Cheng doesn't have the greatest record when it comes to keeping the dogs within the kennel. It had taken time for both Jiang Fengmian and Jiang Yanli to reassure the boy that there haven't been a Zhuanbian with a dog shape, just wild canines, like dholes. Neither brought up mention of wolves for fear that Wei Ying might lump them in with dogs.

Shifu has been asked to discourage those Zhuanbian with canine shapes to be discrete about where they wander around in their animal shape. Which means, keeping to the Zhuanbian training portions of Lotus Pier. It's something that had already been happening, the Zhuanbian staying out of the public eye when it comes to wandering around in their animal shapes, Madam Yu didn't like the sight of or reminder that Zhuanbian made up a decent portion of the Sect.

"Isn't that a little too advance for you?" Jiang Caihe inquires upon catching sight of Wei Ying in the shadows of the more private library, the one that holds copies of books for Golden Core Cultivation style. It's something he must have seen Jiang Yanli practice. He reasons to himself.

The kid seems to be rather startled and, maybe he imagined it, but there had been a hint of fear, though it vanished as an easy, earnest smile crops up with eyes getting closed. Suddenly a stream of words come pouring forth from Wei Ying, there's a bit of a dialect to them as well, but that's expected given he hadn't been in Lotus Pier long. It's rather overwhelming and he wonders just how the kid can breath, only it does seem that Wei Ying does, in fact, need to breath as the kid begins gulping for air, panting and does try to make a run for it, only for him to stumble and fall forward, he is quick to steady the kid.

"Calm down, take deep and steady breaths, ok?" His errand wasn't that pressing as he moves to crouch a bit down while moving so that Wei Ying is before him. With both hands on the kid's shoulders, he adds, "Like this." He inhales in showing how to do it, holds it, before releasing it. "See?"

It's clear that Wei Ying is nervous but does breath as he's shown. The slight redness fades and he pats the shoulders gently before taking his hands from the shoulders. "Also, don't try techniques without a senior's supervision, ok? Cultivation takes time and a lot can go wrong if you over use your Qi or end up channeling it wrong." With that said, he raises from his crouch and heads on his way.

Jiang Caihe brushes off the kid's whole demeanor as something like embarrassment of getting caught and him being a stranger. Wei Ying is still shy and Lotus Pier is a rather big place, never mind the visitors that come through to make use of the public library. He does wonder why Wei Ying is already wearing a near duplicate of the offical human uniform of the Sect, generally, kids under twelve wear either a brown, for boys, or gray, for girls in a style that's a bit similar to the Zhuanbian uniform as it's a very simple to change into and out of.

Not even Jiang Cheng was allowed to wear a bit of purple with his uniform, a uniform who's style did share a bit more then that of the human uniform of the Sect.

\ (^ _ ^) /

His eighteenth Birthday approaches, his ascension to Zhuanbian leadership is approaching far too quickly, at least in his mind it is. So, hearing knocking on the door, it startles him, not enough for his shape to alter all that much, just his claw nails lengthening. Being gentle as can be, he puts a book mark between the pages before closing it. He awkwardly moves back from the table then walks gingerly towards the door, ears flickering back as he mentally debates reverting completely back to his human shape, he's been both studying and practicing holding his current hybrid shape, after all, given he's now Lan Jizhi's appointed heir, he knew it's something he needs to it to seemingly come across as effortlessly and feel that it's natural.

His nose twitches as he catches the sense of Instructor Mu Chao the closer he gets to the door. Straightening his pose and doing his best to cause his shoulder muscles to relax, Jiang Caihe opens the door, being sure to be gentle with the handle as he opens the door. "Instructor Mu." His voice is rough sounding and his ears flatten in embarrassment.

Mu Chao takes a moment to study him and he resists the urge to run his clawish nails through his mane. "Grandmaster wishes for your presence." The older Zhuanbian states before adding."It's about Wei Ying."

Giving a nod of acknowledgement, the Master turns and walks away, leaving him some privacy to do some clean up before heading off to meet with his Shifu, the Zhuanbian Grandmaster of the Sect. Closing the door upon deciding to take on his human shape, with thoughts going through what he knows. The fact that it's Wei Ying instead of Wei Wuxian says a lot, given both Jiang Cheng and said child in question have been using Courtesy names since age ten.

With his notes and writing set settled in his personal space, he picks up the books and the scroll. Carrying them out of the room, he puts them on the shelf that's by the door that leads out of the study suits. Taking a moment, Jiang Caihe uses his Cultivation to alter his eyes, not just their color but also taking on the ability to see in darkness at the cost of seeing certain colors. It's fairly dark out and he is very much aware that he skipped dinner now.

Walking casually through the Zhuanbian Cultivation library, he once more allow his thoughts to wander over the subject that is Wei Ying. The child is eleven years old, turning twelve come autumn. He's considered the main reason for why Jiang Wanyin's dogs had been given away when the last straw had to do with how he hadn't locked the door of the kennels properly, thus the three ran rampant in the human Cultivation library, if not for the tradition of having a secret, secure, and core library that contains both human and Zhuanbian records and Cultivation manuals, scrolls, and the like, it would have been harder to replace what was lost to the trio of dogs.

Wei Ying has proven himself to be very talented in the beginner practices of both Cultivation styles. He's bright as he's been able to catch up and out pace disciples of his own age group. The only thing that's been uncertain has to do with if he actually Cultivated a Golden Core or not as there have been tests done that suggest that he's able but it's telling that he hasn't.

He's clever and I know he's accompanied Jiang Yanli into the core library. Jiang Caihe thinks as he cross through the grounds, heading for the building that's for both leader's offices. He knows that there's books and scrolls in the Sect collection not meant to be added to two Cultivation libraries. It's not hard to believe that there might be a Zhuanbian technique that could trick the usual tests, after all, there have been periods where Zhuanbian have been singled out for 'special' treatment by various Sects for one reason or another, though the general reason has to do with not wanting 'animals' among the 'civil' folk.

Carp Tower has those Zhuanbian hired as servants wear collars. Even have them spend time in the gardens in their animal shape. Jiang Caihe reflects. Never mind the Zhuanbian ghetto that's a few miles east of the tower, with a wall around it.

Jiang Yanli is betrothed to the heir of Jin Sect, one Jin Ming, Courtesy name Jin Zixuan. He does his best to steer his own thoughts from Jiang Yanli as he's suppose to be musing over Wei Ying. He knows Jiang Yanli's feelings for Wei Ying and everyone knows how Madam Yu's feelings, never mind opinions on the kid in question. It's likely why Jiang Fengmian pulled away from Wei Ying, in the foolish hopes that it would keep Madam Yu from... Well, it didn't work as all it did was make it so that nobody could contradict her conduct towards the child.

Thankfully, as long as there hadn't been a Golden Core, Madam Yu wasn't in a position to have any private lessons with Wei Ying. Now it looks like she never will have any authority over him. Jiang Caihe thinks as he feels a thrill of satisfaction at the thought. For all that something have changed, in the end, there's little the woman do when it comes to directing Zhuanbian members of the Sect as they fall under a different command hierarchy. Not even Jiang Fengmian could give Zhuanbian disciples orders or assign punishments, he would need to go through Lan Jizhi and it's the same for his Shifu, he can't give orders or punishments to the human Cultivators of the Sect.

Once through the entrance of the building, Jiang Caihe takes a moment to alter his eyes, returning his full range of color while keeping the yellow green that is his lion shape's eyes. It's not long before he arrives at the Zhuanbian Grandmaster's office. He knocks on the door before calling out, "Shifu, Instructor Mu said you wish for my presence?"

"Come in and meet your newest martial sibling." Calls his Shifu and he does just that. It's then that he catches sight of the individual in question, who's eyes are a rich blue along with movement in the hair, a pair of yellow ears flatten against the head.

He raises an eyebrow at the sight, doing his best to keep his curiosity from causing him to voice any number of questions and the like. "Elder martial brother greets his new younger martial brother." He manages to say in a very even tone, which is surprising to himself given the excitement humming through his whole being. He wonders if Wei Ying's animal shape will keep that blue or if, once he's older, they'll take on a more traditional coloration that felines have.

Wei Ying gives a nod but stays silent. There's some fidgeting in the chair, but that's likely due to the tail that's swing behind him, which shows that Wei Ying's animal shape is that of a leopard. Given how fluffy it is, Jiang Caihe assumes that the kind of leopard is that of an Amur Leopard. He can only assume how uncomfortable the uniforms must be, particularly around the likely hole that got created when the tail forcefully grew.

"This is Jiang Caihe, he's going to be taking my position come summer." Shifu explains and it seems that Wei Ying has heard of him, likely from his adopted sister. "Now then, you know where the Zhuanbian dormitories are?"

Wei Ying nods, the kid stands up from the chair. Shifu takes out a Dormitory Token that also sports the room number upon it. "This is your assigned room and your Token. I believe Jiang Yanli will have your things ready to be moved into said room at some point tomorrow." With a nod of understanding, Shifu offers the Dormitory Token and Wei Ying walks over, taking it. With a murmur of thanks, the kid bolts from the room.

He walks over and closes the door before moving the chair from where Wei Ying had put it. Once before the desk, he sits in it, waiting for his Shifu to recollect himself. "They tried to Seal his heritage." Lan Jizhi states after reheating the tea cup and downing it.

They, huh? He muses to himself, given who's Wei Ying's usual partner in crime is... "It wasn't one of the actual techniques recorded in the library. Just using basics along with some highly theological texts that he likely read while in his adoptive sister's company."

"They've been using Talismans to give false positives when it came to testing." Shifu continues. "It's a good thing we set the line at having a Golden Core before graduating the youngsters into the classes for human Cultivators."

"How furious was Headmaster Jiang?" He inquires after the silence drags on, in which his Shifu pours himself another cup of tea before reheating it. How satisfied was Madam Yu over this development? He silently wonders.

"A fair amount. heir Jiang Wanyin will be rather busy in the coming months, as long as a certain party doesn't interfere." Lan Jizhi answers and they both suspect that Madam Yu will put her foot down, cutting it short.

"So, likely not the full six months." He murmurs as he recalls the typical minimum time using Talismans to trick testing. "What did they get wrong to cause it to raise up like that?" He inquires.

"Inverted the characters for human and Zhuanbian." His Shifu states, then gestures at the papers before him. Getting to his feet, he collects them and reads through them along with the copy of the Array set up.

He hums at the various reasons and the quotes for how the Array should be set up. He finds himself impressed at the framework that Wei Ying managed to set up, framework that did mirror at least the beginnings of one of the Zhuanbian Suppression techniques. "Almost looks like the beginnings of the medical Suppression Array, if I'm not mistaken."

Putting the papers back down, he returns to his seat. "Wei Ying is quite the talent." He remarks.

"The Jiang Sect is blessed with another genius." Jiang Caihe feels his face heat up at the compliment. "Though this one is far more reckless then the one before me at this moment."

"We'll speak more come the morning, you best go grab a snack then get some sleep. We've got a lot to deal with come tomorrow." Lan Jizhi states and he nods, his stomach making itself known about how empty it is.

"Why can't I go?!" Wei Ying snaps as the fifteen year old paces his office. "Jiang Cheng and plenty of other discplines are premitted to go!"

"The Gusu Lan Sect refuse to premit Zhuanbian from entering their Cloud Recesses under normal circumstances." Jiang Caihe explains yet again. "Lan Cultivators have a very rigid view of how the world should be and are thus bigoted when it comes to the matters when Zhuanbian are involved." He adds, "Grandmaster Lan Jizhi had been born there after all but he'd had been 'politely' asked to leave when he'd been ten and he was tested."

Wei Ying pauses a bit in his pacing to turn his head to stare at human shaped protrait of Shifu that he's hung in the office. "They never welcomed him back." He finds himself remarking. "They seem to pretend he didn't exist during the times he use to attend Sect Discusion Conferences when they'd at least stare at the previous Zhuanbian leadership, a Zhuanbian woman by the name of Zhou Nuan."

"Animal shape?" Wei Ying asks curiously and he replies, "Small Asian Mongoose."

"Died during child birth of their third babe." He recalls, rather sad at when he'd read her entry in the core library along with a note about how it could have been avoided if they'd waited a few years before trying for a son. "Lin Xiu is one of her grandchildren actually. Her father was the son she died giving birth to." The only son.

Jiang Caihe studies Wei Ying, the Jiang group will be leaving tomorrow and the younger Zhuanbian. He'll have to speak with Jiang Yanli about making sure Wei Ying doesn't follow after the group. It wouldn't due to cause a strain between the two Sects due to the willful disregard of someone who does, in fact, know better. Or should. He thinks to himself.

The current political climate among the Sects is already bound towards the path of conflict, the four major Sects are being willfully blind to how the Wen Sect have been treating the so called minor Sects. His elders among the Zhuanbian have sent reports about how Wen Cultivators are being encouraged to behave as they want when it comes to the targetted Sect. The local Schools had already closed up ranks in Qishan and the few times their students have gone missing near Night Hunt locations, well, so too have Wen Cultivators. Night Hunts are dangerous, aren't they? Can't always trust the word of civilians, they wouldn't know the difference between a possessed animal and a Resentment fuelled Monster.

The Schools have become more careful as have various communities of strictly Zhuanbian population. The tournament arenas security has seen increased by many means, old Arrays are being powered up and updated to travel plans needing to be submitted so to set up temperary Arrays along those roads. History shows that it's not paranoia when there are people out there who wouldn't mind seeing dead Zhuanbian skinned and their pelts turned into trophes.

Which reminds me... "How goes your training? Particularly your control over your shapes?" Jiang Caihe inquires. "Tournament season is going to be starting come this autumn and I want you to sign up for it."

Wei Ying frowns as the young man regards him. "I'm not interested in participating in that." The other states but he merely shake his head.

"All Zhuanbian of the Sect has at least one circuit of Tournament participation once they achieve a certain level of control of their shapes and mastery of Qi manipulation." A circuit is two years with a year of casual, friendly matches among the School before the Tournament begins to be about rankings and presitage. His own circuit had been when he'd been eighteen, as he was sixteen when his first transformation happened. Shifu had still attended as his role as Grandmaster but not as his previous post of leader of the Zhuanbian portion of the Jiang Sect.

He managed to achive the second rank postion during his first and, ultimately, last circuit participation. The one who out ranked him was one Liu Zhen, she's of the Onyx Serpent School, it had been her third time participating in a circuit, and she really did have something to prove given how unusal she was, her animal shape being a prey animal, a Sambar Deer, which is a very rare happening among Zhuanbian, a replian animal shape is pretty much legendary, something that's like a, once in a thousand year kind of deal. Liu Zhen's two previous rankings had seen her in the top ten, her second saw her at fourth ranking and her first at nineth.

"You know... your sister has fought in the Tournament matches in the off years." He decides to go from a different angle and sure enough, that catches Wei Ying's interest. "There are a few strictly human Schools and while they do things differently, they do have their own system for Tournaments."

"Yanli's placed fifth, I think, in that system." He manages to keep a smile from his face at the look of outrage at the thought that Jiang Yanli fighting. Of fighting in Zhuanbian style Tournaments, in using the Jiang human style at that.

He personally doesn't understand why Jiang Yanli lets her younger brothers think she's meek, then again, he does get why she never mentions it with either parent as it would likely bring up memories of Wei Changze with Jiang Fengmian and Madam Yu likely scoff at how that should be something to be proud of, given it only matters among the Schools and Zhuanbian, likely would have preferred her focusing on her Cultivating a Golden Core and sticking to that style of Cultivation.

Jiang Yanli is also the only human in the Sect that's mastered the human style of Zhuanbian Cultivation. So, yea, there's not many besides the Zhuanbian members who know just how lethal she can be. It's depressing that she's marrying out. She could have taken the post of Instructor to teach other humans who lack incline towards the Golden Core Cultivation in the style. He thinks to himself.

"There's going to be a off circuit Tournament happening in two weeks. Her name is already on the participates for matches." Jiang Caihe says in a off handed way. "I'll have to ask around to get a final list for those who want to go ready." He has plans to send it in two days time.

So far, Wei Ying's name has never been on that list as the young man does his best to ignore that he's actually a Zhuanbian instead of a Golden Core Cultivator. He still has the sword that Jiang Fengmian gave him when he'd been ten, when he also began to go by a Courtesy name. Suibian is often worn when classes were done for the day along with Wei Ying figuring out how to Cultivate a Sword Spirit though various means, he'd been keyed into the core library so he's had free reign to go through the texts without any supervision.

Majority of Zhuanbian styles are all unarmed as with control over their shapes, they are never without weapons, be they fangs or claws. Weapons don't alter to fit the transformation of the body and fingers are opinional. It's rather impracitial for them to Cultivate a weapon, although there have been examples of musical Cultivation, the creation of musical instruments becomeing their Spiritual Tools. It's not something that the Jiang Sect practices, musical Cultivation, like the majority of Sect, it's martial Cultivation that is practiced, although there have been studies into Talismen and Array design in the past.

"Your lying, elder sister isn't someone who fights." Wei Ying declares in a very childish manner and he merely hums. "Well, it hardly matters what your thoughts are, Yanli's name is on the list of those looking to particpate in matches for that Tournament."

Without a by your leave, the younger Zhuanbian leaves his office, the door doesn't close all the way, so it rests on him to close it. With that, Jiang Caihe begins again reading the duplicated report concerning how the Wen Cultivators dealt with their latest target. The observers being members of Wings of Reeds School that was situated near the now destroyed small Sect, there had been a rivallry when it came to who the locals spoke with concerning their troubles of a spiritual nature.

"She won?!" Wei Ying exclaims and he can't help himself by replying, "I thought you refused to watch such 'barbarity'."

There's a few humorous snorts from the School representatives within earshot, he knows their Schools by their uniforms but not who, in particular, is in attendance. None of them sport the hybrid shape, the most features on display are at least four; hair color, eyes, nails, and teeth. Jiang Caihe displays a completely lion head with a mixture of features concerning his upper-body, leaving his hips and lower completely human.

Wei Ying's displaying a leopard head but only fur covered arms, but there's a clear look of destain being given. He merely raises his cup of rice wine and down it in a single shot as his eyes focus back on the sight of Jiang Yanli helping up her defeated opponent who's name he had already forgotten but is a member of Gem Sparkling Star School. As he reaches for the jug, hearing a gulping sound but didn't think much of it, at least until he finds his jug of wine there and he glances back at Wei Ying to find the younger Zhuanbian gulping it down, much to his annoyance.

"If you were thirsty, you should have bought your own wine." He states in a flat tone and there's another round of chuckles. Wei Ying is, at least making an impression, a bad one, but one none the less. He wonders what odds they'll give him when it comes to betting come autumn.

"But, sister is..." Whines Wei Ying once the jug is empty and the young man lowers it to address him. "She's so gentle! And kind!" The younger Zhuanbian whines.

"You can be both, kind and gentle but also able to defend yourself." Jiang Caihe states in a slightly annoyed tone. With a sigh, he glances around the School Representative Section for a wandering vendor or someone looking to earn a bit of coin to fetch things for the attendees. "Those traits are not exclusive, you know."

Not seeing anyone like that, he considers sending Wei Ying before deciding he could also buy something to eat plus be the first to greet Jiang Yanli, who'll be joining them as that was her last fight of the day. "I'll be back." He says as he gets to his feet and walk off the bamboo mat and onto the still cool stone floor of the arena. He also makes a note to deduct the amount for that jug from Wei Ying's allowance as he walks for the stairs that will lead down to the ground, where the vendor stalls are located.

He takes his time as he wanders the stalls, some of the stalls sport School sponsorship signs or the insignia of their favorite Schools. Not for the first time, he wonders if they shouldn't sponsor a vendor stall, after all, he's now got the authority to do so, but knows that it'll be a lot of work, to find someone he trusts to be honest about the profits and quality product to be sold. It's a very cut throat business venture from his observations and he's seen some stall owners get into fights of their own.

"Jiang! Hey!" He turns to the person who's calling out his name and is rather surprised to see a woman wearing a Wen Sect uniform, although his gaze slides from her to the panda headed young man that's a few paces behind her. While the woman clearly has a Golden Core, it's the young man that's puzzling as he doesn't Sense much Cultivation about him, yet his head is in his animal shape.

"Maiden Wen." Jiang Caihe's attention returns to the woman, he's quick to note the design of the uniform before speaking. "Can we talk?" The woman asks in a blunt way. "Privately." She adds.

"I don't see why not." He admits and gestures for them to lead the way, guessing they had something set up for a private discussion. There's a glimmer of something in the woman's eyes while the younger Zhuanbian seems more nervous as a result.

He manages to catch sight of one of his Sect's disciples, asking them to deliver a message to Jiang Yanli about seeing her soon, that it seems he had unexpected business to attend too. The way the trio glance at the Wens, they seem to know where it originates from. With that done, he continues to follow them to the desiginated camping area and follows the panda headed young man into the tent with the woman coming in behind him.

They go over the usual host and guest pleasentries as they size each other up. The young man fidgets with an amulet that had been under his cloths. A flick of a ring and the head shimmers to the human shape, he blinks but otherwise isn't overly concerned about the item in question, there's plenty like it for sale if one knows who to ask. It's something for those who want control over their shape but don't have the patience or want to put the work into learning the old fashion way.

"You need to warn your leader that Wen Ruohan." Wen Qing, as she introduced herself, states bluntly and he allows his own shape become almost completely human, save for his hair. "Maiden Wen, I can assure you, Jiang Fengmian won't listen."

He hold up a hand to stop her in her tracks. "He didn't listen to Grandmaster Lan nor believe the reports that I duplicate for him to read." There's a look of startlement and he gives her a bemused, bitter smile. "The Schools aren't blind to Wen Ruohan's aims but you should know that the four great Sects are turning away willfully from his treatment of minor Sects. None of them want to hear from the survivors, nor do they question how those survivors vanish into thin air after they try to raise a fuss over the Wen Sect actions."

There's a deflated look settling on Wen Qing's face and her shoulders slump downward as well. "The Schools?" She inquires after a bit, having recovered from her previous mood.

"Have long memories." He states simply. "You came to the right place but I can only suggest you find ways to get you and yours out of the Sect before all out conflict occurs."

"You say that as though you expect the Wen Sect to lose." Wen Qing muses and he gives her a smirk. "He might get the Sects but the Schools will get him in the end. It's an old agreement between the two, if a Sect or all Sects endanger the civilians with their power struggles, then the Schools are within their rights to break up the Sects involve by any means. The same is true in reverse."

"And all out conflict would involve the civilians." Reasons Wen Qing and he nods. "It's more of a matter of degree, really. I'm sure there's likely various outlines or timeables that dictate the details of it all, but such documentation does exist in the Capital and should be held within the various libraries of the great Sects."

"You suggest I ask for sanctuary among the Schools for my family and those who also don't want to be involved." Wen Qing states and he nods. "But there's going to be a price for that help." She adds and he nods yet again.

"Is material possessions worth a life?" Jiang Caihe inquires and Wen Qing glances towards Wen Ning, her gaze softening. "What is the cost to get the Jiang Sect's help?" She asks.

What indeed. He muses as he considers the matter. Wishing his Shifu wasn't in wilderness seculsion so he could send a Spirit Messanger for advice in this matter.

"I think it depends on whether you can deal with the location, actually." Yiling's Burial Mounds have been something that have seen many a School wishing to tame but the Sects have always taken responsiblity for the area. At the moment, Yunmeng Jiang Sect have possession of them but none of the human membership have the incline to try to solve the matter. Nor had Jiang Fengmian offered to let the Zhuanbian take a crack at the problem.

"Yiling's Burial Mounds have been passed around among the Sects for a rather long time." He muses out loud. "The Sects are like a dog with a bone with it. None of their efforts have done anything but they refuse to give it up to someone else to try."

Neither of the two Wens seem to get what he's talking about. "It's getting to the time where it's going to slip from Yunmeng Jiang Sect's hands into the Qishan Wen Sect's hands." And the pair stilled as it slowly dawns on what he's kind of implying.

"Your uniform... How closely related are you to Wen Ruohan?" He inquires curiously and there's a bit of a wince, which means they were close enough relation that they'll likely experience blowback when this upcoming conflict is over with.

- S K I P

He arrives back at the arena with three jugs of wine and a wide array of snacks plus three meal dishes. While they now had an outline of a course of actions, with nothing set in stone, it doesn't mean that he isn't in a good mood. The Burial Mounds had been something he'd wanted to try and solve since he heard about it.

Now, he's got a chance to do so, sure, he'll need to have stand ins since he won't be able to do anything in person. It's better then nothing. Jiang Caihe reminds himself as he approaches the mat where Jiang Yanli and Wei Ying are.

"Your business went well, Caihe?" Jiang Yanli inquires once he settles down and begins to pass out the meal dishes. He hums in agreement, his features are mostly human but his hair, eyes, and a touch of influence to his teeth sport his lion shape's traits. He knows he's smiling and it's clear that Wei Ying doesn't seem to know what to make of it.

"Hmm." She hums at him, studying him as he begins to eat of the meal he bought. She knows him well enough to likely guess what kind of business it was, given the few times he's been this smilely and cheerful.

"Is it a girl?" Wei Ying bluntly guesses. "It has to be a girl... Right?" The younger of the three asks, looking at his adopted sister for support.

"I'm sure we'll learn more about it when we're back at our camping ground." Jiang Yanli informs Wei Ying simiply, evening isn't that far off, he had spent a bit too much time in discussion with Wen Qing, Wen Ning had proven to be rather shy and more content to leave his sister do the plotting and talking. There's a few night matches they could stick around to watch, those are doubles though, where combantants are paired off and the pairs decide roles of attacker and defender. Such roles are self explanitory, one is the attack and one is the defender, it's a tricky trust issue as it's more then likely you can get paired with a previous opponent or fight against another member of your own School.

Four members of their Sect signed up to fight in the pair battles. It's unknown if they'll be fighting tonight as today is the first day of the three day Tournament. They'll at least get assigned a partner tonight. He muses to himself.

"Did they tell you who you are facing tomorrow?" He asks Jiang Yanli as the arena is finished getting cleaned up for tonight's matches. That includes Talismen torches coming out to light up the arena grounds by one of the three hosting Schools. They are the Night Blended Cloth, Spider's Silk Trappings, and Starry River Schools. The lanterns around them are given an Artifical Spirit Stone, the lanterns are called Ghost Fire Lantern and these ones off a light that is a soft green.

Wei Ying's attention isn't on the announcer that's down at the arena floor but on the lanturns. "That's not fire." Remarks the younger Zhuanbian.

"No, Ghost Fire Lanterns never use actual fire." He tells the other. "They use the Qi that's stored in the clay stones to create that effect."

"There's some stories about Cultivators trapping fresh ghosts in lanterns. They get their names from them." Jiang Yanli explains. "The stories say that the ghosts would be like silvery blue balls of fire and they were so weak, they couldn't free themselves from the lanterns."

"They say that a Huli Jing feel in love with a soldier and when he died, his soul was captured before it could leave for the after life." He says. "No liking the fate of her love's soul, the Huli Jing schemed about how to get the lantern that held his soul."

"She created a duplicated lantern but she refused to capture another soul to exchange for her love." Jiang Yanli recounts. "She tried to create an permanent illusion of fire eminated from the lantern but the moment she stopped feeding Qi into it, the illusion would end."

"But she wasn't the only one who didn't particularly like the practice of catching fresh souls, so Horse-Face and Ox-Head appeared before her with a solution." Jiang Caihe continues on. "They mentioned how some stones would, over centuries, absorb Qi."

"They directed her to a location where to find one of those stones." Jiang Yanli picks up from where he left off. "With the agreement that she free all souls trapped within those lanterns."

"Thus, she created the first Ghost Fire Lanturn. Tricking the peddlar out of his wares and saving her beloved from the fate of being forced to linger far pass his time on earth." He finishes and Wei Ying just seems to be entertained by the tale or, perhaps, how they picked up the story from one another. Wei Ying's gaze shifts back to one of the lanturns, the look isn't very readable, but Jiang Yanli does reach out and gives him some comfort.

It's clear that something about the story seem to have struck a cord with Wei Ying. It's clear it's a private matter between the two. So, he decides not to pry, it's not like either Wei Ying and himself are overly close to one another.

He does note how motherly Jiang Yanli is towards Wei Ying though. It causes him to also realize that, perhaps, Jiang Yanli might be more of a mother to her younger brothers then her being an older sister.

It's rather depressing realization that, perhaps, if things were different, Jiang Yanli could have been more like his elder and younger martial sisters and not have the weight of a family weighting her down. That she would be able to complain about the two instead of bragging about them like a mother does.

| (o - o) |

"You aren't going." He snaps at Wei Ying after dragging the younger Zhuanbian to his office after Jiang Fengmian made his announcement. "No! You are not a Cultivator of the Golden Core, Wei Ying! You are Zhuanbian and you are keyed into the core library at that!"

Wei Ying stiffens in the face of his anger and his use of cold hard facts. "Jiang Wanyin hasn't been added to the list but you have! You know of it and know the importance of it." He continues on to say.

"Between Jiang Wanyin and yourself, you are far more valuable!" He snaps, it's true, Madam Yu has never really allowed Jiang Wanyin to learn the important traditions of the Jiang Sect, the very Sect the young man is suppose to take over. "And there is no way that this indoctrination camp is going to end well! The Wen's are not fond of Zhuanbian. If they get their hands on you, you'll be feeling the compilation of years of anger concerning the Schools that will be on your lonesome head."

"And don't say that Jiang Wanyin won't let that happen because he won't have a say in the matter!" He continues. "He's just another prisoner, another hostage. He'd have no power, none at all and they won't be incline to listen to him either! Jiang Fengmian's heir or not!"

"If you don't crack, then they'll put him under once they realize what effect it'll have on you!" Jiang Caihe snaps and Wei Ying goes pale as the weight of that particular idea finally settles into his mind. "I don't mind you volunteering for the School Wide Wen Watch, but this, this isn't doing I can trust you not to foul it up!"

"Cause I know you. You should know yourself as well." He adds as he pulls himself to his full height. "You think your life is worthless. You think that you are replaceable."

"You. Are. Not. Replaceable." He growls out. "You. Are. Mine. You serve under Me, Wei Ying. Not Jiang Fengmian, not Madam Yu, not under either of the Jiang siblings. Me, who is Jiang Caihe."

"And you know that this Wen issue didn't come out of no where." He finally manages to say in a much calmer voice after a period of silence where neither of them spoke. "You've spoken with Maiden Wen and I know you've been exchanging letters with her brother."

"Which is another reason why you can't get in any amount of feet of this indoctrination camp." He rubs the bridge of his nose, it's been three years since he'd meet the Wen siblings. Wei Ying's been a great help with unraveling the issue of Resentment Energy of the Burial Mounds, the creation of that hide away for various dissatisfied Wens is a secret that he's not even shared with Jiang Fengmian and his second in command.

"What can I do?! How am I suppose to repay them?" Wei Ying demands.

"Prepare for the Wens invading Lotus Pier." He replies and Wei Ying's eyes widen while he looks like he'd just been slapped. "You think they're satisfied with burning the Cloud Rescesses? You think they will stop with only destroying one of the five great Sects' home?"

"They will burn Lotus Pier because we are closer to their boarder and Jiang Fengmian is a passive Sect leader." He reasons out. "The Qinghe Nie Sect isn't going to comply, they are likely very happy with these turn of events as they'll have the excuse needed to kill the man who is responsible for their father's death."

"Lanling Jin Sect, well, you know what their Sect leader is like." Its because Jin Guangshan draws the line at bedding 'animals' that there's so many Zhuanbian servants hired by Madam Jin. But, he figures it's more of a matter of time for him to turn his lustful gaze onto Zhuanbian population, particularly given he's toured the various brothels more then once and likely is getting bored in bed.

"We did get reports about a massive force moving near Lotus Pier." Wei Ying says in a be grudging tone. "The civilians had mentioned them having the Wen Sect uniform."

"And we both know how Jiang Fengmian reacted to the news of so many marching through Jiang Sect territory?" Wei Ying looks to the floor while his arms get folded in front of his chest. "So? Do you know why you can't go with Jiang Wanyin?"

"Yes." Wei Ying admits in a soft voice. "It's not fair."

"Life isn't fair. Life doesn't owe it to us to be fair." He rebukes. "Only those that have strength can invoke their view of fairness upon the world."

"You might owe Jiang Fengmian for bringing you to Lotus Pier but it wasn't because of you." He mentions after a bit. Wei Ying perks up at hearing that. "People say it's your mother he's longing for."

"It was the love he held for your father that caused him to bring you home." Jiang Caihe informs Wei Ying. "They were very good friends, very close."

"He brought you home because he was selfish. Because, in the end, he regrets letting your father just... wander off." He can tell this was rather mind blowing revalation.

"You can question the various Instructors but, they all seem to be incline to that observation." Jiang Caihe adds. "You don't owe Jiang Fengmian anything once you became an offical member of the Sect."

"'Live well, live free'." Wei Ying quotes the Zhuanbian's motto of the Jiang Sect. "There is much for me to think about."

He nods and Wei Ying leaves his office. He's still not sure if he trusts Wei Ying to not run off after the Jiang Cultivators, but, he at least knows that he's given Wei Ying a new perspective on the matter between his parents and Jiang Fengmian. He's a bit angry at himself for losing abit of his self control by verbally claiming Wei Ying as his.

Lions are social animals, from what he's learnt, brothers form coalition that last their lives. Out of most of the other members of the Jiang Sect, Wei Ying is the one of the two who doesn't really tread lightly around him. It's depressing to remember that Jiang Yanli's marrying out, he hates himself due to the fact that he knows how much Jiang Yanli cares for her youngest brother, but that doesn't keep him from secretly wishing that something would happen that ends with Jiang Wanyin death just so that she could take his place, being the only child of Jiang Fengmian would have left, she'd have to inherit. He knows that anything could happen in the coming months, that none of them are truly safe from the violence about to become common place.

He's never spent much time with Jiang Wanyin and his only relation towards the Cultivator has to due with his relationships with Jiang Yanli and Wei Ying. In the end, Jiang Wanyin might as well be an idea then someone real, even though he's seen him around the Sect. In a lot of ways, they should have gotten to know one another years ago, given that they'll be co-leaders of the Yunmeng Jiang Sect. It never happened so, he can only guess what kind of working relationship they'll develop in the future, it's unlikely to be all that close of a one.

It's hardly the first time he's resented Madam Yu's presence as Jiang Fengmian's wife. It's unlikely that he'll never not resent the woman and how passive Jiang Fengmian was towards her wishes on almost everything. The only thing she never did get her way has to do with Wei Ying's presence in Jiang Sect and in the lives of their children.

(TT ~ TT)

The irony. Is all Jiang Caihe can think of when he gets word of what happened concerning the situation that he sent two member of the Sect on. He tries to find humor concerning the idea of Wei Ying ending up in a cave with a member of the Lan Sect for company. The details of how it came about are a jumble, but he did know that Wei Ying, Lin Xiu, and two members from Crystal Flute School had been hunting around for the entrance of the Tortoise of Slaughter to seal it up so that the Wens can't find it and cause the Monster to wake up.

The Crystal Flute School had done used a Divination Technique about the subject and it gave indication that involving 'Those of the River Lotus' would cause success in dealing with the Tortoise of Slaughter. He's had the duplicated readings tested by Jiang Yanli and wanting to an excuse to have Wei Ying out of Lotus Pier, mostly just to get him away from Madam Yu. He approved for Wei Ying to be part of the expedition and Lin Xui volunteered to go with.

Lin Xui arrives with Jiang Wanyin and some of the Cultivators that had been part of the Wen camp. Jiang Wanyin refused to be left behind by the rescue party, not that it mattered as he'd already dispatched a group after getting the location from Lin Xui. It's not like he hadn't set up preparations in case something happened, so his response had been set up days ago.

He manages to pull Jiang Fengmian to the side and inform him that he'd already sent a group of Zhuanbian. "How did you know this would happen?" The older man demands and he raised a bit of an eyebrow.

"It's an age old practice of planning for the worst while hoping for the better." Jiang Caihe states in a matter of fact tone. "They were to find the cave entrance and put Sealing Arrays to keep it from being found by Cultivators."

"It was risky endeavor but at least we were prepared to something like this happening." He adds and it's clear that Jiang Fengmian isn't happy to learn just what assignment he, Jiang Caihe, had sent Wei Ying on. "None could have expected that the Wens would have decided to hunt down the Monster themselves, never mind take along their hostages on such a Night Hunt." Without their Spirit Swords. He mentally adds.

It's clear that Jiang Fengmian isn't happy with that particular reminder. He'd done his best to keep the other leader informed about the threat the Wen Sect was posing to be. That conflict with them was going to happen one way or another. The difference had to be about doing it on their terms or on the Wen's terms.

Then the man deflates, his anger leaving him. The man looks so old and sad, but he knows he can't do much for the man. "They are going to come here with intent to burn down Lotus Pier, either by punishing us for allowing the 'runaway' disciples safety here or for some other imagine slight." Jiang Caihe tells the older man.

"Send the human members off and leave the defense to we, Zhuanbian." He advises the man. "This is the worst possible place for them to be blooded, they won't be in the proper mindset to kill the invading Wens. They will freeze and they will die."

There's clear horror at the very idea. "We could bargain..." He interrupts with a snort, "There's no bargaining. There is only might and Wen Ruohan's Cultivators have been exercising that might on the minor Sects."

"They are well and truly blooded warriors, they have been for years and you all ignored the plight of those Sects, their survivors tried to warn about them but the Sects, one and all, preferred to be willful blind and deaf." He presses on. "And in the night, after they were allowed to try to alert you all, they died under the blades of those that slaughtered the men, raped and killed the women, bashed the heads of children and infants alike upon the stones of their Ancestral Halls."

"There is no reasoning with those drunk on success and bathed in blood." He states in a finality tone. Looking pass his fellow leader's shoulder, he gives a slight nod before walking away. He has things to check on, namely the state of the bunkers he's had built in semi-secret throughout Lotus Pier for the civilian population to flee into. Double checking, triple checking, the various Arrays that would keep the smoke out along with the heat as people's lives will depend on such things, never mind the Arrays to keep noise from being heard from within and, likely, without the bunkers.

- S K I P

Looking at the face of the whore of the youngest son of Wen Rouhan, he wonders if she is aware of how he's already imaging what kind of look she'll have on her face upon death. It's clear that the whore didn't seem to get that he's doing his best to keep her and her escort talking, delaying them as Cultivators get the civilians to the prepared bunkers while the Zhuanbian get in position, unseen due to various Qi Techniques.

He does his best not to draw attention to how each of the escorts now have their killers now standing next to them. He's killing the whore himself, regardless of what Madam Yu thinks. Jiang Caihe wonders why they thought it a good idea to send such a valuable asset as Wen Zhuliu along with the whore, particular given it's well known that Zhuanbian can't Cultivate a Golden Core, thus the whole point of the man is rather pointless when fighting a Jiang Zhuanbian Sect member.

The whore wants Madam Yu to whip her own son, to 'prove' her loyalty to the Wen Sect. It's another stupid move, as Madam Yu might not have minded if it had been Wei Ying, but her own son? Particularly given that she knows that the second son hadn't bothered to return Jiang Wanyin's sword for that disaster of a so called Night Hunt?

He'd made contact with Zhuanbian that are in seclusion about that particular disaster and that he's using his position's power to call them home in defense of Lotus Pier. So, when a Wen flare explodes from where the first wave of Wens are, he's moving, his nails becoming claws and through the whore's throat they go, with greatest of ease as he's using Qi to ensure their sharpness.

The group of Wens are all dead within seconds and Madam Yu along with Jiang Wanyin seem shocked at how suddenly there's more people in the room then there should. "I suggest you both head to where Jiang Yanli is waiting at the kitchens, she has decided to be the one to escort you both to a safe location." He states flatly. "This isn't an order, just a suggestion that I strongly think you should heed."

Then he walks out of the building, his shape altering, mostly his upper body taking on characteristic of his animal shape. They had in coming ships to deal with and a post to assume. It's time for the Wens to realize how much harder it is to deal with prepared and well trained 'prey'.

That the Zhuanbian of Yunmeng Jiang are not destined to be their prey. Will never be their prey.

While the Cultivators of the Yunmeng Jiang Sect join the so called Sunshot Campaign, the Zhuanbian of the Yunmeng Jiang Sect pretty much stepped up to deal with the usual problems that have always plagued the civilians along with guarding Lotus Pier itself. Few were happy with sitting out the Cultivator conflict but Jiang Caihe bowed to wiser, cooler, and older members that he called home. There were many predecessors to his post among those that came back to the Sect and he's smart enough to know that he's young and newly bloodied, never mind that he hadn't the same experience when it came to participating in the Tournaments, which, surprisingly, got his Shifu some flake for appointing such a 'green' member to the post.

There's reasons why the Tournament circuit was a bloody affair and it wasn't just to train the right mind set into those that participate, it was to help young Zhuanbian work through emerging instincts. While being entered into a circuit of the Tournament was minimum threshold, it's generally suggested for Zhuanbian to participate in the circuit between three to five times. It's a little too late for him to do so, but he can ensure that Wei Ying does it properly, which the younger Zhuanbian submits himself too, it seems that his younger martial brother very much does have something he needs to prove, if only to himself.

He's been given the suggestion to take a week every two months to go off on hunting trips on his lonesome, taking his animal shape to hunt his food during said week to himself. He's learnt a lot of things during that particular time away from Lotus Pier, mostly, just how hard it is to sneak up on deer of various kinds, never mind how he's begin eating what he does manage to kill. Still, it does help settle something in him when he gets back from said trips.

Members of the Sect had gone to the Burial Mounds to continue with the project of settling it enough to create a retreat home for those Wens who don't approve of what their current Sect leader is doing. It seems he hadn't been the only one who'd yearned to give the Burial Mounds a try. He can't help but trust his elders concerning the project along with dealing with not getting a steady stream of updates. It's clear his elders very much approved of the plan he'd devised with Wen Qing about how to go about getting access to it.

Concerning the Wen siblings, they were safe and doing their best with their smuggling operation concerning getting those who want out, out to the Burial Mounds. There's be a lot of digging through records about techniques that can influence the dead of humans. They've found records of at least two Zhuanbian and almost a half a dozen humans who've figured out the hows, just not a safe how, although it was recorded that one of the Zhuanbian had been recovering steadily before dying in a fight with Cultivators, who thought that said Zhuanbian was an undead due to the high concentration of Resentful Energy hanging around them. It's unknown if the reason for the recovery was due to his animal shaping being that of a prey, a Woolly Hare the records have noted down, his name had been Bia Zhuang and his School had been Celestial Cloudweaver, which is an extincted School now.

Yunmeng Jiang Sect has become a well protected respite for Cultivators from the alliance of Sects fighting against the Wens. It's a place where the injured are sent to recieve treatment and for those that have battle fatigue. They might grip about the fact that the Zhuanbian of the Sect not committing themselves to the fight against the Wens but it's clear that they've found it within themselves to relax while they are within Lotus Pier, trusting that the Zhuanbian were more then capable of keeping the Wens out.

The Schools have also seen an increase of business with civilian coming to them about their supernatural problems. Which is expected, the only difference has to due with before, it had only been the Schools that occupy the same location as a destroyed Sect that became the only option. Not so now, not with the Cultivators openly fighting with the Wens and there have been minor attempts of civilian settlements seeing a battle, if not for the Schools starting to spread out their numbers, doing mix group to come across as socializing, they've been able to help save lives that get caught in the crossfire.

It's not enough for the Schools to step in to put a swift end to the conflict but, this war is young yet. As the Wens get desperate they'll be more incline to burn the world kind of strategy. Which would signal the end of the conflict anyway.

So, as he watches a group of young disciples under the age of ten go through clearing up after a storm that came through the night before, Jiang Caihe wasn't that surprise to see an adult in a different uniform. No, what gets his attention is the fact that Wei Ying seems intent on grabbing the Cultivator's attention. Taking an interest in the Cultivator, he realizes that he's of the Lan Sect and he's unable to see the ribbon to confirm but, he knows that the so called Second Jade was coming to pick up some medical supplies that the Langling Jin Sect dropped off a while back.

Medical supplies that were suppose to be taken straight to the front line at that. He's unsure if the Cultivators buy whatever excuse the manwhore gave about how they ended up in Lotus Pier but none of the Sect members were amused by the mix up. It's clear that the Jin

Sect leader is engaging in long term politics, even now, where lives were more at risk for such an 'error'. It's just the beginnings of one drop in the bucket of evidence that the Zhuanbian are collecting concerning the Jin Sect's actions during this time of turmoil.

There's observers keeping tabs on all the Sects, documenting their actions and decisions. The originals will find their way to highly secure libraries that the Zhuanbian maintain, duplicates will be sent to the Capital with summaries complied handed out to the Schools into the form of a history textbook that covers the Sunshot Campaign. The first edition will likely be rough and the following editions will also likely cover the years following the end of it, which will likely include the spin the various Sects put out about the conflict in question.

He's not sure when he started to walk towards the pair but then, he'd been a touch lost in his own thoughts. "Jiang Caihe." Wei Ying greets him and the Lan Cultivator gives him a slight look over before adverting his gaze, which was very irksome to be honest.

"Wei Ying, I see you're guiding our visitor around Lotus Pier." He muses and there's a split second of slight bewilderment before Wei Ying nods very enthusiastically. "Yes, yes, that's correct! It's practically Lan Zhan's first time here!"

Lan Zhan? Jiang Caihe couldn't help but muse as he does his best to take in any tiny change to the man's pose, given the face seems to not have changed in the least. "I take it this is who was in the cave with you? I recall them reporting that you were with a Lan Cultivator."

Wei Ying hums a positive as he rocks his body as his weight shifts about his feet with arms behind his back. He does his best to recall the incident in question, after all, those he sent not long after those people coming to Lotus Pier were ones he trusted to deal with the rescue. "Didn't he collapse after trying to walk away on his own? Particularly after you two killed the Monster in question?"

"Yip! That was Lan Zhan!" Wei Ying confirms and there's a touch of red to the ear tips. It's faint but there.

Humming, Jiang Caihe says, "As much as Lan Zhan missed your company, Wei Ying. I suspect he is here for the medical supplies that ended up here by some clinical error on the Lanling Jin Sect's part." He add, "Supplies that are likely desperately needed some days ago."

There's a slight shift in the Lan's gaze towards him but he's a bit more focus on Wei Ying. There's a slight poute but there's a hint of anger at the reminder of that particular delivery not reaching its actual destination. "Right! It's to the point where it would just be safer to sent people to collect it then to trust those air for brain Cultivators to not get distracted by something sparkly on their way out of Carp Tower."

"Wei Ying!" Lan Zhan hisses with underlying out rage and shock at such disrespect along with looking right at said man. "Lan Zhan! It's true though! How is this any where close to Yingchaun? Isn't fairly close to Lanling Jin Sect?"

"They literally had to make a longer journey coming here then taking it to Yingchaun!" Wei Ying concludes. It's clear that Wei Ying seems to just have the talent of getting under this Lan's icy exterior and he can only wonder at the reasons for that, after all, given he'd grown up in a Sect that sports over three thousand rules, that have been carved into a mountain side, they grow up in a very strict environment and thus end up rather unbend-able in their view of how the world works.

"Wei Ying, give him time to recover his bearings." Jiang Caihe says. "I seem to recall how hard it was for you to swallow just how capable your sister is when it comes to combat."

The Lan Cultivator has a tiny shift to his weight as he does his best to not look at either of them, yet again. "Just escort him to the supplies, please. It's a certainty that he'll find his way back here, in one state or another." Jiang Caihe adds and Wei Ying huffs but nods in acknowledgement.

"Safe travels, Second Jade." He says before giving a polite bow, deciding against using his birthday, and then, upon straghtening, he walks away to resume supervising the kids. Trusting that Wei Ying will take the Cultivator straight to the supplies, whether he'll allow the Lan to leave right away, likely managing to get him to eat something first... Well, it's not really his problem as he didn't say anything about letting Lan Zhan leave right away, after getting the supplies.

The next time Jiang Caihe encounters the Second Jade of Gusu Lan Sect, the Schools had joined in ending the conflict after the Qishan Wen Sect intentionally set fire to half a dozen villages and had tried to masscare the civilians trying to put out the flames. It had been something that took even those observers by surprise, it was also clearly planned as it happened within the same day. It had been about four days since the confirmed death of Wen Xu, the first son and remaining son of the Wen Sect leader, Wen Ruohan. The second son died during the assualt of Lotus Pier, he'd surrender only to try to kill the Zhuanbian who he surrendered too with a dagger, the back hand snapped his neck, it seemed that he'd been weak, never having much strength in regards to Cultivating, rumors had it that he'd only achieved a Golden Core due to Qi Pills and Spirit Infusion Exilirs.

The young man is looking rather loss as a hawker is aggressively selling what looks to be knotted pendants. Jiang Caihe almost continues on his way to the former Supervisor's office when he realizes the subtle look the hawker sends to a young woman, who then begins to make her way towards the Lan Cultivator. It's a very subtle and low level technique that she employs, it's clear to him that she's got no training and is relying on natural talent, likely having had the basics of Qi manipulation explained and, maybe, having had someone demonstrate the technique for her.

Given how beautiful the young woman is, it was likely someone or many someones trying to impress her or recruit her. Jiang Caihe finds himself moving to intercept the pick pocketing operation. "Lan Zhan." He greets the Lan. "I hope you still have the money Wen Qing gave you for your purchases."

There's a clear twitch from both the Zhuanbian woman and the hawker at the casual use of the former Supervisor of the Wen Sect, who's post is more clinic owner now. Blank face is what greets him as the golden hue eyes seem to study him intently. "Ah well, best come along with me back to the clinic, who knows how long you were expected back." He takes hold of a sleeve, tugging the man to follow.

He does so and once out of range, "You were going to be pick pocketed by that man's accomplace." Jiang Caihe lets go of the sleeve without looking back, not stopping either.

Having saved the Lan Cultivator from getting his money pouch lifted from his person, he doesn't see any reason to stick around and visit with the Cultivator, even if Wei Ying seems strangly fond of the man. He has business with Wen Qing concerning plans concerning the involvement of the Schools. So, when he is before the clinic that once served as the Supervisor office, he is surprised to note that the Lan had followed him instead of going on his way.

Giving the Lan Cultivator a bit of a questioning look, Jiang Caihe notices the slight downward turning of the lip corners along with the seemingly guilty way the eyes slide from him. "Leader Jiang." Wen Ning greets upon opening the door, he's helping a woman getting out of the building.

"Second Jade." Stammers Wen Ning after catching sight of the Cultivator. "Were you not..." It's clear that Wen Ning's voice fails him before completing the sentence along with the stammering being worse before it did.

"Does Second Jade of Gusu Lan have business with either Doctor Wen or another person?" Jiang Caihe inquires as he takes on pity of Wen Ning, thus deciding to question the Cultivator on Wen Ning's behalf. He's fond of the Wen, who's doing well in learning various healing techniques that Zhuanbian have developed, it's clear he's wanting to help his sister in her clinic. Not everyone has the same drive to learn everything they can in regards to Cultivation and studying various means to manipulate Qi within and outside of the body.

"Thanking Leader Jiang." The Second Jade finally manages to voice after a bit. Jiang Caihe found it a bit confusing as to why it seemed like the Cultivator found it hard to speak or, rather, perhaps he's unused to speaking a lot?

"It wasn't any trouble on my part to keep them from succeeding in their scheme." He says calmly. "I suggest next time someone acts like that hawker, you push pass them and keep a hand on your money purse afterward."

"Just because you are a Cultivator, doesn't mean you are immune to being a target of pick pockets and bandits." Jiang Caihe thinks to add as an after thought. That's from personal experience as he's encountered bandits and pick pockets during his travels on his own, never mind poachers or mercenary hunters trying to set up ambushes if he frequency a certain location beyond twice. It's something he's been fustrated with, even if he turns them in for arrest, not thing seemed to really happen to them and it usual means they are out for vengance on him.

It's a reminder that Zhuanbian are discriminated against and, well, he's not proud of tricking them into triggering their own traps, of leaving them to deal with the aftermath of the reality of dying by something they set up. Jiang Caihe does make sure to put their spirits to rest before giving their bodies funeral rites. Telling himself that in their deaths, he's saving the lives of less capable Zhuanbian from dying by these people's schemes/grudges.

There's a sound of acknowledgement from the Lan Cultivator, Jiang Caihe also admits he also owes the other an apology. "Forgive me for using your birth name, I don't think I know your Courtesy name." Nor have we been properly introduced.

"Lan Wangji." With a slight nod after taking a few seconds of studying Jiang Caihe, the Cultivator turns and leaves. He wonders if it would be a good idea to mention this incident to Wei Ying before he turns to apologize to the woman for his impoliteness. They chat in an apologetic fashion before she waves it away, in the end, being sure to grip Wen Ning's hand and lean on him. Moving so that the pair can go on their way, he then enters the building, having a general idea of where to go.

\ (^ - ^) /

Things seem to develop between Wei Ying and Lan Wangji over the years, not that Jiang Caihe pays it much mind, after all, he's got a duties to attend to along with his own personal problems. Personally, he's happy for Wei Ying but, also, a touch sadden concerning Lan Wangji's pretty much in exile from his Sect and it wouldn't surprise him overly much if the Elders find an excuse to write him out of their Sect's records, well, in time. Although he's not sure if the First Jade, Lan Xichen will let that happen, given that the Sect Leader is clearly has a good relationship with Lan Wangji and loves the man despite him deciding to marry a Zhuanbian, in particular, the son of the infamous Cangse Sanren.

Jiang Caihe does recall hearing his Shifu remark about Lans loving deeply and, sometimes, tragically. Given the scowling glare that earned him from Lan Wangji's uncle, he is pretty sure there's a story, likely a scandal, but it's none of his business and it's unlikely to be his business. He had merely gave a neutral hum while the younger Cultivators, namely Jiang Wanyin and Lan Xichen both having varying reactions to the sudden spike in tense, with Jiang Wanyin scowling at the glare directed at a member of the Sect and Lan Xichen seemed to keep a smile upon his face while studying Shifu a bit more intently.

Then Jin Ling got fussy and Jiang Wanyin did his best to calm down the child in his arms, the four year old, somehow, ended up in his arms and calmed down while seemingly fasinated with his different colored hair and his eyes. It's clear that Jiang Wanyin isn't happy with how easily Jin Ling calms down with him but, well, he's got some experience with Wen Yuan, who's seven going onto eight. Children, he finds, can be easily distracted by the littlest things, like someone having not just a different color for their hair, but also eye color, sporting a light dusting of hair on the face, nail color, nail shape, different looking teeth, or someone having a tail.

Jiang Yanli is rather busy nappy with her daughter, Jin Zhong, who's being fussy due to teething, causing a distruption to their sleeping patterns. As for Jin Zixuan, he's doing his best to be there for both mother and daughter and Jin Ling didn't want to stick around with his parents and with Wei Ying busy, with none of his father half brothers here in Lotus Pier, Jiang Wanyin gets to babysit his nephew, giving them time together. It's clear that Jiang Wanyin doesn't have a single clue how to deal with kids, which is a bit understandable but also depressing that it's rare for Jiang Wanyin to go out of his way to spend time with the younger disciples.

"Mama says your great grandfather and my great great grandfather were brothers." Jin Ling states being proud at remembering that. "So, you're my cousin! I think you're my favorite cousin now." The four year old states in a very serious manner, which seems to cause Jiang Wanyin jerk a bit, looking at him as if reconsidering who Jiang Caihe is.

"It also means I'm your mom and Uncle Jiang's cousin too." Jiang Caihe says. "That my younger brother, Jiang Zhuang is also your cousin." His younger brother is six, he's got four sisters, three of whom are already married with Jiang Nuan being twelve years old, but none of them are interested in being Cultivators and his parents' aren't pushing them to either. They are already looking for a husband for her.

He's still not close to his parents and it's unlikely he'll be close to his younger brother. His elder brothers died during the Sunshot Campaign, although they had been married although they didn't get around to having a son, his eldest brother had twin girls and his second brother died before knowing his wife was pregnant nevermind seeing or holding his daughter. Jiang Caihe isn't sure if he should be relieved that they are doing their best to forget he exists, thus meaning he doesn't have to worry about them trying to find him a wife or insulted and despressed that they are ignoring his existence, that everything he's done, that he has achieved, and position within the Sect means nothing in their eyes simply because he ended up being a Zhuanbian.

"Hmm..." Jin Ling hums but clearly refuses to consider that Jiang Caihe might not be his favorite cousin forever. "Kitty?"

"Kind of." He admits after taking a bit to reason out where that came from and could mean. "Lion actually." He says after having his head take on his animal shape and Jin Ling's eyes widen.

"Cool!" Jin Ling cries out, hand already moving over his muzzel and fingers pinching his whiskers before forcing his mouth open to see his fangs. "I want to do that!" Jiang Caihe's ears flicker slightly as he hears Jiang Wanyin cough a bit at the sudden declaration.

"Won't know until you're a bit older." He informs the child and Jiang Wanyin, who's listening in, then again, they are still in Jiang Wanyin's office. "Not sure if you'd like being away from your family if it turns out you can." Jiang Caihe adds, not that Jin Ling seems to care about that, then again, it's not what's happening right now, so, it's something of an abstract concept to the four year old.

"You won't be your father's heir if you end up transforming into an animal." Jiang Wanyin states and he's pretty sure Jin Ling is now giving his uncle a pouty look while busy hugging his neck, he feels the tiny fingers playing with his mane on his either side of his neck. "You can't be a Sect Leader if you're a Zhuanbian."

"Mean! I can be both cause I want to be both!" Jin Ling declares and he hums.

"True, after all, I share the post of Sect Leader with your uncle and I'm a Zhuanbian." He states. "If you end up a Zhuanbian, you can be my heir, how does that sound? You'll get to spend a lot more time with your favorite cousin!" He really didn't want Jin Ling to throw a temper tantrum right next to him while his head is in it's current shape.

Jiang Wanyin snaps, temper getting the better of him, "It's not going to happen! Neither of his parents are Zhuanbian! They both are talented Cultivators!"

Jiang Caihe closes his eyes and gingerly shakes his head while Jin Ling does his best to keep calm. He remembers the Divination Jiang Yanli did back when she'd been seventeen and a bit tipsy. He'd been present as support along with ensuring that the Array was set up without any errors. As he does his best to comfort Jin Ling over the angry tone that his uncle used, Jiang Caihe feels despair over Jiang Wanyin's reaction, for it kind of brings to him his own parents and siblings, his own situation really.

"Jiang Wanyin, please. Jin Ling is just a child, his future isn't set in stone." Jiang Caihe says as he turns to regard his counterpoint in the Sect. "Might I remind you that neither of my own parents are Zhuanbian yet here I am?"

It brings to mind the stunt with what happened with Wei Ying and how it lead to Wei Ying unlocking his ability at a younger age. It causes him to wonder if Jiang Wanyin ever got over the experience or over the fact that Wei Ying 'left' him behind. With Jiang Yanli marrying out, which he'd known in an abstract manner since childhood, but Wei Ying, well, children make all kinds of promises due to how simple the world seems to be. Not all of those promises can be something to be held onto once reality sets in and the reality is, Wei Ying is a Zhuanbian and thus, can't be Jiang Wanyin's second in command.

Doesn't mean he still can't be your brother. He thinks at Jiang Wanyin. Unsurprisingly, Jiang Wanyin doesn't pick up that mental statement while having a sour look upon his face along with a clear look of hurt.

"Wei Ying is a Zhuanbian and is he not still your brother?" Jiang Caihe inquires. "If Jin Ling ends up being a Zhuanbian, he'll still be your nephew."

It's clear that Jiang Wanyin wants to argue that but, well, Jin Ling has stopped hugging his neck to peer at his uncle while leaning against his shoulder, looking at Jiang Wanyin. There's a look of various emotion fluttering in the man's eyes but, in the end, Jiang Wanyin realizes that to keep Jin Ling from getting further upset is to agree with his statement, even if it's not something the Cultivator is sure he wants to do.

Walking over to the desk that Jiang Wanyin is, allowing his head's shape to return to its previous state, Jin Ling reaches out towards his uncle. Jiang Wanyin takes the four year old and he says, "Life isn't something anyone can really plan out. It's best to learn to take things as they come, when they come. Be it in accepting them or learning to operate around them."

"I'll see you both later, at supper." Jiang Caihe states as his way of farewell and then walks out of the office. He's not in a good place at that particular moment, but that doesn't mean his duties are going to wait for him to be in a better place either.

Jiang Caihe takes his time upon returning to his own office to calm his own mind and remind himself that the Divination had been rather hard to understand. The strangeness of the answer had been unreadable, even when handed around to various experts in said Art. The nearest translation seems to be incline that there's a good chance that Jiang Yanli's future children or child will be Zhuanbian but also that they won't be as well.

Jiang Ling manages to dodge the incoming strike from the walking corpse by transforming fully into his animal shape, which is that of an Asian golden cat. Wen Sizhui flows into the gap, the sword piercing through the corpse' head. Lan Jingyi manages to block a sword strike from the Cultivator that's responsible for the situation at Yi City.

It's rather hard to believe that such a situation had been allowed to develop under both the Sect and School's noses but, well, it had and now they have to deal with this Xue Yang and his 'Sect' of dead using Cultivators. It's hard to believe that a Cultivator managed to get this far without any help, which likely means that there's going to be a huge investigation concerning if there hadn't been a backer at the earliest founding of this so called 'Sect'. Jiang Caihe does his best to reign in his own thoughts, he's one of the four adults that is capable of fueling the various shielding Talismens from a distance, the group of Juniors need him to keep his mind on his current task.

Lan Wangji, Wei Ying, and Wen Ning were doing their best, although Wen Ning is acting more as a battery to help the other members with their efforts. They can only hope that reinforcements will be coming soon, what with Ouyang Zizchen managing to get out of Yi City before they became surrounded by living and dead corpses. Particularly before Xue Yang showed up in person to taunt and gloat over their situation.

It's going to be a long day. Jiang Caihe thinks to himself.

Ending it here

Birth Name: Jiang Cheng, Courtesy Name: Jiang Wanyin = Age at beginning 7, Birthday Nov 5

Birth Name: Wei Ying = Age at beginning 7, Birthday Oct 31, Animal shape - Amur Leopard

Birth Name: Jiang Yanli = Age at beginning 11, Birthday May 2

Birth Name: Jiang Caihe = Age at beginning 13, Birthday Apr 16, Animal shape - Asiatic Lion

FYI: Zhuǎnbiàn, AKA Zhuanbian, it's suppose to translate into Transform. At least that's what Google Translate says it does at any rate.

Nature of Beasts P 1: KHR!

I don't own Kateyou Hitman Reborn!

(_ T _)

'This chapter is dedicated to the rumors, history, and current welders three swords that were forged to be used by those Youkai that are of Kirin Nature in either both the Body and the Heart or of Body/Heart. These three swords' names have been passed from one welder to the next and they are Kirin no Ikari, Kirinzuresuto, and Reijingukirin. At the time of this book, Kirin no Ikari rests within the Hibari Clan, the current welder is one Hibari Kiman while Kirinzuresuto is passed from one Grandmaster of the Nakamura Sword Style to the next. As for Reijingukirin, the last known welder had been one Sone Chuya, who had been sighted in China battling a horde of Monsters native to that land, which had been, at the time of this printing, over a hundred years ago.

The names of the original welders of these three swords have been lost to time, the same with the other forty-two who fended off the invading Youkai from China during their human's own attempts to conquer Japan .'

The light he'd been reading by gets blocked and he's already resisting the simple urge to sigh. Yoshi had managed to read the previous six chapters of this book in peace, he didn't see why he can't finish this seventh chapter in peace as well. For such a supposed bastion of civility, I haven't experienced much of it.

Not that Yoshi doesn't get why he's given the bare minimum when it comes to hospitality. It's just depressing that it's due to having been born to a family of farmers in a remote village. Without the 'right' connections or training in this particular field, he might as well be a farmer who didn't 'know' his 'proper place'. That he's also a Tengu in Body and a Kirin in Heart doesn't matter given how lacking he ultimately is in a political sense. Which isolates him from those around him, even those who possess dormant Youkai Natures are better respective then he, more due to who they are related to then their own merits, he might have once been sympathetic but their treatment has long since cause him to feel rather numb to their 'plight'.

"I didn't know you can read. Did you learn it from your parents?" Nara Toshiko asks in a very fake inquiring tone. She's dormant but her father, Nara Yuu, who's an Orochi, is the Steward of the current reigning Tengu of this hidden Spirit World, it's called Imori, it's clear it was a Kitsune Youkai who set the foundations of this Spirit World with a name like that. He'd known she'd never have her Youkai Nature surge forth the first time he'd met her, which had been a month into his stay at this Spirit World.

It had taken a second encounter to learn how bitter and resentful she was. Upon learning of his humble origins from a remote village, she's lashed out at him, first verbally and then slapped him. Yoshi flared his Tengu Wings and his Kirin Mane, falling into the trap she'd set. She'd played the victim but, as he hadn't touched her but she him, she'd been scolded about provoking an 'ill bred' Youkai. She's been hostile to him since.

So, when face with her once more, he merely tunes the thirteen year old brat out along with the echoing sentiments that the eleven to twelve year olds parroted. It's more likely just the same old taunts and Yoshi finds it tiring, in the end, of hearing them. He's been in this Spirit World for six months, before he'd been working at an inn that caters only to Youkai, and before learning of the hidden society of Youkai, he'd tried to find work at the Capital, it took him almost a year before he left due to... things. He learnt through experience just how well deserved the caution Youkai are regarded with.

He's going to be eighteen come the spring and Yoshi is finding just how similar Youkai Natured humans are to simple humans, as in all of the wrong ways. He's already considering where to head next as he don't plan to stay in this Spirit World any longer. As far as Yoshi is concerned, none here have earned any kind of right to him and he's rather glad of that. It's so tiring... They think I'm so easily bought? That I'm still an ignorant farm bred idiot?

Yoshi ignores the group of six as he draws upon his Heart to get around the issue of how little light there is for him to read by. He does his best to keep it under his skin, his Body helps ensure that nothing shows as he goes back to reading the book. When the book gets slammed on him and the Nara brat demands, "Are you even listening?!"

"You were talking?" He inquires as he looks up at her, tilting his head just so. There's a few giggles from the other five children while the Nara brat's faces goes crimson and she tries to kill him with her eyes alone.

They don't leave and he can't have his Youkai flaring visibly, Yoshi also knows he's unable to take the book out of the library but it's clear they won't let him continue reading. He refuses to retreat, it's only made the Nara brat bolder and he gets snide remarks about finding a mere child intimidating, never mind that they wouldn't follow through with their own suggestions due to who her father is and his position in Court. She knows she can't physically touch him, that would give him the excuse needed to flare his Youkai Natures out, and as long as it's just flaring but not doing anything else, he'd get away with it.

His face should show how bored he is before he picks up the book, he walks to another table, being sure to walk at a slow but confident way. The fact he just, turned his back on them, it shows that he doesn't feel threaten in the least. As he's about to sit down after putting the book down first, it's then that he hears a cry of frustration and anger.

Something gets slapped on his back and his Youkai Nature flares as he fights against whatever it is that's trying to dig itself into his body. Yoshi isn't sure what is it that he fully did, he dimly recalls something sticky upon his fingers, there's screams, and shouts of anger that became pained screams before going silent. Not that he's aware of what he's physically doing as he's far too busy fending off an Enenra's attempts to hollow him out. There's hints of Yato-no-Kami along the edge but between his Body and Heart, he does manage to keep up a good defense, even pushed it back but, well, he'd been unable to do anything about the weight on his back, that's allowing this Youkai access to his body and attack him.

So, when something slices it, it takes Yoshi a bit to realize he's not in the library along with the various smells. He slowly blinks then a bit more until his vision clears. It's then that he realizes that he's got blood on himself, particularly his hands. Holding them up, he tries to think about why he's got blood on his fingers, on his hands, although it looks like his nails seem...

It's then that he looks at his surroundings properly and notices that there's a lot of dead bodies, some of whom are those Youkai he'd seen during his time in Imori but there's also a number of strangers. Glancing to his left, he walks over to the woman and knows that she's the one who'd been trying to hollow him out. It's then that he notices the marks upon her skin, the irregular burns that hint around the edges of the slices. "I killed them?" His voice is soft and deceptively calm.

"Court politics." Yoshi hears a man's voice answer his question. "Rather impressive that you're not a hollowed out puppet. Ueno Mana's had decades perfecting that particular application of her Youkai Natured."

"Her favorite targets have always been those possessing Tengu as either Body or Heart." The man continues. "And you killed her, of course, she then had to redouble her efforts to take over you or you'd just destroy whatever vessel she claims as her new body, out of pure survival."

Yoshi does his best to recall what he'd been doing before... "I had been in the library... I think I was reading chapter six about the History of the Forty-Two Ancient Swords..." He mutters out loud.

"Does the name Nara Toshiko mean anything to you?" The man asks and it takes him a bit to recall her. "Daughter of the Steward . She didn't like me, envy, I think, that some random son of a farmer ended up having his Youkai Natures surge to the surface while her own never will." Yoshi admits, he's fairly sure he's missing something in regards to her, to everything that's happened.

"Ah, that would explain how she smuggled that item through the Spirit World's boundaries." The stranger states with a snort. "The envious are always easily preyed upon with the right bait." There's a sound of a sword sheathing, not that he's looked away from the woman who'd tried to destroy his very mind and spirit.

"Ueno Mana... Rogue? Or..." There's this word at the tip of his tongue but for the life of him, Yoshi isn't sure it's the right word.

"Mercenary. She'd been hired by Kuge Genji Shinta, who's Body is that of a Wani and Heart of a Tsuchigumo." Explains the stranger. "Daimyo Fujihara Danuja's nephew, his sister's son not his younger brother's, went through the courting gestures to get Kuge Genji Shinta's youngest daughter to bed him, then declared her nothing but a whore and cut all ties with her."

Given he doesn't know the names, it's likely that said people are likely possessing dormant Youkai Natures then surface ones. "For the past decade, Kuge Genji Shinta has tried to force a marriage between the nephew and the daughter with the brother in law and sister." Yoshi closes his eyes as he already can guess that the sister involved her brother, either on her husband's behalf or the son's.

"The sister involved her brother." He murmurs and there's a humorless chuckle. "Indeed, the son found someone he wished to marry but couldn't as long as Kuge Genji Shinta was pressing for a marriage. As the girl in question wasn't involved in Youkai in any shape or form, the family didn't know of the disgrace the son had caused."

"The daughter took her own life upon hearing Daimyo Fujihara Danuja throwing his weight around to end the matter, not even offering anything concerning that the nephew courted with no intent of following through with marrying her." There's a pause before the stranger adds, "She died almost two years ago."

Yoshi finds himself nodding in understanding, he'd been nothing but an afterthought, collateral or a useful tool. "The nephew was visiting with his wife, likely introducing her to Youkai Society." He guesses, he doesn't really feel anything, oddly, for having been used to kill any number of these people, these Youkai.

It's then that it clicks, it's his emotions that had suffered the most. That they likely had been allowed to be attack while keeping the more 'core' of himself safe from the assault. Yoshi wonders if the wife had been pregnant or they already had a child. "How many survived?" How many will paint me as a heartless murder, ignoring that I hadn't been in the right state of mind to be in control over himself.

"Most ran the moment the Tsukumogami made from Hollowed out Youkai breached the Boundaries." The stranger assures him. "She's rather infamous for not being picky about who she turns into Tsukumogami."

Yoshi can't find it in himself to actually speak, so he hums in acknowledgement. He's not feeling overly energetic and he can't find it within himself to care about what that means for him. His eyelids are growing heavy and so is his body.

With a sigh, Yoshi gives into the exhausted sleep that feels like a long time in coming.

T /|\ T

There's a sphere made out of some kind of transparent material around him. It obscures the clarity of his vision and what sound reaches him. Trying to break free... There's no weakness for him to exploit, there's no weight to his pounding on the material either.

There's nothing he can do and nobody who'd help him get free. Then, he's not sure when but something, for a short instances, manages to pierce the material... Only, it doesn't set it free, no, it causes him to produce orange energy all the more and that newly produced orange that leaves but it's not... right. It's tainted by the yellow, it's not really his .

And this sets the course of pattern of things to come. The yellow forces him to create new orange, but it's not the same, it's not his . There's some holes in the transparent material but around those holes are shards and they hurt when he tries to get near the holes. The new, tainted orange passes by harmlessly these shard.

There's a slight change now, he gets glimpses of a world beyond and a hollowed out body that should welcome him. He never manages to Harmonize with that outer body, it's slowly changing, accepting the tainted orange as if it was him. There's little context that he gets from the few glimpses, only that the outer, slowly tainted him doesn't want to be a Mafia Don , whatever that is. None seem to listen, for all that they hear that outer him.

He's not sure when parts of that outer him began to crawl and merge with that which is trapped. In the end, it's merely a puppet beyond the transparent material, answering to the Will of others. None seem to notice the difference. Then, at the age of twenty-four...

Yoshi jerks awake all of a sudden and his left hand going to his gut, searching for... Looking down upon sitting up, he's not sure what it is he thought he'd find. There's no blood staining his hands let alone his fingers.

"These aren't my sleeping cloths..." He murmurs to himself before looking around to realize that he's not in the room he'd been allowed to stay at upon arrival at Imori. It had been rather small by the standards of the Youkai living at Imori but he was just happy to have a space to himself.

He's confused as Yoshi recalls being at the library, he'd been reading a book. With brows furled, he tries to recall the title. Something to do about those special swords. The ancient ones that number over forty. Is all he can recall at the moment.

His memories are hazy and it's then that he realizes that he's rather thirsty along with... Blushing, he focuses on the room along with noticing that it's night out. Yoshi isn't sure what to make of the sight as it had been morning, last he remembers. Getting up, his legs are a bit shaky but he takes it slow, he notices the aches in his back muscles, then again his limbs seem to ache as well.

Once at the door, he glances about, it takes him a bit to realize the room he woke in was in the actual guest wing. Which means... Yoshi does in fact manage to find a kitchen that's connected to this particular wing. Grabbing a cup, he fills it with water after pumping it five times.

The water hits the spot and it's not long before he visits the area meant for certain bodily functions. With that, Yoshi does his best to fight back a yawn. He isn't sure if he should return to that room or seek out the small room he'd been assigned.

In the end, he goes for the nearest room as he's tired and wants to go back to sleep. While confused as to why he's been placed in that guest room, Yoshi decides it a problem for him to solve in the morning. Along with other little issues he's sure he'd be questioning if not for how tired he is. Once he's back upon the bed, Yoshi has a very restful slumber without any strange dreams.

Grandmaster Nakamura is watching him and Yoshi isn't sure what to make of it. His four students have only been polite but clearly preferred to stir clear of him. Out of the four, only Chiba Miki has a Kirin as a Youkai Nature, which is Body while his Heart is that of a Nekomata. The other three are dormant Youkai and their names are Aoki Ryu, Hori Uta, and Iida Doi. What little he's learnt of the four, they were learning different sword styles from Grandmaster Nakamura, which is surprising as he'd thought that Chiba Miki would be groomed to take over the mantle and thus weld Kirinzuresuto, after all the current Grandmaster is going to be three hundred years of age, give or take a small handful of years.

The youngest of the four is Hori Uta, at age sixteen. The eldest is Iida Doi at age twenty-three. Between Aoki Ryu and Chiba Miki, Aoki Ryu is older at age twenty with Chiba Miki being eighteen. He's not sure of what kind of backgrounds they came from but, he's fairly certain that Iida Doi is the only one who didn't come from a household that could be scholars or higher classed. It's just how Iida Doi carries herself, he's also sure that she's hiding her gender as well.

There's been a few Youkai that have returned since Grandmaster Nakamura sent out word of Ueno Mana's confirmed death. It also sounds like one Kuge Genji Shinta is being held accountable for the deaths of the Imori Court as well, it seems he's the one who hired her to avenge slights against his family by the previous Daimyo of Imori and his sister, who's nephew had courting Kuge Genji Shinta's daughter with the pretense of just bedding her and not wedding her. It's a mix blessing that those that return don't know of his role in killing various Youkai, be they members of Court or the Tsukumogami created out of Hollowed out Youkai.

It's still something that he finds hard to come to terms with, the idea that he killed so many older, more experienced Youkai without getting overly hurt. The Tengu Daimyo fell to him along with various guards, those that had training for years... Yoshi doesn't have any hints of purple upon his body, which would indicate he'd made use of his Heart to heal injuries. So it's a mystery as to how none managed to fend him off or kill him.

He recalls the bodies and the slices that hint at odd burns about the edges. Yoshi's nails weren't any different then when he took the time to look at them. There's neither sharper nor does there seem to be any blood under them either. They seem perfectly normal, clearly incapable of slicing through flesh and yet, evidently, they were. Which, again, is weird, after all, they don't have any signs of having been altered by either his Body or Heart.

Blinking, he finds Hori thrusting a bowl with chopsticks into his face. It seems he's zoned out, yet again. "Eat." The dormant Youkai growls roughly at him, he takes the bowl, muttering his thanks along with a polite bow.

As Yoshi eats the stripes of deer meat that's on top of the rice, he notices that Hori hadn't retreated from him. It's puzzling behavior, honestly but it's clear that Hori does have something to say or ask of him. "When are you going to make the announcement?" Hori finally asks and his body freezes.

"Announcement?" Yoshi asks helplessly once he puts the bowl down a bit along with the chopsticks. "Why would I need to make an announcement?" After all, what power does he have? He's got no connections, no money, and everyone knows about his back ground.

"Your a Tengu." States Hori as if that explains everything. "And?" He asks after a minor period of silence.

"Don't you want to be Daimyo? Rule a Court?" Hori asks in a very impatient voice and he merely blinks owlishly at the younger man.

"Isn't there a better candidate then I? Or candidates, I guess." Yoshi inquires and it's Hori's turn to give him an owlish blink.

"But... Your here and they aren't." Hori states and once again he doesn't see how it matters.

"I'm the son of farmers, Hori." Yoshi states calmly. "It's been made clear by many, many Youkai of what I lack in the areas that make one a proper Tengu, or to be a proper Youkai in general."

"My whole time here?" He gestures with his chopsticks. "I grew tired of it. I was pretty much bullied by a child who I couldn't even discipline due to who her father was and if I tried to intimidate her, I'd be cast in the role of villain."

"I was going to leave Imori, not sure when but I knew I was going to." He explains. "I'm tired of how human everything ultimately is when it comes down to it. If not for the strange magics that we possess, everything wouldn't be any different then how regular human operate."

"It shouldn't matter who my parents are, but it clearly does. It shouldn't matter concerning my lack of formal education, except it does." Yoshi continues. "Only one of those can be corrected while the other will always be seen as a weight around my neck."

"People are only 'friendly' until they learn that I lack any kind of political connections. They look at me and they are already trying to judge how much it would take to 'buy' me." He adds. "I don't care what they think I owe them, they have done nothing for me that didn't have a price tag attached. I wasn't housed in the guest wing, I wasn't invited to eat with the Court, I wasn't invited to sit in on the monthly meetings, and I sure as hell wasn't given leave to deal with an unruly child who should know better then to aggravate a Youkai with their nature surfaced."

"So no, I could careless about creating or managing a Court filled with back talkers and kiss-asses." Yoshi states, he's not sure when anger had crept into his tone but clearly, it has along with stirring up a lot of emotions and memories. He returns to eating his lunch and walking away from Hori.

Feeling eyes on his back, he glances backwards only to find the Grandmaster Nakamura being the one who's eyes he's felt. They were very weighty eyes and there's a slight incline of a head before the man continues on his way. Hori seems to be a bit pale, upon the quick glance, but he focuses back on eating along with looking forward.

T /|\ T

Alive... He's alive? How?

How could they have managed to save his life? It had been a [blank] wound in his gut. The [blank] clearly been altered to do so much more then just piece his body. He kind of recalls the general sensation of a lot of burning and at some point, he's pretty sure he recalls what it's like to suffocate.

The world isn't cut off from him and, time was meaningless. His mama was there, alive, and far more lively then he remembers. Sure, he can't talk very well or walk but as time goes, that changes. He forgets, it's easy to forget as everything from before was just surreal. It's a nightmare that he hadn't, for the longest time, woken from.

Then, then a familiar face arrives in the company of a man he doesn't trust. "Call me Grandpa." The elderly man says but soon enough, he catches sight of a certain ring. A ring from that nightmare and dread sinks into his whole being.

He's not sure when he started screaming, trying to run but, in the end, he's trapped, Sealed , away once more. Only this time he knows the name of what's trapping him, it's . . . called . . .

Yoshi surges to a sitting position, panting. His throat is rough and he dimly realizes that not only had he been screaming in his dream but in his sleep as well. A hand reaches up to his forehead, rubbing one particular spot in particular.

Getting out of bed, he heads to get a drink and hope that by moving around, it'll help clear his head. Soon enough, he's outside at the well and waits a bit before pulling up the bucket. Yoshi couldn't recall the dream he'd been experiencing. It's been about three months since he accepted Grandmaster Nakamura's offer of becoming his student, which had been a bit over a week after that conversation he had with Hori.

They left Imori a few days after once a party of neighboring Youkai sent volunteers to help get the buildings repaired. It's likely among that party are those with sights set on becoming the next Daimyo of Imori. There had been a pair of Tengu Youkai among that mixed party but there had also been a Tsuchigumo, never mind the Kitsune or the pair Jinmenju that had been among the group. He's known that it's possible that the next Daimyo won't be another Tengu or even a Tsuchigumo, but it likely won't be easy going for which ever ambitious Youkai who wants the post, regardless of their Youkai Natures.

Sighing, he does his best to push the matter of Imori out of his mind, it's not his responsibility nor concern. Although Yoshi guesses he's dwelling on it to avoid the issue that he's still recovering from that attempted Hollowing that Ueno Mana tried to do to him. Which is likely where tonight's dream came from. He mentally reasons.

It still unsettles him, that he somehow managed to fend off Ueno's attack upon his mind and spirit. She's had decades and yet... Couldn't crush me under her thumb? Yoshi thinks with a scowl upon his face as he takes the bucket from the edge of the well, having nearly forgotten about having pulled it up.

As he drinks, some of the water falls from his mouth, drenching his front. With a wince, he pulls the bucket away and takes a look at what he's done to the front of his sleeping cloths. There's little he can do to dry it off as he tugs the cloth from his chest, gently moving it about, flapping it or waving it in an attempt to dry it off.

Putting down the bucket, he turns to lean on the well and runs his other hand through his hair, which is black. For some reason, he pulls a few strands before his eyes and stares at the color along with length. There's this... disconnect as, for a second, he thought it's brown. Snorting at the thought of brown hair, he lets go of the strands and tilts his head up, looking at the night sky, which does sport a waning Crescent Moon along with some clouds.

Still, he gets to see a wide array of stars scattered about the night sky. It's a breath taking sight, at least in Yoshi's humble opinion. He wonders how come he never appreciated the sight when he'd been younger. Took it for granted, really. Same with how fresh the air is. He muses dimly to himself as he places the palms of his hands on the edge of the well as he continue gazing at the stars.

It's a very calming sight, it soothes his soul, the sight of the stars shining down. He's not sure when he started humming but he had. After a while, he yawns and Yoshi knows it's time for him to return to his bed.

As he enters the rather spacious house, he wonders if he caused any of the others to wake, either by his screaming or him walking out of the room. With that thought, he does his best to be as silent as he can be, that includes using his Youkai Natures to help with said endeavor.

Looking down at his lap, Yoshi, well, Tsunayoshi now it seems, doesn't know how to process how it is he's the one picked to be the next Grandmaster. "Why me?" He finally asks upon untangling himself enough to voice out one of his many, many questions.

"I think it's more of a, how could it not be you." Replies Nakamura Aito, who's been his master for these past twenty years, give or take a few months or weeks. He's startled enough by that to look up at the older Youkai's face.

"You have a stronger Heart then Shape, it's rather odd that your Natures aren't reversed from what I've seen of you." Continues his master, former master. "I've never seen a Youkai with a Shape of a Tengu never seek out the company of others nor have I seen you try and put yourself in an inadvertence position when you are put in a group."

"..." He's unsure of how to respond to that. Although, he's fairly certain that it's due to his previous shitty experiences among Youkai Society that contribute to him not enjoying the company of other Youkai. "It's like babysitting, being in charge." Tsunayoshi complains gently, he's fairly sure he couldn't mind being in charge of actual children, just not those that overgrown babies who want everything handed to them or be lead by the hand when they are clearly old enough to be able to do things for themselves.

"It's like... Their cattle." He adds with a huff. "Just... how is it that they qualify as strong and willful Youkai if they just..." He's not sure if he's explaining things properly. He, at least, manages to keep his hands from moving about as he spoke.

Seeing Nakamura's bemused expression and what might be laughter dancing about in those hazel green eyes, he lowers his gaze once more. "Oh, I'm sure in the right situation, they can be very willful and capable. There's few who are like that all the time though." Concludes Nakamura. "I seem to recall a conversation where you pretty much said that the only difference between a Youkai and a simple human downs to special abilities."

"I said that?" He asks once he's glanced back up. Tsunayoshi tries to think over when he might have said that while Nakamura nods, the previous slight smile is now full blown. "To Hori-kun, back in Imori."

"Oh." That's a very long time ago. Tsunayoshi can't help but think. "So... Nakamura Tsunayoshi? Why not just... Nakamura Yoshi?"

"Yoshi can be considered a nickname until you're more familiar with your new name." Explains Nakamura. "My old name had been Jun."

He isn't sure what to make of the fact that it seemed like his former master also didn't have a family name. "There's no changing your mind, is there?" Tsunayoshi inquires and the simple look of contentment in those hazel green eyes is all the answer he gets.

"So... what do I need to do to prepare myself?" He asks, more or less resigned that he's going to be the next Grandmaster of the Nakamura Style and welder of Kirinzuresuto.

End of Part 1

Youkai terms:

Body is Primary

Heart is Secondary

Flames Listed:

Youkai Nature - Dying Will Flame

Kirin - Cloud Flame

Kitsune - Mist Flame

Nekomata - Storm Flame

Oni - Lightning Flame

Orochi - Sun Flame

Tengu - Sky Flame

Zasshiki Warashi - Rain Flame

Enenra - Desert Flame

Jinmenju - Forest Flame

Tsuchigumo - Earth Flame

Yato-no-Kami - Swamp Flame

Yobuko - Mountain Flame

Yuki-kami - Glacier Flame

Wani - Ocean Flame (no listed seventh Flame for Earth Flames)

Translations:

Kirin no ikari - Google translation says it's Kirin's Fury.

Kirinzuresuto - Google translation says it's Kirin's Rest.

Reijingukirin - Google translation says it's Raging Kirin.

Tsukumogami - Beings that a Youkai decided to create out of any kind material, often owned as property by their creators. It's frowned upon to sell them though, as there wouldn't be a bond between owner and the created being in question which is needed to reign in said created being.

Imori - Google translation says it's Newt.

Daimyo - Feudal Lords.

Kuge - Nobility comprised of Courtiers and High Civil Servants.

Nature of Beasts P 2: KHR!

I don't own Kateyou Hitman Reborn!

(_ T _)

There's not ever going to be a Tri-Ni-Sette. Nakamura Tsunayoshi thinks with clear satisfaction coloring his thoughts as he wipes Kirinzuresuto down with a cloth to get rid of the blood. There's not a lot of fighting happening within the plaza he finds himself located at and those others around him are also slowly realizing that there's a bit of a break for them as well.

There's a lot for all of them to do, but it's clear that things are going far differently then the population of... well, whatever they named themselves or their city state. It's an odd thing to admit to, given the location being in what his thoughts think of as Spain . Yet, it hardly matters, given what they're here to reverse or, in his case, prevent.

As he puts Kirinzuresuto back in the sheath, he takes in the sight of both fallen allies and enemies. There's a uniformity to the enemy's clothing that he hadn't really thought too much about, after all, he's seen such before, be it in his dream memories of Sawada Tsunayoshi or in person as Yoshi, later, Nakamura Tsunayoshi. They're more fancy then I'd expect, given this time period. He mentally admits as he makes note of the kind of identification they'd have on their cloths, let alone the condition of the odd weapons.

The comfortable warmth on his back brings him out of his musings concerning the enemy units. Glancing, he finds Azar of Red Star at his right, she's looking a touch sad but also stubborn. He's not sure what the Persians who are Active term themselves with or their own regards for their coloring, but among his own, she'd said to possess the Body of a Jinmenju with the Heart of a Orochi, which is an odd combination among the Youkai but then, Tsunayoshi doesn't really want to use the terms from his previous life, after all, the naming theme likely originated from this particular civilization, even if some of the Mafia, and the like's, 'beliefs' in regards to Flames were all their own.

Then again, given how these people arrange themselves, it's clear that there's a tier system... He muses as Azar finally breaks the quiet between them. "It is hard to believe, eh? That these... people do indeed bleed red, just like the rest of us, huh?"

It takes him a bit to realize what she's referring too and hums in agreement. "They thought far too much of themselves." He agrees, thankful that the language spell is still functioning. It seems that they didn't try to cancel out the more passive support boosts when they tried to clamp down on our offensive weaponry and the like. "They blood flows just as freely as our own."

"Here here!" Cheers one of the men from what might one day be called Africa . While there's a few that are clearly grieving beside their dead friends, there's more that are recovering their stamina along with their wits. "You are quite the blade dancer, Nakamura!" Remarks someone from behind and that comment seems to generate some stress relieving laughter from some of the people with him at the plaza.

He puts on a bemused look upon his face, he might have been a big fish in Japan but here on the mainland, Tsunayoshi is a smaller fish in a much wider body of water. He recalls seeing a fair number of various weapon masters during the trek West from China and even in China. More then a few had also traveled West to answer the Call to Arms concerning this city state's intent to create a restriction upon all beyond its membership in regards to 'access' to their own, innate power, their Flame or Flames.

It's the sound of a horn that reminds them all that they are still within the battlefield and that they can be encountering an enemy squad soon. After all, they're a bit more of a rag tag army then a unified one that is, right now, defending their home and families. Sure, people joined in groups but most didn't come with anyone save themselves, like Tsunayoshi.

"I'll encase our dead, then we can continue." He states and that reminds them of what happened before they reached and breached the wall. There's a number of people nodding and a few move to take guard as he begins to move among the dead while others cause the enemy bodies to either rot supernaturally fast or disintegrate as he encases their dead in modified Zero Point Breakthrough, with the help of various people, most of those that had orange know this technique, given how the enemies' Mists can't seem to get rid of it to make use of the dead body, few wanted to disrespect their own fallen dead by treating them like the enemy's own.

There's some fighting by the time he finishes but they are held back. Squaring his shoulders, he pulls Kirinzuresuto out and prepares himself for this next wave of the enemy, orange wings manifesting upon his back as his hair begins to glow the color of his Heart. "Damn that's still an impressive sight." He hears Azar murmur to one of her underlings as he takes to the air, heading for the line that's about to give way to enemy forces.

Every decade, there's a particular Festival that's Celebrated for seven days. It's one that, sadly, has him visiting China in order to join in as the Festival's reason didn't really matter to the Youkai of Japan . Most of the Youkai couldn't find it within themselves to care about the cause, the history, of the Festival, they are as isolationistic and rather proud of it as the common humans that live beside them.

None seem to give it much credence that there was any danger to themselves, that their very culture, ideology, and life style could have been affect by the designs of, now named, Echthros people; the word itself literally translates into Enemy and it's a word from one of the Greek dialects. Everyone who participated agreed that it's a good enough name to refer to the dead civilization, what survivors had been, which had been children under the age of five, long since adopted by various members of the alliance against their parents.

The seven stones they'd used as their civilization's anchors shattered and he'd been sure to grind even the stone shards into dust, once everyone had left that tower. Tsunayoshi didn't want a bit of it to linger, even if it were the size of a pebble. He'd even scattered the dust on his way back to Japan, sure, Tsunayoshi admits that he'd likely been far too paranoid about the seven stones, but his memories of his old life as Sawada Tsunayoshi didn't weigh on him once every little bit of those stones had been turned to dust.

He felt a great deal lighter and at peace with everything he'd done to get to that point. He'll admit, history may repeat but at least it will be one where people had a chance to cause different out comes to occur. There's nothing keeping human kind from using the inherit powers that are nestled within a person, be it their actual body or/and soul. Tsunayoshi looks forward to seeing how things will be, hoping that his part in changing the course of the world will have positive outcomes then negative.

Still, seven days... It's a little much. He mentally admits as he wonders through the market.

All fourteen aspects of power are on display in their own way. Tsunayoshi notices the various Clans advertising some kind of entertainment venue, be it a puppet show to a theater troops that enact different parts of the Siege of Dead Field and the Ice Break Through, which, of course, leads to the Taking of the Echthros' Tower. He does recall the various names of fellow Asians that participated and hearing of the various marriages along with bearing the urns of the fallen's ashes back to their respective families.

The numbers weren't as many as the Clans make it out to be, but then, the bulk of the forces had been more immediate neighbors likes of the Celtic tribes of mainland Europe and the famous civilizations like Greeks and Persians. They didn't have to travel as far as most, like himself for example. From China and the neighboring countries, there had likely been nearly three hundred to traveled West. And it wasn't all at once, either, but over the course of three years after the Pull West begun to be felt and had been active for that time before fading away.

Two hundred years and there's been changes occurring among the Chinese Active. Tsunayoshi mostly notices that the Active are preferring to sport special symbols on their foreheads that glow their Natures' color along with their eyes aglow. He suspects that there's a kind of ranking when it comes to those symbols, even though people aren't always wearing the same Clan uniform or clothing. It's a guess at this point as he's just realizing how lacking in... well... displays the Chinese Active show off.

There's a reason why calling the Chinese Active, Youkai, had been applied to them . It use to be easy to see a common shared idea between the two cultures, something that made it a bit easier to accept visitations between the two. Could be due to having been exposed to Western influences. He muses to himself as he mingles with a crowd of latents moving to attend one of the theater troops. I wonder how they've been influenced in turn?

Memories of the awed looks at the sight of his wings flickers through his mind. Tsunayoshi considers the fact that, if he doesn't want to draw attention, he'd better learn a bit about the special symbols, if only to fit in among the masses in the future, particularly as he doesn't want to draw more attention then needed. It shouldn't be hard to paint something on my forehead, something simple... He thinks as he finds a spot to watch the acting troop preform on stage.

The Shrine of the Forty-Two Swords isn't what it once was but Tsunayoshi isn't that surprised at the decline and there's rarely any visitors these days either. He can remember when it was proposed to create a temple or something to honor the history that is the forty-two swords, where they'd be housed for viewing as the various swords have either Sealed themselves so none can weld them or been shattered one to many times and none felt confident in doing justice when it comes to reforging them. Funny how the place I suggested ended up being where it was built.

Seated on the porch, the ancient Youkai looks up at the clouds drifting over head. Next to him is Kirinzuresuto, the sword never did warm up to any of his previous students so he's never passed on either his title of Grandmaster nor the sword. Few are the number of Youkai who know his full name and even among those, none seem to suspect what his actual Body is, most mistaking his Heart as his Body as well and given how intense politics had been throughout the centuries, which remains rather cut throat, it's better that way as it keeps people from trying to pull him into their messes or expect him to act in a way he's uncomfortable with.

That he's living where Namimori would have been is just a bit of a bemusing, inside joke that only he gets. There's a few farms but nobody really set up a town or the beginnings of a city. It's not like Dame-Tsuna felt any need to research history of Namimori, particularly not when he'd destined for Italy. He muses to himself, hardly for the first time in his life.

He's fairly certain that in any event, the date for the founding of Namimori has long since passed, leaving only himself to knowing of what could have been. There's no Flame Criminal Underworld, just various subcultures that aren't overly well known by the mainstream population. Although the number of Active have been growing. Tsunayoshi muses as he sips from his Enchanted tea cup.

Looking down at into the cup, he watches as it slowly fills up with tea once more and the cup's heat perks up. As he's about to sip again, he feels the Boundaries ripple at the beginning of the stairs that lead to the Shrine's courtyard. With a few blinks, he puts down the cup and with ease, grabs Kirinzuresuto as he rises up, putting the sword in its proper place upon his person as he glides towards the gate of the Shrine, doing his best to pick up any details of who it is that's coming to pay the Shrine a visit.

There's a vague sense of Outsiders/Foreigners along with a feeling of oiliness that's coating these visitors. It seems that the Boundaries can't tell if they are Active or not, never mind what subculture they abide to. Tsunayoshi isn't sure if he wants them to be a group of smugglers here to try and steal any of the swords or if they're here for some other reasons, like, issuing a Challenge as the Grandmaster of his style.

As he stands by the gate, which he sees pass as though it was a window, the group strikes him as vaguely familiar. Even as he cocks his head to the side as they get closer to the gate, Tsunayoshi gets a feeling that he should know some of them, if not all of them. The cloths are business suits that are favored more in America and in certain countries in Europe then anywhere else, but it's the sight of people with clear Asian features wearing them that strikes him as odd, after all, such cloths aren't that popular as most seem to prefer a hybrid style that's a kimono styled to give the impression of a tailored jacket and/or business vest.

Staring at those that shouldn't be wearing such cloths, it bothers him a great deal to see them wear such cloths. Even among modern Japanese Active, they'd at least arrive wearing something like a modern fashion formal kimono at the very least or going all out by wearing something far more old fashioned when visiting Spirit Realms and Shrines/Temples. They would also have someway to show if off their Natures too, if they were aware of their Body or Heart. He reasons with himself.

By the time they pass the final Boundary of the Shrine, which is about six feet from the wall that surrounds the Shrine of the Forty-Two Swords, he realizes that they're not... Local , as in, they're not native to this world. Tsunayoshi's mind whirls, his focus going inwards as he does his best to dig through his previous incarnation's memories. So, he doesn't react to the conversation that's happening on the other side of the door, not really listening to the words, which are said in a particular way with certainly unique accent that's rather pronounce to his ear.

The names do come and... He finds himself rather disappointed, with them, mostly. They sent ensured I'd be sent to a different, parallel world. I had hoped it was with intent in following me once their own lives had been lived. Tsunayoshi muses to himself, he'd done his best to keep track of news concerning any inquires concerning a Sawada Tsunayoshi, there's been none but he'd . . .

Regardless, it seems that I'd been mistaken. The Tengu tells himself as he pulls himself together while setting those hopes and aspirations aside. He settles his shoulders and lightly touches the hilt of Kirinzuresuto, it's presence helps steady his emotions.

Stepping forward, he gives the hilt a squeeze before withdrawing his hand. "What unruly visitors!" He snaps before opening the door, the transparent effect on the Shrine's walls fade with his closeness.

Though temped to have his Heart and Shape on display, a declaration of his Youkai Natures and a showing of his power, he re-frames from such a power display. Unlatching the left gate door with a simple touch of his hand, the door opens outwards. The group of Mafia Actives' looks range from dismay to disdain with most quickly evolving into threat evaluation and suspension which sees fake pleasant looks along with forced indifferent looks. His own face likely shows disgruntlement as he makes a show of studying the group, making sure to linger on their business suits with a clear look of indignation at such cloths on those of Asian descend.

"Who are you?! And where's the Tenth?" The silvery white haired man demands not long after he'd given the group a passing look. There's a clear indication that they did find themselves in agreement with that sentiment.

"Are you here to pay your respects to the swords housed at this Shrine? If not, you can leave." He states after crossing his arms over his chest. There's a bunch of cursing from his former Storm Guardian between a few threats.

It's not long before his former Rain Guardian cuts in after it's clear that he's unaffected by such crudeness. "I'm sorry, but, perhaps you can explain a few things? We've been told a friend of ours was here, at this place."

"This is the Shrine of the Forty-Two Swords, which houses said Youkai forged and welded swords." He answers with disgruntlement. "Three swords for each Youkai Nature that calls is island Nation home."

"Three... That means fourteen..." A certain member of the group mutters while the group did a collective eye blink at the words Youkai and Nature. "There's only seven Dying Will Flames!" Snaps that former Storm.

"Dying Will Flames?" He says in a droll way. "I'm fairly sure that the Youkai tradition is still the main stream among our community. From the elusive Enenra to the reliable Zasshiki Warashi, never-mind invoking Bodies and Hearts of the Youkai could have."

A chuckle erupts from the male former Mist while the group clearly tries to wrap their minds around such concepts. It's clear that they however they figured out his location, they hadn't bothered to learn about the world they sent his soul to. Or they just thought there wouldn't be any differences between the two. Tsunayoshi muses to himself.

"Earth Flames are just mutations of Sky Flames, aren't they?" The former Storm inquires, looking at a certain man sporting unique sideburns, it's the sideburns that makes him certain of the identity of said man more then anything else. There's no real answer, but, well, he decides to ignore his wondering of why they'd look towards the former freelance hitman for answers.

"Is there anyone else here? Visiting this shrine?" Asks the former Rain. He ignores the mutterings from the others.

"You are the only ones to approach the Shrine this day." He states simply. The mood of the people before him shifts in a downward fashion, after all, he doesn't look like he did in his previous life. Not that the wording I use will be over looked for long... Tsunayoshi muses to himself as one of the former Mists pipes in a different question, "Uhm, how about listing Youkai for us? We're... not local and we've never heard of the fourteen kinds...?"

Most of the tourists come here to see Youkai flaunt their signature features. He muses to himself before gruffly giving them the names of the fourteen along with which feature gets displayed. He doesn't hint at Bodies or Hearts though. They, of course, ask about which color is attributed to which Youkai, he doesn't call either of the two out, them being the former Rain and Curly Burns, when they slip away, likely trying to find another way into the Shrine or take a peak over the walls, they won't as the Shrine is a demi-Realm with only one entrance and exit for those that are visitors of the demi-Realm.

It's clear that some members of the group find it rather hard to swallow concerning reasons for which Youkai should possess which Flame while finding some pretty self evident, namely with those that are Mists being Kitsune. It's clear that Cloud equaling Kirin instead of Tengu that's rather hard for them to swallow, never mind the idea that Earth equaling Tsuchigumo, which is a spider Youkai. He didn't have any trouble accepting any of it, then again, he stumbled into Youkai society in his teens and had been a touch busy trying to keep his head afloat while everyone was judging him for his humble upbringing and anything else they can think of when it came to him.

He's fairly sure if any of those alive heard of his treatment of his teens, well, they'd likely won't believe it. Having been around for over countless centuries, most can't imagine there ever had been a time where Kirinzuresuto would have had any other welder never mind the idea he hadn't come from a well off Youkai Natured household. Whatever evidence, be it in writing most likely if it still exists, it's been sat upon until it's been forgotten about and if found now, likely seen as people being jealous over Tsunayoshi's good fortune, that it was just slander.

Never-mind the grapping about him welding a sword that is of his Heart instead of his Shape. Most tend to think of him as a Kirin instead of a Tengu as Tengu have, in more recent times, become more community focused, even if they aren't the ones that take leadership within said communities, so a Tengu that's incline to a solitary life like Tsunuyoshi is, has become rather unheard of instead of uncommon but heard of. As for Kirin, well, wandering is something they are still incline to do, only now, it's generally without a friend or attaching themselves to a traveling groups, be it merchants or acting troops, so, these days, they are expected to be incline to solitary traveling where it was the rare Kirin to do so, more due to how Court superstition about how it's not complete without a Kirin being a member of a Court and thus to prevent kidnappings of said wandering Kirin.

The group continues to do their best to keep his attention as their conversation about Youkai Natures and comparing them to the Dying Will Flames is winding to a close. For his part, he's been keeping from visibly reacting to the Boundary ripples, which signifies intruders trying to get in. merely feeding them which ever of his Shape or Heart they need to keep denying the efforts of Curly Burns and former Rain. Then he feels one of the Traps get set off and the Boundary near that location has stopped rippling.

It's not long before the group changes topic and asks about the history of the Shrine. Seeing as it won't be long before either the other joins whoever is in the Trap or does something else, likely anything to get help from another member of the group, he begins on when the idea concerning the Shrine was brought up and goes from there, not seeing any reason to go into unasked details concerning the swords in question. As the group before him grows a bit more restless as seconds become minutes, a yell sounds out as another Trap got triggered, thus both ended up getting caught and near one another, from the feel of it.

"Did you think it would be easy to get into this Shrine?" He inquires in a very dry tone as he crosses his arms before his chest. "The swords are considered priceless and there's been plenty of foreigners who've tried to get their paws on them for their private collection."

Various members of this group's expressions are quick to be turned into glares at him but Tsunayoshi is unmoved by the hostility. "Seeing you have less then pure intentions for visiting, I will ask that you go collect your friends and leave." He says as he reaches for the gate doors to begin readying to close them.

"Good day." He states once he's in the right position while the others are clearly torn between trying to bull rush him or doing as bid. The door closes and he bars it, then leans a bit on them as he finally allows himself to lower his mental guards to experience what emotions or thoughts that had been bubbling under his control. Which... isn't much besides the whole feelings of betrayal and grief about how, in the end, it seems his worth was only that of a Mafia Don instead of as an actual person.

Oh, Tsunayoshi doubts that this won't be the last visit by those of the Vongola Famiglia and others from that world's Flame Active Criminal Underbelly, but he isn't without support in this life. It's only a matter of figuring out how does he, ultimately, want to approach dealing with these dimensional travelers. As he recovers himself from his mental planning, the Tengu is sure to permit the two Traps to release the pair. It's really up to them to decide if they wish to try their luck breaking in again or retreating at this point in time.

As for the two Traps... Well, all of the Traps surrounding the Shrine are created by Reiki and Reiko, his Tsukumogami who are charged with the manage the outer property and are only active at night. The pair tend to assume the form of stone Fu Dogs during the day as they rest, which are nearly nine feet tall as they are posed in a sitting down position. Their nightly forms are humanoid Fu Dogs and their size isn't all that different from their stone day form.

Perhaps I should think about creating another Tsukumogami? As a butler? Gate guard? Tsunayoshi muses as he gets around to walking back to the building that's his residence at the Shrine.

There's a bit of a nagging question as to what took them so long to arrive in this world after he's settled down for sleep that night. He's been alive for centuries, his best guess is that he's lived for a good thousand and some centuries... It's not like he's been keeping track, really. All he knew is that when he lent his skills in putting down the threat of the Echthros was during a time when there didn't seem to be a Roman Empire, he's not sure if there was even a city by that name either...

So... what kind of temporal difference is there between this world and that one? If there is one then... Will I be alive when they do get around to traveling to this world again? Tsunayoshi wonders to himself as he lays in his bed, doing his best to relax and allow sleep to over take him.

- Thus it Ends -

- o - x -

Youkai terms:

Body is Primary

Heart is Secondary

Flames Listed:

Youkai Nature - Dying Will Flame

Kirin - Cloud Flame

Kitsune - Mist Flame

Nekomata - Storm Flame

Oni - Lightning Flame

Orochi - Sun Flame

Tengu - Sky Flame

Zasshiki Warashi - Rain Flame

Enenra - Desert Flame

Jinmenju - Forest Flame

Tsuchigumo - Earth Flame

Yato-no-Kami - Swamp Flame

Yobuko - Mountain Flame

Yuki-kami - Glacier Flame

Wani - Ocean Flame (no listed seventh Flame for Earth Flames)

Kirinzuresuto - Google translation says it's Kirin's Rest.

Echthros (Εχθρός) - Google translation says it's Greek for Enemy.

Tsukumogami - Beings that a Youkai decided to create out of any kind material, often owned as property by their creators. It's frowned upon to sell them though, as there wouldn't be a bond between owner and the created being in question which is needed to reign in said created being.

Busy Work is a Farm: VRGame

I don't own the VR Gaming Universe Idea.

Plus - No connection to any of my DxD stories that feature Terrance 'Terry' Oriax as an OC, even if he's been used in some of those stories.

/ | (= ^ _ ^ =) | **

It's a gamble , Terry muses to himself as he studies the Avatar that's going to him in the game, which is just one of the three latest Fantasy RPGs, it's also the one that has everyone being human. He's picked something that's unique for a name, Oriax, which is suppose to be a noble house for Devils...

Either way, the human digital model sports a dark green hair and, it took a bit, but he decided on a hard to pinpoint indigo. Although the real him is twelve, the Avatar is late teens, hopefully eighteen through twenty age bracket. Oriax's facial features aren't anything to write home about, mostly average, none too soft but not too fine. The shoulders are decently board but not enough to make it seem like his head is tiny or that he's all bulk and no brains.

He's also picking the board Spellcaster as his fix Class. It's the most Jack of all Trades magic using Class, allowing for mixing and matching various magic related abilities, of course, he could have just went with Druid Class, given what his plans for Oriax within Ddraig's Expanse but branching out from basic Druid would cost too much Perk Points to do so. A generic Spellcaster spends PP on a one to one basis for the first three tier Perks where the other Classes only get that for the one tier and, the spending beyond that one tier, well, it varies depending on Class. The down side has to do with needing to spend coins or real money to research new spells or to buy spells, after all, Spellcaster's in game content simply says they didn't feel the Call for any of the other Magic Classes, thus they are a rogue Class, free to do and go as they wish without answering to a higher authority like a Church, School, Patron, Family, etc.

Although this means that those other Classes have people to turn to for training, new spells, resources, and back up. They also have a Class feature that's shared among these Classes that the Spellcaster lacks, it's called Intuitive Casting. Depending on the wanted results of a spell, it could be increase to the duration, speed of casting, damage, or causing a status effect. Of course there are Perks related to this Intuitive Casting and are far cheaper for a Class to purchase, after all, it costs a Spellcaster PP just to get a Perk that's call Cultivated Intuitive Casting but it also has a per-requirement on top of its cost, which can be unique from one Spellcaster to the next, on top that the Perks to improve it come at a later tier then those for Intuitive Casting, thus costing more PP as well.

Oriax's cloths are that of a linen tunic and pants. The shoes seem to be leather though. Picking a simple satchel instead of a backpack, there's no difference between the two as they both just represent the Beginner Inventory, which has a limited number of slots, which is ten. There's always of the option of using real money to purchase the Harmonized Inventory, which would show up as a tattoo on some part of the Avatar's arms or hands. It grants thirty slots right off the bat.

Shaking his head, he goes to the Land Purchase tab and spends the amount of the Gift Card he bought last week on buying a decent amount of land at a rural spot. He'll be given the map and deed after completing the Tutorial at which ever country hasn't reached its max beginner population. Hopefully, it'll be the same country of what I just bought so I won't have to spend a lot of time working to get the money to travel there.

Letting himself breath out, he clicks the Log In Icon and presses the Confirm. Ddragi's Expanse has been out for six month and he can only hope that he's still in time to put his money making scheme into action. At least earn back what I used to buy the land and the game...

C [^ _ ^] D

Whistling, Oriax goes through the streets towards the City's Main Hall to register another Patent Blueprint, this one is for a {Barn} Fox Faced Hares. It's taken him over three months to finally create one that the beasts are happy with along with sporting the Enchantments he wanted the {Barn} to have. He's still working out how to shave them for their fur, after all, [Fox Faced Hare Fur Tuff] would earn him fifteen Silver or three cents per one, which means that a stack of thirty brings him four hundred and fifty Silver, or ninety cents, which is nearly a dollar of real money.

The exchange rate of Silver to Gold is twenty to one while the rate of exchange for Bronze to Silver is ten to one. He's read some post once that the exchange rate between Gold and Silver isn't that different then the first edition Tabletop D&D game. The exchange rate of real money to Gold is five bucks equals two thousand and five hundred Gold. What he's interested in is the exchange rate of Gold to real money, which is three thousand Gold equals five bucks in real money.

So far, in the year he's been playing, he's earn twenty-five dollars, which mostly pays for the land he bought at the beginning of the game and an eighth of what was spent on the game. Still, given that few people have jumped from Ddraig's Expanse for some newer game, Oriax has high hopes of earning the rest of his money back. It's not like I bought much else. I've kept to what I can get in game myself.

Although he'll admit, its been harder then he thought to start in on animal husbandry but he's found it easier to raised fields of the more commonly in demand magical plants, particularly once he figured out how to create Warding Staves to alter the temperature in a wide area around them, making it the right temperature for the plants to grow, to flourish even. Between adding a generic Health Potion to the water that he uses on them and the Staves, the plants grow up and out. He's had to re-do the rows because of how close they'd come to their neighbors, never mind he's been getting a yield from the plants once every two days instead of the three day renewal that their wild counter parts do.

Then again, he doesn't harvest all of the leaves or flowers or even roots. Depending on what sells best from the plant, he is careful to take just one unit from the plant. Given research into Greenhouses and how they work in the real world, he's been slowly working out what works in terms of Enchantments on those as well.

Most of his Perks relate for Warding and Item Creation, it's only in the past four months that he'd invested primarily in animal related Perks, which are generally of the Druid Class. What few Druid Perks had do to with plants, particularly those of the valuable sort, and of finding mineral pockets. The caring for the plants, never mind the transplantation of them, had been more of a what works approach along with purchasing various kinds of clay pots to see which plant needs which size.

Lonely Pearl Lily has a very expansive root system and found about a foot under the stem of the plant. It needs at least half of those roots to survive getting dug up, put into a very large pot, and then transplanted at the location he wants for it to grow. It's a very easy plant to find, given there's generally nothing growing around it, a three foot rotation in fact, not even grass. The most valuable part is its flower petals, which is a fertility ingredient and sells for two Gold per petal, which the flower has eight petals means sixteen Gold per flower the plant grows. It also seems to thrive best at a near zero temperature, any number under ten degrees in fact, as it grows multiple stems, the largest number seems to be fifteen in number. If the temperature is over ten, the stems are maybe half a dozen on average.

Moving out of the way of a Ranger and her Animal Companion, which is a Swift Mercury Weasel . The medium sized weasel's fur isn't as bright as it could be, which means that the Ranger hasn't spent the effort to groom the weasel's fur, which is a pity as a tuff of fur from said animal could earn her fifty Gold, as is, would only fetch ten Gold. Not everyone is here to make money. He reminds himself as he turns away from gazing at the Ranger's Animal Companion.

It's not a long wait to get into the Hall once he informs the NPC woman of where he has business, it seems that the wait line for [Travel Pappers] is why there's such a large line that's spilling out of the Main Hall. Oriax assumes that it's due to the Main Quests that's causing all of them to need them. "Might be a whole Guild too." He muses as he ignores the dirty looks from the various Players, some of whom have spent either Gold or real money to further customize their Avatars to appear as something other then human, he kind of recalls that one of the latest patches have a Ritual that allows a Player to alter their Avatars to the point where they can install Inherit Bloodline Qualities, so people can become Elves in everything but name.

In his opinion, he finds it interesting that it's got the word Inherit in its title, implying that some future update might be. Unless it just means that it's Inherited to the account then just to the Avatar... He muses to himself as he does his best to find the correct door plate that he needs to begin the process of submitting his patent. If so, then I guess it would be worthwhile purchase as it could apply to alt Avatars.

Soon enough, he's talking with the Clerk at the Patent Office. "Let's just confirm once more that you want approval before the selling of the Blue Print for this {Barn} ?" Asks Stella the NPC Clerk.

"I do. The address of the Mail Box is where to send the Inquiry of Purchase." He confirms with a slight smile which is slightly returned before Stella looks back down at the submission form.

"The Royalty Buy out is currently set at six thousand Gold or fifteen dollars." Stella states in a bit of a matter of fact tone, it's clear that she's finding the amounts to be questionable but he's intent on the price. "With the Royalty being two percent for four years after purchase." He adds.

Oriax recalls some of the previous Blue Print Patents he's heard of throughout his time in the game and there's plenty of bitching over the very idea that Royalties can be applied to any kind of Patent, most of the bitching has to do with Grieves-Light's forty-nine percent concerning his Blue Print {Weapon} Striped Sword of Badassness with it being a monthly Royalty as well. Which means that whatever that Player earns for that month, in whatever kind of currency, almost fifty percent of it is owed to Grieves-Light's and they have five days to pay what's owed or they'd become subject to the =Wanted= status. Doesn't help that there isn't an expiry date or the opinion of a Royalty Buy Out on the Blue Print either, so even if the Player scraps the sword, it does nothing as the Blue Print is permanently learnt.

And of course, other then looking nice, the sword isn't that great of a melee weapon. He recalls, there's been a lot of Player rage directed at Grieve-Light's as the Player isn't on a heck of a lot, which means a lot of those who didn't listen to the warnings that even the NPC clerks give about purchasing the Blue Print, which needs to be confirmed thrice over given the negative reviews that many Players have submitting in game. It's only a matter of time before the Blue Print become unavailable due to Grieve-Light's inactivity then because of Player rage.

Clearly a troll. He muses as Stella pours Sealing Wax , which is green in color, near the bottom before using the Seal Ring to press the Office's Crest into the wax. "It will take three to seven days for this Blue Print to be available for sale. Between now and then, it will be under scrutiny along with your own history with us." Stella says as she gently folds the contract up and puts it into the box that's to her right hand.

He blinks at the mention of scrutiny concerning the Blue Print but then, after giving it some thought, figures it's likely something new, likely from the patch that came in a few days ago. "I see. Well, I hope that the lack of sales isn't being held against me." He jokes and is awarded with a smile from Stella the NPC. "Good day."

With her echoing the farewell, Oriax turns and leaves the rather big Office, he assumes that if there were people sitting within the various chairs about before the space of the counter it wouldn't seem to be as big as it is. But, being the only one in said space, he finds it rather large amount of space being wasted. He heads for the tavern to check in with NPC gossip, be it merely a man lamenting over a missing wife/daughter/sister to the beginning of Monster Spawns are going to be increasing in the country soon. The game is rather organic in generating events and Quests, after all, the missing person rumor could be a simple ransom, run away kid, or something more sinister, like an NPC taking a step too far into studying Extra Dimensional Entities, which the players have created subcategories viva their appearances more then what they are actually like, Celestial, Demon, or some use the term Devil, and Elemental.

Either way, he can see some shades of Scales of Albion in how NPCs act as the heralds of when there's going to be changes within the game, only, it's more expansive then that game. After all, he's learnt farming tips from listening to NPC farmers complain about things that don't really mean much to a player. While there isn't any books detailing how plants grow, there are journals that do result from various Quests that various NPCs generate, sure, they're only suppose to feed clues to the players about whatever thing that ended the NPC's life, but they do a good job documenting a reasonable and believable daily life. It's hardly that surprising that most players can't get a heck of a lot of money for said journals, given that their only value had towards the Quest that ultimately generated the journal.

Getting them for five Bronze for said journals, that's four more then they'd get from selling them to bottom tier NPC merchants, typically those that sell very questionable items but they are also the only ones who'll buy clearly stolen items, it's how the game devs explain away the Ownership tag, the Maker tag is optional. Sure, if you have the right tool and enough magic, you could get rid of the Ownership tag, but that is usually a clear hint that the item in question is stolen. Few merchants are willing to purchase those kind of items from players, even if a player manages to talk the NPC into buying it, they don't get a heck of a lot of money for it, given that the merchant is taking a risk in trusting that the item isn't stolen.

Once he's squirreled away in a corner table of Liver's Worth , its not the nicest bar but it had been located close to where the working class NPCs live in the city. Oriax made sure of taking a picture of the tavern's sign before heading it, he'll share it on his various social media accounts along with his personal review of the bar. It takes a while before anyone arrives to speak with him concerning an order, not that he much minds as he's doing his best to follow along with a deal of a sort going on about a table away, one that might be a drug deal at that. Which, is a rather interesting development and one that's pipped his personal interest.

Slapping eight Bronze onto the table, he merely states to get him whatever drink and food that amount will get him. The coins are collected and the waitress hurries away to do just that. The group of five finish their hush hush business and by the time his simple loaf of bread and watered down beer arrive, that group has only three members. Oriax is quick to drink the beer, doing his best to keep a sour look off his face at the taste and takes a few bits out of the food.

Counting to thirty, he then follows after the last member of that group. It's slow going but he manages track the man to a statue. The statue is of a boar, it's been aged within the game and it's got cracks in it along with missing its ears and tail. The base is in worse shape, with small holes pitted on it and there's even bird shit staining both the statue and the base along with... maybe blood or other substance. Casting Darkvision on himself, the shadows of the buildings don't hinder his ability to watch what's happening in that very minor plaza that makes up this particular city's common living area.

And so, Oriax watches as the man missing his left hand's pinkie and a nicked right ear go about selling something to street walkers and shifty teenagers. Once more, he finds himself impressed with the game as he waits for the man to sell out of his supply and will, hopefully, lead him to the supplier's base to either turn in their percentage of the profit or to get more of whatever it is he's selling. What kind of drug is it? It has to be drugs. Oriax muses to himself.

Nicked Ear finally seems to have sold out as the NPC is beginning to drift away from the spot he'd returned to, even if he'd mostly circle around the statue for a bit, waiting for customers to show. Following a bit after, doing his best to be causal, he does his best to pick up his pace to get Nicked Ear back into view. Thankfully, the NPC keeps to the back alleys instead of going onto the boarder and, now, busier streets. It's early evening, given the sun is beginning to dip down, beginning to cause a merriment of colors to show from the western horizon.

There's beginnings of subtle marks showing up on the walls of the alleys, Oriax hears the chimes alerting him to his discovery as he'd disabled auto pop ups concerning discovery notifications. There's even a whistle that alerts him to him qualifying for a Quest. Once Nicked Ear pushes a bit of wooden fence before slipping through the gap, the fence is around an old manor, so he finds a spot to take a look at everything that tried to pop up.

He unlocked the Mini Map for {City} Shamrrock , unlocked {Codex} Shamrrok City , there's various ? under his Reputations tab, discovered {Location} Passion Manor, and the Quest he's capable of accepting is called Pine Dusting Investigation. Oriax reads what details the Quest is willing to give at this point, which does involve a drug called Pine Dusting and finding out its connection to Passion Manor . It seems that the manor before him is an Event Dungeon.

Frowning, he pulls up his Spell tab and then switches to his Earned Skills tab. Oriax isn't prepared to enter into said Event Dungeon but there's no timer for this Quest either. I'll have time prepare for exploring it. He decides to himself as he accepts the Quest.

And if I can't find it in myself to go through with it... Well, I can always see if there's a party looking for something special to brag about and point them in here. He decides, not that he particularly likes that idea, after all, he'd been the one to make this discovery and thus, he wants to be the one to reap all of the rewards, such as they are. It'll be something to rub in the faces of Chris and Ross if I get something good to show off.

With that, Oriax turns on the Mini Map for this city and makes his way back to a major street so he can make use of the Deed to return to his farm. The thought of seeing their faces show off their envy and anger at the fact he'd manage to Solo an Event Dungeon all on his own... He can't help but smile at the mental image, even if it means actually going to school physically instead of using his farm's Study to continue with his education while online.

C [^ _ ^] D

It's been nearly six since he'd submitted his first patent and in the intervening years, he'd never received a request letter. So, it does indeed surprise him to see a [Patent Request Letter] upon his Study 's desk. One that hadn't been sitting there when he'd gone to feed his various animals about four hours ago. Oriax had come to his Study to check on the update concerning Online University Software download to find something else waiting for him.

Forcing himself to take a calming breath, he picks it up and opens it. It's a request for purchasing {Fence} Solo Killing . The name wasn't his best but, well, it allows for him to take a single member of the monsters he's raised out of the pen and kill without automatically causing the rest of the monster mob to become hostile the moment said taken member dies. The further from the penned in monster mob that particular victim is taken, the odds of them realizing what's happening goes down. He'd created {Barn} Butcher Building that ensures that the notice is zero when combined with the use of the {Fence} Solo Killing.

Oriax looks for the name of the one looking to buy the Blueprint, its a player by the name of PaperArmor. The name doesn't mean anything to him, it does invoke an odd tidbit of information about Ancient China and paper made from bamboo being used in creating armor, but he doubts that's something this particular player knows. After all, he'd looked it up due to some random throw away mention in an old article that was someone's rant about armor in game and impracticality of breast groves of the breast plate that one generally sees on women avatars.

It's the player note that causes him to snort, after all, he doesn't see any reason to wave the Royalties clause on this Blueprint, even if nobody's interested in any of his Blueprints before now. So... If you object, why not just pay it off up front? He wonders to himself as he considers his reply.

With a shrug, he pulls out an Ink Pen from his desk drawer and writes his simple decline of removing the Royalties clause from this Blueprint. Folding the letter back up, he then watches as it vanishes, returning to the which ever vendor the buyer had used to inquire about this particular Blueprint. Satisfied that the matter should resolve itself without much hassle, he sits down at the desk proper and accesses the Online Education function that the Study had been built for.

Noting that it's still got about thirty percent to go, he exits out of that function and heads for his kitchen to grab lunch before beginning his other chores for the day. After all, one never knows if that NPC laborer who happen to hire is a spy, thief, or some other kind of criminal. Nor has anyone ever approached him to do a simple buy in so they can claim his farm as their Home .

So, for almost six years, it's only been Oriax himself attending to various matters concerning his fields, his monsters, and his farm's stores. Even with the game being six years of age, few games out there offered the same kind of interaction with NPCs that this game does, like getting that one night stand pregnant or having a family with another player that results in NPC kids. Then there's the changes to its setting that's seen it expanded upon, it had been done as organically as it could, given that this is a video game, which that saw the players able to leave the world where they started in for those extra dimensional planes that those supposed Celestials, Demons/Devils, and Elementals are native too. Although they need special equipment to visit said planes as they have vastly different environments compared to the core game world.

Rumors circulate about a future DLC about a lot of things, mostly about the idea of allowing players to get it on with those other beings along with marrying them, which means, also having kids with them. The second most popular rumored DLC is actually people being able to purchase their very own barren plane and terraforming it however they want. A variation has to do with people colonizing those other dimensional planes, kind of mimicking real world examples, which would trigger invasions occurring in return.

Personally, given what he's achieved with his green houses, the creation of pocket realities is already something players can create, it's just a matter of them realizing that they could and begin experimenting with it in game. Which means that the terraforming of a plane to ones liking is already been something he's accomplished without anyone being the wiser. Oriax had kept track of his notes, he just didn't know how to use them to create an in game instruction manual.

As for the game devs, given the various updates concerning the Perks over time, it's clear that they have noticed his farm and how he's been managing the various monsters he'd originally captured and those bred on the farm. He has had to redo Oriax's Perks a few times, using his own Gold at that but, well, there was that one time when the game devs did a hard reset for everyone's Perks, which was just last year, due to them deciding to be fair when it came to that update that had made a layout change to the Perk Tiers display and their descriptions, which caused some player outrage but the newer players to be happy about as it evened out the system. After all, some Perk had been moved around but the player didn't get a PP refund, so, some players could have a Perk from a previous tier that had been moved to a different one while a new player wouldn't get it until they reached the right level and have the PP to get said Perk, which would be more expensive then that previous player.

With his mind musing over future Perks and Spells, Oriax made and ate his lunch. Once he'd finish, he went off to check the various green houses and to do some weeding over at his fields. Muff and Ruff, a pair of Tamed and Trained Field Hound s, they stand about three and half feet at the shoulder with typical green coats that sport spring green coloring that shape oak leaves on their respective backs, they both have dark green fur upon their ears and appear as sock on their legs and they sport a creamy green fur for their belly. They have a body build of a real world dog breed, which is border collie. The leaf patterns range from all kinds of tree leaves, typically the leaf pattern is determined by which tree makes up the bulk of the forest they inhabit.

They both have Collars that declare their Names and his own as their Owner. As for what Field Hound is based off, they are based off of the Cu Sith from Scotland folklore. Their pelts are highly prized, particularly the backs as that's typically where the leaf pattern is. They do form packs during the winter and they disperse during the summer, when their pups are big enough to fend off various smaller predators, the pups don't always follow their parents either when that happens. It's during the autumn that they begin pairing off before they seek out other Field Hound pairs to form a winter pack.

Both are friendly and while they had been wild, they seem content to act like typical dogs when it comes to him. That include games of fetch and getting belly rubs. Both are full grown and have been with him for three years now. He's not sure where it is they sleep as he's found no evidence that they ever make use of those dog houses he built for them, but, they also don't sleep in his house. Which is something he had read and confimred while he'd been hunting down wild Field Hound s, he hadn't needed to invest a lot of time into studying them as there are various NPC hunters and trapper accounts also mention was that little fact, actually it seems only when they are puppies does one find them sleeping, particularly in a den. The adults seem to be found only when awake. None have ever found sleeping Field Hound s, be it by stumbling upon them or by search.

Given the folklore beast they are based off of, he is kind of incline to think that they might rest in another dimension. It's merely a guess on his part. Its not something he's obsessed about, needing to prove that idea to himself, not when he's got other things to do and to study.

| { o _ o } |

Randel, or to use his current Avatar's name MightyPen, isn't sure why they ever agreed to this bet in the first place. Never mind that the game is practically a decade old, or that it's still got a thriving community and player base. It's not even a game we normally like to play... MightyPen thinks to himself as he follows after William, or should it be PaperArmor?

Jessica, AKA ThistleWand, stops every few feet to glance at the Map , as in, a physical in game map that they bought that has the location of Oriax's Territory circled so that PaperArmor can try and 'reason' with the player over the Royalties concerning the Patent Blueprint concerning that {Fence} . How exactly do a trio of almost fourteen year olds plan to do that with Characters are are only just reached level five... He doesn't know.

PaperArmor's Class is Fighter, ThistleWand's Class is Wizard, and his MightyPen is a Rogue, he figured they needed someone sneaky and Jess had already claimed begin the magic person of their group. He'd been tempted to pick Cleric, but... Didn't really want to figure out which Deity he'd want to follow, which is likely why Will forgone Paladin for Fighter. Both needed to pick a Deity and they hadn't thought to look over the list of Deities on the game's wiki to pick which would suit them. Wizard allows for diversity among the spells, it's not like we couldn't afford buying healing spells viva scrolls. He reminds himself.

There's also Perks, so, she should be able to add those kinds of spells to her list. MightyPen reasons with himself. Not too comforting a thought, given we're on our way to visit a player who's Character is over level hundred. A snide voice that sounds a bit like Nick states with hidden, dark glee.

He does his best to ignore that imaginary voice and finds himself bumping into PaperArmor. "That's... That's... Huge..." He hears ThistleWand stammer. "Just..." She gestures a hand out enough for him to notice out of the corner of his eye.

Taking a step back and then moving to stand on PaperArmor's right, he finds himself spotting a Dire Jasper Deer , gender stag , given that the deer sports some antlers upon the head. He's incline to agree with ThistleWand that the stag is very huge and that's with just a growing rack of antlers, which, given the season, is rather understandable. The coat is a dark, likely sporting purple highlights if they were up close to it, a grown adult , which means that the stag's shoulder should be about five feet, and more then likely to kill them with a single kick in pretty much their direction. He couldn't see either set of the eyes, which is suppose to be four, a set on either side of the head and the other set of eyes a bit more at the front of the head.

"That's a fence." PaperArmor states and it takes him a bit to tear his gaze from the stag to notice that, yea, there does seem to be a low stone fence with glowing energy stationed at the large stone towers of the wall. The energy orbs seems to be a crimson color, at least, it looks to be a bright enough red to tell from where they are standing.

"So... What does that make that stag? A pet?" He inquires as his gaze returns to the stag once more.

"Maybe an alarm?" ThistleWand suggests. "Like, to alert them that they have visitors."

"Well, enough gawking, we came here for a reason." PaperArmor states and begins moving forward once more. He shares an exasperated look with ThistleWand before she follows behind their friend.

"That's why your here, maybe." He mutters out loud as he follows behind the pair. "I'm here under protest and I'm sure Je... Thistle is here as support."

So, deciding to focus on his friends instead of on the giant stag monster, he studies the bright yellow of PaperArmor's hair. His friend had gone for the classic hero look, aka blonde and blue eyes. He's even sporting a bit of a goatee to make himself feel older then his actual age, the Character appears to be in his late twenties. The armor he's wearing is mismatched and it's all from what dropped from various monsters or as Quest rewards. Also, for some reason, PaperArmor is trying for the dual welding fighting style instead of doing something sensible and doing archery or maybe the classic sword and shield combo.

ThistleWand's hair is a bright pink and she spent a bit to style the hair so that there's a pair of braids that go behind her head with the rest falling through the goove or whatever it's called. Her hair is longer, almost reaching the small of her Character's back. Her eyes are a royal purple, something that she's always done when it comes to her Characters' appearances. She didn't pick the largest size for her Character's breasts, something about finding the look uncomfortable, which, yea, he totally agrees as he can't imagine crossing arms before someone's front with something that size would be comfortable or natural. Again, the cloths she's wearing all come from drops and rewards, her spell book is still rather plain in appearance, sporting a simple red cover but he knows she's got plans for how to personalize it. The age appears to be in the twenties as well.

As for himself, MightyPen's hair is a simple black and he picked a dark green for his Character's eye color. Compared to PaperArmor, he's about half a foot shorter then him but he made his Character look beefy, with wide shoulders and thick muscles. The idea had been to go thuggish build with plain, unremarkable in the looks department. Unlike the other two, he went a dark tan and he does prefer his hand crossbow but he's got a rapier for close combat. Not that he likes the idea of getting in close quarters with anything, but he knows that what he wants to happen likely won't always be what happens, so, the rapier is a back up weapon, plus it's Finesse Feature means he uses his Dex when it comes to using it instead of Str. Like his friends, his own armor is mismatched, only, he's wearing a cloak to make it harder for people to notice. He did debate about having a beard or something for MightyPen, but didn't like the idea of feeling it when he rubs his face. So, MightyPen looks younger because of the lack of facial hair, even though he aged the Character up into the twenties like his friends.

It takes a lot of walking before they find a Gate that marks the entrance of the Territory and in that time, they've seen a few more Dire Jasper Deer within that fenced area that sported the stag. Does with fawns, the does sporting a lighter shade of purple and they stand four and half feet tall at the shoulder. The fawns sport two tones of purple fur coat, much like actual deer fawns, they sport spots and a creamy white underbelly. A few of the does are elders as they sport a set of antlers that are a rich green and only two prongs branch off of the main antler. These only come off once every three years and the darker the antler, the better medicine that they could produce, it's different then the stag's discarded antlers, which are only good as an ingredient that slowing down a status effect's timer in a potion or elixir, it's best used in a negative status's timer then in a positive status' timer.

Well, you could use them as decorations. He muses to himself, after all, the stags' antlers are generally white with green tint at the base and upon the prongs. There's a decoration featuring half of a stag's rack above the Gate along with some rare and highly valuable flowers, roots, and leaves. It seems that the antler has been craved enough so that some of those can be stuck into the antler decoration before hanging that over the Gate .

"I can't figure out what kind of flowers those are from down here." Remarks ThistleWand and he nods in agreement, "But... well, they likely are something valuable, if one thinks about the fact he's using an antler as a mere decoration out in the open like this."

"We don't know for sure that Oriax is a guy. It could be a gender reversal." ThistleWand counters his previous remark, which he feels very justified in giving her a flat look as she glare pouts at him. "Ah, guys? What kind of monsters are green furred and look like dogs?" PaperArmor asks with a great deal of alarm.

"What?" Both of them reply in alarm and sure enough, there's a pair of green dogs lopping their way. Their manner reminds him of his sister's cat, Mittens, when she's stalking that robotic mouse toy. Heads low, ears perked up, and tails held in a stiff manner. "I don't like this." ThistleWand murmurs as she takes a few steps back while she places her hand on the wand's hilt while PaperArmor takes a few steps forward with his pair of swords out.

"You can't think you could win against those guard hounds?!" MightyPen hisses at his friend as he brings his hand crossbow out. Sure, he's not liking the odds but Will is his friend, he'll be damned if he just abandons him just because he picked the wrong player to yell at. Besides, it's kind of a dick move to sick dogs on us without at least greeting us! He thinks as he grimly does his best to pick which of the two he'll try for, although now that the two dogs are weaving a snaking path, one going left and the other right.

Just as he gets a clear view of the eyes, which, it turns out are a bright blue, there's a whistle and a very male voice calling, "Muff, Ruff. Heel." And to his complete and udder amazement, the two monstrous dog obey, going from a stalking position to a laying on the ground one. He would have preferred them just sitting but they did stop advancing toward them, so, maybe he shouldn't complain.

"Muff?" He hears ThistleWand murmur while PaperArmor does the same, only with the other dog's name. "Yea, real creative, I know, but it rolls off the tongue fast and easily." He finally tears his gaze from the green dog that's to the right to find a man striding towards them, the voice having altered slightly in volume as he gets closer.

He also notices the hard to place eye color, which could be a blue or a purple? "Oriax?" PaperArmor inquires once the... Ranger? I mean, they could be his Animal Companions... He muses to himself as his gaze drifts to the right once more before snapping back at the maybe twenty year old Character. Which better Class to be a rancher then a Ranger? MightyPen reasons to himself.

"That's what I chose for this Avatar." The green haired Ranger states, he only now got to see the highlight of the hair that shows some green with a sunlight hitting the guy's hair. There's a bit of disbelief over the fact that this guy not only owns a pair of green monster dogs but his own hair color is also a green that could look black in the shade. Got to be a Ranger, which other Class favors green that much?

The use of the word Avatar actually gives indication that the player behind Oriax isn't from their country, likely an American . "I'm PaperArmor and I'd like to discuss..." But the guy cuts him off, "It stands, the Royalties. And I'll have you know that they aren't that much when I submitted the Patent. So, you either take the buy out option or just live with paying me my cut."

Rude! He thinks and he's fairly certain that his friends would agree. "But... Nobody's interested in your bloody Blueprint before us!" Snaps ThistleWand, given that Oriax has pinned a look at PaperArmor that, even he, finds himself shrinking inwards at seeing. "It's just a single purchase anyway!"

"Yea, no. I spent years wasting time and resources on creating each of those Blueprints. Each of those link up to another and to another, a lot of them are improved versions, sure, but each work as they should without wasting a single bit over what's needed to get the max benefit out of each resource spent." Oriax states, his gaze switching from PaperArmor to ThistleWand. "If you don't like it, then figure it out on your own time and wasting your own resources trying to match what I've created."

Which, we can't do, given we wasted two weeks researching the best ways to earn money in a quick fashion by going through various forums and various walk throughs. We need something to pay out in five months time while following the guide lines of the bet. MightyPen thinks as he catches PaperArmor's gaze. They'd hadn't meant to spend all of that actual start up fund on buying so much land that ended up being located at a snowy mountainous region, they should have said who'd be the only one to buy land but they hadn't...

The idea of selling alive and mostly unharmed monsters had been the reason why they'd even gone looking into the Patent Blueprints when their attempts are creating fenced areas on their co-owned land fell through. Like you three know how to build a fence. Snorts a familiar hated voice of Nick echos in his mind.

"It's not like we're going to be sticking around to even pay the stupid money!" Snaps ThistleWand and he actually face palms with his left hand, leaving the crossbow to be held with the right. "Thistle..." He hears PaperArmor groans out and he wonders why they just didn't go through with that in the first place.

"Then why are you three here? What's the point of tracking me down? Never mind the fact that you could have gone through with that without going to all the trouble of visiting me." Oriax states and, well, he really does wonder why the two of them couldn't have listened to him when he'd said that.

"Now you're just being mean." Is a weak comment from ThistleWand, which Oriax is clearly not at all affected by. His fingers begin rubbing the bridge of his nose as he wonders if it wouldn't be quicker to just slice his own throat to end it, after all, they are on his Territory and, thus, could be blocked from leaving until Oriax has finished having his 'fun' with them.

"Mean, huh? And what does that make the three of you?" Muses Oriax in a tone that is oozing with disdain. "You didn't come here for any reason other then to yell at me due to your own anger, frustration, and whatever righteous reason you could think of in your previous mood."

"He's not wrong." He remarks out loud and he can already feel the pointed looks from his friends. "Oh, come on, we spent too much time on this when we have other concerns to do concerning that bet." MightyPen lowers his hand to send a particular glare at the both of them, PaperArmor gets a sheepish look while ThistleWand refuses to face the fact this was a waste of time.

"Muff, sit." Oriax commands and he feels his heart speed up while his whole body freezes up. It takes a second to realize that the monster dog of the left had been closing in. "Here, Muff. Ruff."

Both soon stand on either size of Oriax and it's then that he notices the simple black collars that the two sport that can be glimpsed slightly in the fur about the necks. " Field Hound s." Oriax informs them and his eyes go toward their backs, sure enough, there's leaf pattern on the backs.

"Oh..." He feels faint at the idea that they've been so close to just having their throats ripped out. The monster that is Field Hound begin to be found in level sixty areas and are on the player's created list of Unfriendly Monsters. As in nobody's been able to get them as an Animal Companion of any stripe, not even a Ranger with all the right Perks geared towards Dominating any monster to become their Animal Companion.

"They can't be Dominated!" He hears PaperArmor shout while stumbling back, even he'd taken a few steps away from the... Ranger? And his pair of monsters.

"Dominate? Ah, yea, that... Mental magic... Yea, its only temporary duration if it works at all." Comments Oriax before couching down and stroking the pair's heads, the two's eyes half close as Oriax scratches behind their respective ear. "No, I Tamed them then proceeded to Train them."

"Kind of like I've done to most of my wild caught stock." Oriax continues. "You see, Dominate doesn't result in friendly beasts once they get out of that particular state. Nor do they level up while in that state."

"They're not all that friendly with strangers, then again, I've never seen the appeal of inviting a persistent headache that would result in me bringing these two with me out into the field or into a city." The player adds. "Players wouldn't stop trying to bug me over the idea of selling them to them." There's a snort of derision as Oriax finishes scratching the pair's head and begins to stand upright once more. "Well, seeing you're here anyway, want a tour of my farm?"

"Sure." PaperAromr squeaks out. "Yes!" ThistleWand exclaims with clear glee. He puts his crossbow away with a simple, "Might as well."

MightyPen will admit, later, that it might have been the actual start to them developing a genuine interest in Ddraig's Expanse and them coming to respect Oriax for managing to keep all of his accomplishments from the main stream players. After all, they'd been kind of right about it being more profitable handling living monsters, they just didn't realize that they might have bitten off more then they could chew. After all, plants, at least, didn't need a heck of a lot of attention to be healthy nor do they all go hostile if someone for accidentally harming a member of their Mob.

It would also be due to Oriax that MightyPen would also sign up for Online Schooling, which helped a lot to get away from his personal demon in the form of Nick Holden. Although it also saw him lose a lot of weight and have to, grudgingly, begin doing his own home recipe for his Capsule's IV with Oriax encouragement and some research into it to assure his parent's concerns about him spending too much time in his Gaming Capsule.

| { O _ O } |

BeeJewel would like to think of herself as a compassionate person, it's why she picked Druid as her Class and took as many Perks to aid in figuring out how to humanely handle monsters when she'd kill her quota for a Quest. She never owned a player sold Mount either. So, when every trick she has fails when it comes to calming the Peacock Tyrant Drake that had been the Animal Companion to a Guildmate and friend, KullTron.

Sure, they both heard the rumors about a glitch affecting all kinds of Mounts and Animal Companions, but they didn't think it would matter, given they'd only had plans to check their in game mail, which should take fifteen minutes and no need to call upon KullTron's Animal Companion given they weren't going to be heading out of the city. They, of course, didn't think it mattered as they'd been in a city after and the Peacock Tyrant Drake is suppose to be stored in whatever in game storage place that those who own Animal Companions and Mount are put in when not in use.

BeeJewel didn't know how it could all go wrong within a minute of logging into Ddraig's Expanse only that it did and KullTron is getting blamed for ignoring the warnings that players have been posting in various forums. Defending her friend brought on scolding onto her own head as well along with her various attempts at trying to calm the Peacock Tyrant Drake down whenever they used capture Spells to slow try and keep the monster pinned down to a particular location.

Every time either KullTron or herself got within a certain range or in direct line of sight, the Peacock Tyrant Drake would enter into an Enraged state, which quickens the timers of various status effects on the former Animal Companion. Which isn't something either of them wanted, never mind that they can't log out due to this portion of the city is sporting an area wide Engaged in Combat effect. It's worse when the drake manages to swallow bits of either players or NPCs, as it causes the monster to begin regenerating health. It's worse when it's the head that gets swallowed as there's just so much blood and the rest of the body just keeps moving for a time, not always collapsing on the ground and twitching either.

"Someone PM that ass Oriax or one of the Classic Trio!" Bellows a newly arrived player, who's appearance is like that of an Orc while the rest of the members of the party, also Orc looking players, begin to use actual ropes and nets to interfere with the drake's movement. It works very well compared to the use of spells as they could be used to add weight to slow the former Animal Companion down. "Fucking twink of a Ranger." Mutters one of the Orc looking players near her as they use hammers to put in some kind of metal spike into the cobblestone road.

"Hey! We didn't know this was going to happen!" BeeJewel snaps at the trio of Orcs near her, the one holding the metal spike merely grunts while the one doing look out replies, "Yea, you just didn't read today's updated news. If you did, you'd had learn that Animal Companions of a certain level and above get expelled from that Spacial Stable upon logging into the game, regardless of where the player is."

"I've never heard of a Ranger named Oriax." Keen|-|AWK muses, clearly trying to find out about why this player should be called. She's rather curious herself.

"Not a Ranger, he's a Spellcaster, actually." The Orc explains and she is fairly sure she's not the only one to be rather surprised to hear that's his Class. "He's got this whole farming operation that's been on going for nearly as long as the game's been going and nobody knew about it until this last update caused this problem."

"Farming?" She mutters out loud before any of the others listening in could. "How do you farm in a game like this?"

"Here tell from MightyPen, he started with magical plants. Once he had a good steady source of money from selling bits of that, he started going into Artifact Creation build along with Animal Handling." The one doing the hammering explains. "He Tamed them the old fashion way, you know? Once he got the right genders penned up and ensured they got the kind of room they felt safe in. Handling them when they were young, being gentle and the like." The one holding the spike in place continues.

"Muff and Ruff are something." The out look player remarks. "The two are Field Hounds and boy, I'm glad he's not into PvP. I mean, his methods mean that his Animal Companions level up as long as they're in a party with him."

BeeJewel is sure she's not the only one to shiver at the idea of a pair of Field Hound s leveling, after all, their max level is suppose to be hundred and ten. From the sounds of it, this pair, these Muff and Ruff, are well beyond that level and she knows how hard it is when dealing with a single hound out in the wild. She shudders to imagine what they'd be like with spell support and healing.

It's not like there's much time to continue questioning the three Orcs as a rope is brought running over and then they have to deal with the drake. Minutes pass and they reach something of a stalemate as they manage to use the ropes and nets to keep the drake from running free in the city but at the same time, attacking would cause the ropes and nets to decay or get destroyed, freeing the drake from their efforts of controlling its movements in a physical manner.

In the end, it's one of the Classic Trio that arrives, a woman sporting pink hair, purple eyes, and on the back of a Mountain Ram Horned Yak . The yak is one of the wild cattle monsters but what's different is that it sports horns like a sheep but is the size of a real world draft horse, which is a good size monster on its own. The yak bellows at the sight of the drake, which the drake echos and strains the ropes and nets, trying to get at the yak. The drake is still a bit taller then the yak but the size isn't as huge between a human sized person the drake. There's like, three feet in size but the yak is far more bulky then the drake, which is long necked, display wings, and long tail.

Still, the yak snorts as the woman riding the yak with no riding gear pats the shoulder. "Let's give it a few more minutes before I'll have Fluffy here lead the drake out of the city." The woman states and she blinks as she notices that she's right that there's no riding gear but there is a harness about the chest of the yak, it's takes her a bit and getting a bit closer to notice the stitching on the strap that she can make out.

The Ownership and Maker tag pops up, the Maker of the harness is ThistleWand while the Owner is Fluffy. It's the snort that causes her to turn to her right to see that the yak's head has turned to regard her. "Don't worry, Fluffy here is a trooper and not easily spooked." The woman says cheerfully, giving the shoulder a scratch and the yak's head slowly turns away, ears flickering.

She takes a few steps back as it feels like nothing makes sense now, like her understanding of the game she's been playing for nearly ten years and yet, she clearly doesn't know what one could actually do in the game. After all, none of KullTron's previous Animal Companions behaved like that, had reacted like they were a living creature instead of some robotic... well, toy. A toy that could only preform the simplest commands, namely, Attack, Stop, and Follow. Even player Mounts don't act like that.

It seems to happen rather fast in her opinion, of the leading the drake out of the city. "Who was that?" She hears Keen|-|AWK asks as they help clean up the street.

"That's ThistleWand, she's a Wizard and one of the Classic Trio, as we call them." An Orc explains. "We call them Classic Trio as they are a Fighter, Rogue, and Wizard. You know, the back bone of a Classic Party?"

She's a Wizard?! BeeJewel thinks in disbelief. "They're in some kind of co-op with Oriax, then again, he pretty much mentored them in how to turn their Territory into a money maker. They focus on growing hard woods that NPCs like for ships and construction projects." She hears the Orc informs them. "It's located up in Rockery Arctic Mountains, not a good spot to grow a lot of prized plants or manage herds of monsters."

"Likely got it real cheap, the land, I mean." One of the others comments. "Maybe, but given the location, it's rather hard to think it was worth it." The Orc says dismissively.

= Epilogue =

The whole event was something Vicky would think about for days after it happened. What motivated her to seek out one of the four, it was due to the Mentor Program that the game devs had been finally patched in when they finally explained that certain programmers among their team had decided to make a particular statement by removing certain game codes. So, while they work to reintegrate back dated codes into the game, they had this hastily created, mostly untested Mentor Program that would allow people to apprentice themselves to another player and would grind Learnt Skills faster along with a Perk Marking thing, where any exp gained instead went to buying the marked Perk. One can only Mark a single Perk but that's still a mind blowing idea, particularly when you typically had to save Perk Points from leveling up just to buy a Perk. She's not sure what was wrong with the Perks as it seemed that resetting them has either been disabled or there's a glitch about the pricing, they weren't very clear about that nor did they address it during that interview.

She ended up with MightyPen as a Mentor, who had personally Tamed and Trained a Pale Regent Qilin, he went to the game country that was the closest equivalent in setting to some mishmash of China, Japan, and Korea. She was given a Fox Faced Hare kit to raise, whom she named Sly. It had been experience, balancing Sly's needs verse her own wants but, well, somehow, she learnt what she needed and would find it rather rewarding having Sly for company.

The six months it took for them to finish integrating the updated back codes had seen a lot of people looking at Ddraig's Expanse if a different light and renewing interest in the game as players began to spend more time among the NPCs looking for hidden Quests and hidden Features that could be unlocked. In a lot of ways, both KullTron and herself were in complete agreement, what happened with the drake ended up being something of a blessing in disguise as they also found themselves once more at one anothers' side.

As for Oriax, well, he never would end up being the only farm in Ddraig's Expanse . Then again, he'd also picked up an online job, so, his focus wasn't totally on his farm, then again, he never lack players looking to learn under him and thus, his farm was never neglected.

Will, Jess, and Randel did win the bet, just, not in the manner they expected. Working under Terry, Oriax, they would find enough hidden Quests and Events to reach the needed terms of the bet within three months of knowing him. It was Oriax that had deemed that their lands weren't suited for much, at the time, unless they wanted to invest heavily in green houses. Growing hardwood for timber harvest had come from PaperArmor, when he went through every thought concerning money making with said land. It works, but they have to use magic to speed up the growth of the trees along with using a bit of magic to cause the tree to grow a particular spell pattern on their trunks to ensure that pests can't harm the tree.

MightyPen has a Plan for the land, it's just that he needs a lot of resources and magical study to pull it off. ThistleWand is more then happy to help, once everything has been set up and ready to begin putting said plan into action. PaperArmor didn't have an opinion one way or the other, concerning creation of an amusement park in game. Oriax is mostly waiting for MightyPen to break down and ask him to help with the temperature wards that would be needed to ensure everyone attending said amusement park wouldn't feel the cold of the mountains. After all, Oriax is still the most experienced magic user that the three know in game, if only due to all of his merriment of testing he went through back when he'd been focus on creating Patent Blueprints.

Unknown to Oriax himself, the game devs know he's the most knowledgeable player within the game when it comes to Item Creation, outside of those that had a hand in programing the game truthfully. Sadly, their private betting pool concerning Oriax's farm never did see a winner given all parties agreed that the D.A.R.G. interfered with said bet, so everyone got their money back. As for those D.A.R.G. members, which stands for Digital Animal Rights Group, their cell got arrested and charges pressed on them, in some countries, players actually sued them for trauma and other reasons.

Sadly, D.A.R.G. would continue their campaign throughout various games, often times not caught until after damage has been done to the game. They are viewed by all to be game terrorists and many companies do their best to screen programmers so that their current and future game projects don't suffer from this group's 'enlightened' point of view.

= The End =

Projected Self Image: Harry Potter

I don't own Harry Potter! Also, A/B/O dynamics.

The poll for this was one set up on DA and as the votes have been tallied, by two votes, I give you a Harry Potter Universe fanfic!

- { o } -

How many lives can this record save?

How many minds can it liberate?

Feeling like I'm liable to make a change

Here I stance in a stage as I take a leap of faith

I let the music lead the way, all that passion I put in the game

- A-Reece, Residual Self Image

First Year

Feb. 10, 2020

Slytherin Dorms

"Did they really think it be so easy?" Murmurs Jack to himself as he listens to the pair of Purebloods discuss their 'devious' plans. Groaning, he tries his best to go back to sleep, trusting that the conversation is getting recorded and stored on his home's computer.

He finds it laughable that the Wizarding World still thinks themselves as progressive when, in truth, they are very archaic, particularly when it comes to secondary genders. Not that it really matters as the majority born are Betas, if they Present at all, as there have been fewer and fewer cases of Alphas and Omegas that have presented among their population. While it's chilling to have first heard about Rituals, Potions, and Spells that could alter that, it didn't take much in the way of research to figure out that, over time, the Wizarding World's population have either developed an immunity towards said Potions and/or resistance towards the Spells. The Rituals... well, given the fact that they aren't practiced with regularity, it's good odds that they've lost the knack when it comes to preforming them with great success. Else they wouldn't have the problem of people never Presenting in the first place, never-mind trying to change it using magic. Inbreeding... So much inbreeding...

Given that Muggleborns, or to use the coarse term of this culture, Mudbloods, are descendants of Squibs, they also have something of a resilience towards said Potions and Spells. Enough that they wear off and the lazy inherit nature that's become the norm for the population at large means that they never thought to figure out what they'd need to change to make the Potions better, bit it when it comes to ingredients or methods of brewing the Potions. As for the Spells... he finds it harder to pin point what could be done beyond a change in gesture or a change in pronouncement?

So sue him for being something of a fantasy nerd before he'd gotten his letter when he turned eleven, which was on June 1st of 2019. Jack had then spent a heck of a lot of time figuring out the best cheats when it comes to schooling along with, upon learning about the whole course of events of the famous Harry Potter and that What's-His-name, figuring how how best to protect himself from the prejudice that still lingers in this culture that he's expected to become a member of, starting from attending and graduating Hogwarts. It's something he isn't happy about, you know, getting death threats from children of the previous followers of said dead man.

Seriously, why won't they ever say the stupid name? The bloody ass has been dead for, well, how long? He thinks to himself as he gives up on trying to make himself comfortable in his bed. "Not even have the bloody fucking guts to write his name up in any history books." He mutters out loud.

The trunk he's currently sleeping in is just one of his security measures along with a timed spell that would unlatch the trunk's lid so he can get out. Sure, the trunk had been expensive but, well, melting down the spare PURE GOLD coins into tiny gold bars had seen a good amount of money for him to exchange for more, which he melted into more gold bars, etc. etc. He also found out a little factoid that the Goblins have far more 'useless' Muggle money that's taking up room that's always in need of getting expanded, as it's the rare Wizard or Witch that exchanges their PURE GOLD coins or PURE SILVER coins for 'useless' Muggle bills and coins.

It hadn't been hard to pay off a Goblin to actually see and wander through the room, of course he'd been smart enough to have this tiny teleportation wardrobe that's considered a LITTLE GIRLS' TOY , which, you know, ACTUALLY WORKS . It's meant for besties to exchange doll cloths, but that wasn't all it could teleport between the pair of tiny wardrobes and there wasn't any kind of alarm that went off from him stuffing it full of various large number bills before the fifteen minutes were up. The door merely checked to see if he, himself, was carrying any of the contents of the room, which he wasn't, nor does the room seem to alert that some of its contents has been stolen by said TOY when he exited out of the room.

If he spent a good, solid minute staring at the poem that's by the main Bank's door, well, that's clearly him being sure to admire the classic building and memorizing the poem. Sure, the toy only got created and popular in the last twenty years but, he still can't wrap his mind around that this bank never thought such a toy could be used like that. Then again, who bribes a Goblin just to see a room that's set aside for 'useless' money? He thinks to himself.

Did he feel guilty about melting down those metal coins, only, he needed the funds as his parents only have him so much money for this 'hack' of an education. Mentally shelving the issue of those that most term his 'father' and 'mother', he refocuses on the fact that the none within the culture seem overly aware of gold and silver prices, never mind that, later, he's found a reference about how majority of the gold that circulates around came from the famous alchemist, Nicolas Flamel, as he's the only one to have created the infamous Philosopher's Stone, which creates gold from any metal and the Elixir of Life. Knowing that, a bit of his guilt faded from his shoulders.

It's later, as he comes to experience more attitude from Goblins and the various members of the culture does it fully fade. After all, there's only so much anyone could take of being looked down upon as an inferior, not because he's a child but simply due to his parents lacking magic, that any one could take. It's something he mentally finds himself doing within his own mind whenever he'd been out and about in the magical alleys, when he saw so many magical items that could be used to improve life of the average person outside of this culture, heck, should be used to improve the lives of those living within it!

Spacial expansion spells casted permanently on a room/closet/greenhouse could cut down the cost of a families' groceries or creating places for people to live. His trunk is just one example of that kind of spell used on a portable item. Sure, the trouble did come in the form of the lid needing to be unlatched for him to exit out but he fixed that issue easily. Heck, he's even managed to pay for the room to allow him access to the internet and a phone connection, as long as nobody unplugs the various enchanted items from his wall sockets in his room back home.

Streaming videos, movies, playing games both online and off... And the others have to make due with that space next to where the owls live to get reception for their cells... He thinks to himself, although, to keep from being suspicious, he makes a morning trip to said spot before heading for breakfast to check the news and that's it.

He knows most prefer doing so after supper but there's a select few who prefer to do so in the morning, as it's less crowded and thus easier for a signal. He keeps to that schedule even on the weekends. Saturday mornings are library time along with seeing him writing out various ideas that comes from looking deeper into a subject and then he grabs a packaged dinner from the Kitchens as he'll end up losing track of time between watching/listening to a streamer on his desk top and playing a game on his Switch. He'd be lucky to go to bed around midnight.

Sunday mornings are homework, getting his weekly owl orders of candy, personal Potion ingredients, soda, and stationary stuffy, which he sent for on Friday when he checked his supply. Afternoons see him creating Potions, typically following the easy step by step recipe index cards he'd created during August when he'd bothered various people about tips when it came to Potions, they are merely simple Potions that help in memorizing and processing information. It's easily handled using a beginner chemistry kit as he is very leery of Potions brewed in a pewter cauldron due to the lead that could taint the contents. Sunday nights tend to equal him reading various webnovels while listening to music before going to bed.

The weekday evenings range between said happenings, from playing games to reading whatever catches his fancy while music plays in the background. If something is due overnight, yea, Jack would work on it but, that's rarely a problem, given how that only causes more work for the teachers. Said teachers... It's said to realize just how few adults there are living in Hogwarts compared to preteens and teenagers. It's why he finds classes do dull, there isn't a way for those advanced students to transfer out from the general class nor does there seem to be a budget to increase the number of teachers, after all, they still have a Ghost teaching incorrect History, who doesn't even notice the state of the students, which means that a lot of students have long since gone to said class and none of the other teachers seem to be aware that the student body has decided History is a free period and very optional when it comes to doing the course work.

Most of the other Muggleborn can be found in various empty classrooms either playing board games and tabletop games or doing some practical spell work with their wands. Depending if a Half-blood came from which background, they could have joined in with the Muggleborns or followed the example of the Purebloods and hanging out by the lake or edge of the Forbidden Forest, generally just being lazy if they aren't having bragging contests or advancing House Rivalries within Hogwarts.

Being one of the eight Slytherin of his year, and a Muggleborn to boot, he generally gravitates back to his trunk and does whatever takes his fancy during that time. Although, he is sure to set an alarm so he isn't late for the next class. After all, he's not a Pureblood, thus isn't seen as a 'true' Slytherin and yet, he's a Slytherin, which means he's different. Jack doesn't regret picking Slytherin as his House, after all, he is ambitious and isn't afraid to let people know right off the bat he's cunning person. It's just that... Slytherin has become more known as that Pureblood House then the House of the clever and ambitious. He thinks to himself as he feels himself drift off.

- **: -

First Year

Mar. 13, 2020

Wifi Spot

"Pandemic? It's a pandemic?" Jack finds himself muttering as he stares at the news articular. "This COVID is now considered enough of a threat for them to write it off as a pandemic."

"It is?" He hears one of the older students ask him and he nods, moving to show her his cell's screen. The others around them seem to be kind of interested in that news, a few seem to be looking it up on their own phones while the Gryffindor, who it takes him a bit to realize is an Omega due to the fact her hair is braided, which is the way that Omega students are suppose to have it after they have Presented. The fact she's another Muggleborn student is likely why she did in the first place, looking around, he notices that there's at least two Alphas among the group, they are wearing wand holders on a belt, again, it's what's expected of an Alpha student.

"Well, bloody hell." Mutters the Gryffindor and he pulls his phone back from her. It's a bit as he's leaving that someone wonders out loud, "So... How do you think this will affect the Wizarding World? You think they'll have a Potion or something for us?"

"Were they even aware of COVID-19 in the first place?" Asks another student. "I mean, you know how divorced Stale-Bloods are..." Stale-Bloods is something that's been used for those born within the culture, it's like how Mudblood is an insult used to define a Muggleborn only a bit more generalized. He doesn't need to catch the last bit to know how that sentence would ends.

Upon catching up to Steve, who he met on the train and considers to be an acquaintance, "Pandemic. They've ruled COVID to be pandemic worthy." The Ravenclaw jerks his head before looking at him with wide eyes.

"It's true! There's even news clips posted on Twitter and the like." He says as Steve grabs his left sleeve of his robe.

"Are there any listings of anyone who died?" Steve asks, it takes him a second to remember that Steve's parents had gone on vacation a week ago. "No? Not yet." He tells Steve.

"Eh? Johnson? What's wrong?" Tina asks, she's a Hufflepuff and a Half-Blood who'd grown up in the care of her dad's parents, so she spent most of her childhood outside of the Wizarding world. At nine, her maternal grandparents sued for custody when their heir died and they hope that she'd Present as an Alpha as her father did, who'd been a Mudblood in their eyes and so had Tina until they were without another option when it comes to who'd inherit their family name and vaults.

"COVID is now a pandemic." Steve reveals to the Hufflepuff and he also lets go of his sleeve. "COVID... My parents went on holidays to Spain just last week, left last Wednesday."

"Pandemic?" Tina's fellow Hufflepuff inquires, it takes him a bit to realize that his name is Kevin Smith, Beta, and is a Prefect. "What's this about a pandemic?"

"It just got announced on the news today. COVID-19 is now classified as a pandemic." He pipes in. "If you don't believe me, you can ask Coleson, he was checking it on his phone as I was leaving." Coleson having been one of the two Alphas and a member of Hufflepuff House.

With that, he heads for his House table. It's not until he's ate his full that it becomes more known among the students, of course it's more of a issue for Muggleborn students then it is for the Purebloods and a selection of Half-Bloods but it's still something that can impact their life here at Hogwarts. As it should. He thinks, after all, Purebloods are humans and are thus susceptible to getting infected, there might not be a magical cure for it either. Given how wide spread magic is, there has to be a magical community in China, which is where this COVID originates from, How isolated can this information be?

- **: -

Sixth Year

Sept. 1, 2026

Hogwarts

The incoming group of First Years are all Muggleborn, which, isn't that different then the year before that and the year before that. COVID-19 ravaged the Wizarding World's Staleblood population, particularly all those that never Presented without the use of magic, the most common way is with a Potion and, depending the the gender they picked to be, it would need to be taken daily (Omega), weekly (Alpha), or monthly (Beta) survived. As for himself, he'd Presented rather recently and as an Omega too boot, which isn't has rare as it once, while it's nice to know he has that option, he finds himself more particular towards women, be they Beta or Omega, then towards men of any gender.

Unlike many others who'd Presented and from Muggle backgrounds, he's got no plans on dressing in such away as to declare what he actually Presented as. Muggle suppressants were a God send as is having access to a prescription soap. The doctor he visited had a cousin who'd been Muggleborn and Presented as an Omega, which, well, the short of it, said Omega got kidnapped and killed in a very sketchy Ritual meant to transfer the secondary gender to the couple's almost thirty year old daughter. Both the daughter and the Muggleborn Omega died, even though nothing should have gone wrong. The doctor in question had been there when the parents of the fifteen year old had gotten enough liquid courage to flat out start cursing out the whole of the Wizarding World for their daughter's death and then would go on to share the various trinkets that their daughter had brought home to prove that magic exists.

Nothing happened to the parents and he rather not know their names. Still, it had been what drove the doctor into tentatively looking for the usual pattern concerning who has a Muggleborn in their family and, well, their significant other is a Beta magical, not from the UK but from Italy. He's fairly sure that there's something of a black market going on, although said market hasn't got that much of a foot hold in the UK but more elsewhere. It's likely that whatever magical equivalent to gender suppressors and that scent removal there had been, they aren't cutting it any more. Which, well, fair, there are people who need to have special suppressants created for themselves as the normal, store bought doesn't work for them.

From what he's heard, those Purebloods on the mainland were hit fairly hard but they also were more spread out and have wider genetic diversity, so, unlike the UK Purebloods, they actually had survivors while the only way for the UK families to survive had to do with using a hasty, experimental Potion that suspends COVID spreading within their bodies, but, it also keeps their cells from dividing nor can they get pregnant. It had been implemented about ten months after the Muggle Governments declare COVID-19 a Pandemic and the Wizarding World of the UK refuses to submit to getting injected with the Muggle vaccine, which has them at odds with Parliament.

And yet, they still refuse to hire Muggleborns to fill higher positions. Positions that need to be filled. Jack thinks himself as he glances towards the Staff Table, none of those sitting there were the teachers that had been teaching him when he'd been a First Year or a Second Year. All of those sitting at the Staff table have been those that had Presented naturally, which makes them all Betas. There is a few among them that are Halfbloods, like the current Defense Against the Dark Arts Professor, the famous Harry Potter. He heard that his friend, Hermione Granger nee Weasley, is the actual acting Minister of Magic, given her husband, Ronald Weasley, is still bed ridden and it's only a matter of time before he dies due to his injuries he got during the November Alley Riot of 2020.

There's plenty of rumors that are on going and thus, plenty of those still alive Stalebloods who resent having a Muggleborn, a Mudblood, so close to the seat of power within their culture. It doesn't matter that she's likely far better suited to holding down the position then those few Stalebloods that remain, it's that her lineage doesn't have the right number of magicals in it. Most seem to think she's not even trying to keep them from getting over ran by the Muggle Government, when, in fact, she is clearly in support of allowing the Wizarding World to continue having their right to reject taking the vaccine, even when it's clear that by maintaining that minority's rights is enabling something worst to come from having magical humans infected with a deadly virus that's already shown to be untreatable through current magical means and methods. That magic could cause the virus to mutant and, well, a lot more lives would be lost.

When they had a working vaccine, he'd been among the five to aid in organizing the series of trips to the right clinics for those who wanted to get the injection. He'd gotten the injected with the vaccine on the second trip even. All of the Muggleborn and those from Muggle backgrounds among the Half-Bloods had done so as well. Nothing went wrong other then a few wanting to sneak away to do some shopping while they were waiting for the rest of the group to get their injections. It was a bit understandable that they'd want to do some other then waiting around but, well, it did take a bit longer to track them down and return within the time limit they'd set up. Plus, they could have easily been entertained by their phones, given they had very good reception as they weren't in Hogwarts and had such a tiny Wifi Spot for the number of students who own and wanted to keep up to date viva their phone.

"Looks like we got another one." Muses Victor Walker and he hums in agreement. He's the only surviving Slytherin of his year, thus, he should have a lot of responsibilities, if only there were actually people around for him to, you know, exercise said powers. After all, the few older Half-Bloods had either graduated or they'd been pulled out of school as the Staleblood parent or grandparents wouldn't stand for the teen to remain in a 'Dirtied School'.

So, any Slytherins that exist outside of himself are younger students and, of course, Muggleborn. Not to say it's been easy sailing as it were, all of those that join have clear vision of what they want and they are more then willing to use their brain to work out how to get it. Which, at times, equals sneaking into Ravenclaw Dorms to browse their personal and private library, look for hidden treasure in the form of forgotten contraband in out of the way places, hitting the Wifi Spot after curfew to have a more stable internet connection, steal a flying broom to explore Hogwarts without walking around on the ground where they're more likely to get caught, etc. and etc.

He very much finds a great deal of entertainment in figuring out who's out where for what and how to go about punishing them in a creative enough manner that they learn something useful and won't try to get back at him for said punishment. Given that there's only one of him and it's clear that most of the Staff aren't happy with him for either their own reasons or for the simple fact that he's a Slytherin and thus 'dark' Wizard in the making.

"Got the sweet innocent look down pat." Remarks Taylor Micheal from across from Victor. Gazing turning from the Staff to the kid wearing the Sorting Hat, he hums in agreement with that observation. "She might be able to pull off that dejected look and walk for being sorted here." He tosses his two bloody cents in. "No bet." Victor states.

It's not long before the young girl, who's name is Natalie Brooke, does get sorted into the Snake House. There's a few wolf whistles from a few members while the rest of the table settle for clapping as Brooke slowly, shyly, and, most 'importantly', miserably to the table. A glance out of the corner of his eye and he notices the looks of sympathy she's getting from the Staff about having been 'forced' into Slytherin.

Prejudices were still a thing and people can have the strangest case of selective memory. In the rumor mill, there's talk about him being some disgraced second or third cousin of this family or that family, it's why he'd been sorted into Slytherin, as the Sorting Hat knew he wasn't an actual Muggleborn but a hidden scion of some dark family. It also explains why he'd been such a loner during his First and Second Year. Like, willfully ignoring the times Steve has dragged me into playing football for his team or when Tina manhandled me to sit with the Hufflepuffs for a whole of November of my First year.

While it's given him a lot of leeway when it comes to life improvements, Jack found he could do without the herd mentality that seems to be cultivated at Hogwarts. He glances at the collection of First Years that are now part of Slytherin, so far, the total is nine. The year before, the total had reached a dozen.

Jack turns to regard the crowd of unsorted First Years, the line is all the way out of the Great Hall door. It's been a rather interesting phenomenon how more and more Muggleborns have lived to be eleven since COVID and its likely due to paranoia and restrictive measures that keep the Stalebloods from venturing among Muggles. Never mind the whole age of the smart phone and lack of understanding of tech. He muses to himself.

If not for some Muggleborns doing their 'civic' duty concerning keeping video evidence of magical use from blowing the lid off of the existence of the Wizarding World, it's more then likely that there wouldn't be a secret magical culture hidden among, well, at least in the UK. It would be funny if the other European Countries had something already ready to go if the secret got revealed viva some Live Stream. Jack muses to himself.

By the end of the Sorting, they got sixteen First Years joining Slytherin, which is a fairly high number if one considered the usual number of kids to get sorted into the House in the past. It had been nearly a hundred Muggleborns among the incoming year with Half-Bloods making up the rest of the year. They, finally, get around to eating, thankfully whatever announcements were saved for after they've eaten and were short.

With the night almost over and done, he gives a short welcoming speech plus need to know info like where the Wifi Spot is on school grounds along with a quick, flashy display of magic which gave the group maps to said spot by him conjuring the maps, saying that they'll vanish after three days time, which should be enough for them to memorize the quickest way to said spot. Soon enough, he's in his own room and yawns widely as he stretches before pulling out his trunk to head to his private space.

He's paranoid about his secondary gender getting discovered by the Staff. Jack just doesn't trust any of them one bit, not when there's a population crises on going on below the Staleblood's health situation. They're pretty much an evolutionary dead end. He muses to himself as he gets under his covers after putting on PJ pants. Have been for a long while, they just don't want to admit that magic can't cancel out the health problems this level of inbreeding causes.

- **: -

Dec. 18, 2031

Bunker Temporal Apartments

Settled on the couch, he watches Victor pace while Steve shuffles, lays out, reads, collects, and shuffles again a tarot card deck. One he had gifted the former Ravenclaw during their Third Year as a Christmas present. His tail tip moves side to side in a lazy fashion as his head rests on his paws, his eyes following after Victor. He kind of wants to pounce on the man but re-frames from doing so, after all, he doesn't want to accidentally hurt him and his Animagus form is that of a large cat, a jaguar actually.

"I'm surprised he hasn't tried anything." Steve comments and he merely flickers an ear while Victor seems to pause in his pacing. "Eh?"

"Well, he is clearly interested in you and your pacing." It takes him a few seconds to realize who it was that Steve was talking about while Victor likely got a clue from seeing where Steve had been looking. "Ah, right. Cat."

He huffs at being called simply cat but Victor does settle down on one of the free lazy boy chairs. "Must he be a cat?" Victor asks.

"Heat avoidance." Replies Steve, reminding the Beta about his secondary gender. "Still a bloody fucked up thing that happened to him." Victor says with sympathy coating his tone.

"Well, the spell work is almost done and since he never got pregnant, it's going to vanish completely." Steve reminds Victor. "Bloody fuckers got want they earned in the end."

"Could have done with a bit more tearing limbs off then just snapping all of their necks." Victor remarks and he snorts, shifting his weight as he recalls what it had been like, having some asshole die in his mouth, with his teeth in their throat.

He'd been the only one with a predatory Animagus that had been large enough to kill the Stalebloods who'd been tipped off by a certain former Headmaster about the Registry of Gender that, it turns out, all students who get sorted have their names written on, that will show who Presented and as what. It had been a lost and forgotten item from a few centuries back but it seemed that Dumbledore had found it but hadn't alerted anyone that it had been found.

While the spells had taken to the kidnapped victims, the compulsion to have kids wasn't that compelling, there was this part of it that caused pain if one doesn't have sex during the heat which, well, did work just fine along with this bit that ensured that they couldn't get a benefit from suppressants was, unfortunately, decent and covered majority of the stuff that's sold over the counter and the stuff that would work was expensive, as in, a few thousand pounds for a single month's supply expensive. At least it can't affect us while we're in our animal forms. He thinks.

It shouldn't work that way, but, well, it wasn't under normal circumstances and that seemed to be enough to tip the balance, as it were, for it to work like that for them. He's just glad he'd manage to help each of the others in achieving a total transformation before the bloody gits got around to arranging that... whore auction. He'd killed not just the kidnappers that day but also the interested clients who'd come in desperation to try and ensure that their bloodlines were secured by any means, which, in this regards, would be magical rape drugging.

The funny part was, he'd killed plenty of grown adults, among whom had survived that Dark Who's-It reign and yet, he, an almost seventeen year old Hogwarts student killed nearly forty people, eight of whom had been the kidnappers and the ones applying the magical rape magic. None of the stunners got close to hitting nor any leg locking jinxes. It was... very pitiful when one thinks about it from a certain angle but very fortunate for him and his fellow victims.

He never returned to Hogwarts, Victor handed Steve his trunk, which had all of his belongings, and he just... Did what he could do deal with his new condition and plot out what course of action would be the biggest middle finger to the Wizarding World and a safe haven for not just himself but for his fellow victims and almost raped Omegas.

"Jack, relax." Blinking a bit, he finds that his claws had been digging into the couch and he'd ripped the cushion. He can only imagine what ever evidence of his emotions he'd been showing as he remembered that particular event. Once his claws were out of the cushion, Steve sends a repair spell and it's not long before it's as good as new.

"Right, so, you think she'll get the date they plan to do this?" Asks Victor. "Tina will, they wouldn't suspect that she, you know, have her own thoughts and feelings over this 'repairing' of time." There's a clear hint of derision towards Tina's maternal grandparents, who are surprisingly still alive after it's been nearly eleven years since COVID Pandemic happened.

"They can't be that willfully blind to her feelings towards them... Can they?" Victor inquires and both Steve and himself snort. "We are talking about Stalebloods here. Willful ignorance is an art form that they practice." Steve remarks and he nods his head in agreement.

"One can only look at their actions during what happened with Harry Potter and Dark Who's-It." He sends out, the collar about his neck had likely glowed to show it had been activated. It's the work of Cathryn Clayton, who had been a fellow victim of said event.

"How sad is it that I think I've seen more reliable news on Facebook then when I went through old copies of the Prophet?" Steve muses out loud and he does the jaguar equivalent of chuckling. "Magic is really the only thing these Stalebloods have going for them, if not for that, they'd had gotten themselves killed decades ago."

"They really think magic could fend off their results of decades upon decades of cousin marriages?" Victor muses and Steve replies, "Of course they do, magic is the cure all of everything that's gone wrong with their lives. In fact, if one didn't have magic, they're better off dead."

Silence falls and its a while before Steve begins anew with those tarot cards. Jack finds himself slowly falling asleep when the door of his apartment opens and in walks Tina along with a few others. "They're going to go through with their plan come the Winter Solstice." She says once the five with her find spots to sit while she, herself, conjures up a seat.

"Do we know who they plan to send to the past?" They know that the Stalebloods are aiming for some point during World War 2. "They can't possible think it's a good idea to send someone already infected with COVID back in time... Do they?" Ask Liz, clearly underestimating the stupidity that is Staleblood thinking.

"It's just an observation! I mean, wouldn't it, I don't know, cause a COVID pandemic back then? And given what would be happening, wouldn't it ensure changes in regards to World War 2?" Liz asks, she's among the youngest Muggleborn or Half-Blood in attendance.

"That... would mean that they'd have to employ their brains and, you know, realize this interesting pheromone of cause and effect!" Gareth states in a very sarcastic tone that oozes contempt. "Which, you know, means no fixing a broken vase with a simple spell."

"We prepare the Bunker for their attempt and hope we did our calculations correct enough to kill the agent before they arrive, which, if we've done it right, will also kill the COVID that they'd be carrying." He states with his head up and is sure to glance around the room.

"If we succeed in getting sent back ourselves?" Asks Tina. "We'd have a huge ass building that's got its own farms, various ways to entertain ourselves, and, you know, other shit that could keep us from needing to exit out of the building." He says. "If we do this right, we should cause little in the way of altering the events of World War 2 and, well, we'll discus with the rest of the residents about what to do once the war is over."

"And, if they don't like that, we remind them that they did sign the residential contract and point out the clause about we getting to decide a singular course of action if this building ever ended up in the past." Victor states calmly. "After all, we're only covering the time period that is World War 2 and I'm sure they'll agree that interfering with either of the events that would be happening is for the best."

"It's not like we're saying that they can't leave once that whole thing is over and done with." Steve adds. "Just want to ensure things don't get derailed and, well, it's not like another dead body would raise a lot of concern."

Soon enough, the conversation takes a different route and people are venting over the idiocy that is, like, twenty Stalebloods and their minority of Muggleborn and Half-Blood supporters. Jack doesn't find it all that unique so, it's not long before he begins to fall sleep once more. The voice of people that he trusts around him, lulling him to slumber.

Ending it here

Soul Calling Rituals: Grandmaster

I don't own either of the following: Grandmaster of Demonic Cultivation or That Time I got Reincarnated as a Slime with a side of Sui from Todemo Skill de Isekai Hourou Meshi.

} - O - {

If I told you this was only gonna hurt

If I warned you that the fire's gonna burn

Would you walk in? Would you let me do it first?

Do it all in the name of love

Would you let me lead you even when you're blind?

In the darkness, in the middle of the night

In the silence, when there's no one by your side

Would you call in the name of love?

In The Name of Love, Martin Garrix & Bebe Rexha

Wei Wangyu isn't sure what to make of the rather injured... man? Or was he a teen? Either way, he's not sure of what to make of the unconscious male on the floor. "Dad? Is he going to live?"

His dad, one Wei Ying, replies, "He might? Ah, maybe you should pour some Healing Potion down his throat."

Moving slowly as to not alter the blood that's on the floor that his father told him to be careful of. While he does manage to create a tentacle to probe what he is beginning to sense is the head, he continues to pull what he can from around him to fill his energy levels. There's something about this place that isn't as rich in magic as he's use too. It's familiar, but not in a way he himself had ever experienced.

Still, Wangyu manages to create a few drops of a standard Healing Potion once he found the mouth and making it thin to get near the back of the throat before pushing the drops out of his body. He's quick to withdraw the thin tentacle. Fairly quickly, the injured male begins to stir with a groan.

It doesn't occur to him that he should have, maybe, moved back until there's rippling going throughout his body and a vague impression that someone just screamed. Either way, the male hurls himself away from Wangyu and his dad remarks, "Well... He's awake so, he's on the mend. So... good job son."

Even though he's almost thirteen years of age and a mature Slime in his own right, Wangyu is pleased with the praise. He senses that his father seems to have recovered enough to do some changes to allow him to speak, as he does his best to pick up on what's being spoken out loud, there's that feeling once more that of passing familiarity with the language and yet again, he's not sure he's ever encountered it.

"Dad?" He asks, "Who is he?"

"Ah, he's Mo Xuanyu and it seems he tried to sacrifice his own soul to summon me, into his own body." His dad explains. What grabs his interest is the way the name is arranged.

"Are we... where you originated from?" He's pretty sure that would explain things and why he's having trouble filling his reserve with magic. "Does this mean we might encounter father?"

He'd heard his dad talk a lot about one man in particular enough that he'd asked if Lan Zhan was his other parent and, likely in a teasing mood, his dad said yes. Although he suspects that it had been a mere whim and likely a jest, he has decided to keep referring to Lan Zhan, courtesy name Lan Wangji, as his father. It's a bit of him turning the jest on his dad but it's just, well, something about Lan Zhan that clearly affects his dad deeply.

His dad laughs in a way that clear that is also being done out loud. It takes a bit of effort to create an eye, he didn't think he'd manage to create a pair, and takes in the sight of his surrounding. The picture of his dad, who's coloring is black, resting in a beam of sunlight against the ruined wooden wall. Turing the eye, he compares Mo Xuanyu to the various Races he's encountered in the past, the nearest Race that kind of matches is Elves, it's not a perfect match but near enough of one.

There's a look of horror but fascination upon Mo Xuanyu's face as he looks at him, Wangyu. The mouth moves but he doesn't detect any loud words. Then again, he turns his eye towards the direction that he senses people coming from. "Dad, incoming visitors." He makes an effort to verbalize that along with digging into the memories he experienced once upon a time, not long after he'd been born and when he'd been minutes old when they'd undergone something that his dad declared to be Empathy.

"It...?" Mo Xuanyu mutters a bit more loudly but he's not overly familiar with language, so his own attempt might not have been understandable as well. "Hide." His dad says upon sensing the same thing as him.

And so, he climbs up the wall and uses his eye to find a dark enough spot to flatting himself about, his eye un-forming as well. Wangyu isn't sure what's happening below him besides Mo Xuanyu getting beaten up, he relaxes back into his natural round shape when they are out of the building. Letting go of the wood, he falls to the ground and then recreates that eye, taking in the needless destruction that had been done by the visitors.

Gazing back at Mo Xuanyu, he notices that the man seems to be in a humorless mood. Getting near, he creates a tentacle to pat Mo Xuanyu in a comforting manner, only doesn't as the man tenses up as it drew near. He pulls the tentacle back into his body before looking around for his dad. The black Slime is before the door and he notices that his dad is causing a bit of a shroud of black Qi about himself.

"I'm going to need some hair and, well, blood." His dad both says verbally and in that telepathic way that is between them. "Oh, and, do you have any spare robes?" The cloud of Qi around his dad remains hanging about his dad.

Mo Xuanyu says something in a tone that might be in the vein of, What the fuck, as the Goblins would say. "Oh, and son? Best get refresher in course in my native tongue. Which, I'm sure, Mo Xuanyu will be happy to help you with!"

"Ok?" He murmurs out loud and telepathically. Turning his eye back towards the... ah, man. "I'll be in your care?" He does his best to bow, causing the eye to look down then move it downwards, hold it there for a few seconds before bringing it up once more.

He's fairly sure that Mo Xuanyu isn't thrilled with spending time with him, but then, he's under the impression that he isn't thrilled to be alive either. After all, why else would someone offer up their body to some random person that they don't know all that well? Wangyu muses to himself.

A lot of hair and some blood donated later, his dad transforms himself into a near duplicate of Mo Xuanyu and is sure to put on some of the local attire before taking off with the, ah, donkey, a beast that it reminds him of the wild Mountain Jacks from Ene Country, which had been tied up near the shed. He would sigh, if it wouldn't take so much effort on his part to do so in a physical fashion. It'll be a while before he could transform himself into something as large as his usual Elf form, never mind into something near his size like a Pygmy Boar.

- **: -

"Shorter ears and round." Dad tells him as he does his best to modify his current form to fit more in with the local Race as there's only the singular kind living in this world. It's been three days for him to gather enough energy to do so, most of the time, he'd done birds as they were traveling. Generally, he'd kept to song birds that could easily fit in the palm of the hand of Xuanyu.

Changing the hair color was simple enough, he'd already had a dark shade of blue, he merely darkened it to appear black with only general highlights of blue. Then he'd had to grow out his hair as long hair is expected here for both genders. As he generally has the appearance of a ten year old Elf, keep the chubby looks while aging up goes rather well. Then, it was the eyebrows that needed to be thickened along with having to match his hair.

The ears, though, were harder to alter as they keep returning to their usual shape along with growing longer but he's been getting them to be shorter then the previous length. "Why don't I just do a hair style that hides them? I can't seem to get them to go shorter then this." He tells his dad, they were shorter then they'd been when they started in on them.

"Well..." Dad trails off, unlike Wangyu, his dad had a base of how a man looked like and his own, previous memories of when he'd been a man to help keep the form from reverting to look like Xuanyu. His dad takes a bit to study his face and even runs through his hair.

"I'm sure it'll be fine." Dad admits and looks away. "I'm sure we'll figure out a good style."

"I think I know a few." Xuanyu admits in a soft tone and Wangyu nods in agreement, pleased that he's allowed to stop trying to force it for now. I'll keep working at it. He vows silently to himself.

"Many thanks, Mo Xuanyu." He says, giving the human riding upon Little Apple, his dad named the donkey, and the man colors a bit on his cheeks before turning his head away sharply with a dismissive murmur of dismissive reply. It's not the first time he's gotten such a reaction when it comes to smiling brightly like his dad, but he does let it slip into a slight frown as he doesn't like how easily Xuanyu treats getting thanked, it's not unlike his dad's own reaction once upon a time.

Is it something about this culture? Being unable to accept thanks? Wangyu wonders to himself as he crosses his arms behind his head. After a while, he begins to hum a tune he'd heard Jet played the last time they encountered the wandering bard.

In time, Little Apple finally refuses to move and, well, it's getting dark, so they decide to camp at the spot. Without thinking about it, Wangyu returns to his usual form and begins to move about, consuming the fallen leaves, branches, and insects hidden among all that. Returning, he uses what he'd gathered to create nutritious liquid for Little Apple to drink, pulling out a large bowl from his spacial pocket before pouring the liquid into the bowl, settling near the donkey.

Once done, he transforms back into his modified Elf form. His dad had gone hunting, having transformed into a Phantom Ice Lynx to do so. Wangyu helps Xuanyu when it comes to setting up a campfire. "You... not the same color as... Ah... Wei Wuxian." Xuanyu brings up.

"True, but you have to understand, it's not that odd for souls to get transmigrated into empty bodies, particularly those created viva a Magical Ritual." He tells Xuanyu. "Dad is like, the ninth known soul, to get transmigrated into the body of a Slime."

"... But you're born a Slime? From him?" Xuanyu asks and he nods. "Yea, I'm not a clone or copy of him." He agrees.

"How does that even work? I recall you saying that you don't really have a gender." Xuanyu brings up.

"Thirty days after dad got transmigrated, he felt an urge he didn't know how to deal with and within five hours, he gave birth to me." Wangyu states. "He didn't know what to make of me and I was...

Well, I was just minutes old when I ended up touching him, which caused a kind of Empathy to happen between us. I experienced his life and had also developed my own opinions from what I've seen, which helped age me up mentally and identity wise in a few hours then it likely should have happened naturally."

"Yet, you need to learn how to speak properly." Xuanyu points out and he shrugs. "It's been nearly thirteen years since I was exposed to his memories and the language wasn't something I needed. Even the written one is rather... bulky. I mean, how many characters are really needed? Common only needs under thirty letters to pick up, it's how they are arranged that makes up the word, never mind the number characters."

"..." It's clear that Xuanyu doesn't know how to respond to that and he didn't blame him, in some ways, it's hard for him to wrap his mind around the idea of over hundreds of characters for a written language and he can only guess at how unbelievable it must be at the thought of so few and the idea of making a simple word out of said letter characters. "Here, let me show you."

For the next while, he draws Common letters into the dirt that's near where they set up the campfire. It's not that hard for Xuanyu to mimic the letters, it's voicing the letter out loud that takes most of the time, but, that's fine. It's not like there's anyone around for Xuanyu to practice speaking Common with outside of dad and me. He thinks to himself.

It's the thumping upon the ground opposite of where they are seated that gets them to notice that dad had returned and with a bundle of pheasants. "We'll defeathered all of them before storing the rest away for future meals." His dad says as he settles down on the ground near the pheasants.

He hums and it's not long before he gets one of the five birds. While he could defeather the pheasant by passing it through his body, he decides not too. "What do we do with the feathers?" He asks curiously, he knows that there's parts of animals more valuable then the rest, like, a Phantom Ice Lynx's eyes and liver are the most valuable parts as they have the highest Water Elemental Affinity and the bones, fangs, and claw are the least due to them becoming very brittle and only good for bring turned into bone powder.

"Some might serve well as ink quills." His dad muses after taking a second to check one of the tail feathers thoughtfully. "As for the rest... We could create a feather pillow for A-Yu!" His dad smiles at Xuanyu's reaction to being called A-Yu, which, well, he really should be use to, given his dad's nickname for him is A-Wang.

"Don't call me that!" Spurts Xuanyu while red faced and hands wringing the front of his robe. "I'm not a child!" Whines Xuanyu.

"Sure, sure." Dad says giving a minor waving motion with his right hand while the left twirls the tail feather between the index and thumb, back and forth. "A-Yu is cranky due to hunger. Don't worry, this Yiling Patriarch will be sure to keep his A-Yu well fed and well looked after!"

"Shouldn't you be worrying about yourself? About your... Wangyu?" Xuanyu gestures at him and he sighs, he might not be male in the sense of body, he is a Slime, but he does think of himself as a male and considers himself his dad's son.

"Wangyu will be find. He's very adaptable and resilient." Dad tells Xuanyu. "Plus, he has plenty of experience about keeping himself from getting out of danger."

"A-Yu in comparison is so frail and in need to more support!" His dad continues. "After all, you almost succeed in killing yourself."

"It was my choice if I wanted to do that!" Snaps Xuanyu and it's not long before the man stomps away, heading near where Little Apple is. He hears his dad sigh but he looks back down at the bird that he's doing his best to take the feathers off.

"Maybe I'm coming on a little strong." His dad muses and he looks up over at his dad, "What about?"

"Ah, A-Wang, my darling baby boy. My joyful babe..." His dad goes on and on for a few minutes as he does his best to pay attention to his dad as he's talking while also feeling around the bird to pull its feathers out without tearing the skin.

Finally, his dad winds down on the praises about him being his child to admit, "A-Yu isn't ready to trust anyone with his well being." He blinks as he considers this and does his best to recall previous examples of his dad doing his best to parent others, whether they wanted to be or not.

"He's kind of like Grace then?" He asks, he remembers Graceful Petal and how distrusting she'd been throughout the three months it took to return her to her grandparents. He recalls how the Dwarf girl had bristled and spat on any attempts from people trying to be kind. He gets a hum from his dad.

He also recalled the bunch of crying that resulted from her reunion with her grandparents, joyful crying compared to the grief/hurt crying she'd done when she thought they'd been asleep. Dad said that her emotional hurts would take longer to heal then her physical ones. Wangyu recalls and it's not that hard to make between the two.

Looking down at the bird, he plucks the feathers a bit easier then before, although his mind goes over seeing Graceful Petal four years after they'd returned her to her grandparents. She apologized about her behavior towards us. Wangyu recalls. He recalls how settled she'd been and how less pale she'd seemed to be.

"Are we going to be staying here?" He asks as he finishes as he considers the idea that his dad might not want to leave this world behind, yet again. He gazes towards his dad, straightening his back as it seems that his dad hastes for a few seconds when plucking feathers.

"Ah, not likely, although, I think a change in scenery would do A-Yu some good!" Chirps his dad. "Don't you think so, A-Wang?"

While he doesn't recall his dad's memories very well, he does know that some cultures are rougher on bastards then others. "It's not just because he was kicked out? Him being a bastard?"

"Framed, more likely." Dad muses, a slight red flicker briefly in his dad's eyes before vanishing. "I just know that Carp Tower is a next of vipers, it's likely A-Yu ended up losing a fight before he was even aware he was in a fight to begin with."

"He knows more then he should about you." He recalls as he hands over the bird, it vanishes into his dad's magical pocket. He focuses on collecting the feathers, he's fairly sure they'll need to wash them at some point. "He might have made mentioned A-Yuan, I think, when I was undergoing a refresher on learning this language. I brought up the subject of Burial Mounds, it seems they have a Soul Summoning going on there, for you."

"They do?" Then his dad laughs and he admits, it's rather funny that they're still trying after over thirteen years to summon his dad. "They refuse to even let me rest peacefully in death..." His dad murmurs as he gets up to give his dad a hug.

For a bit, he is content to hug his dad, to give him comfort. When he gets a pat on his shoulder, he lets go. "I'm so lucky to have you, A-Wang. Gods know I don't deserve you..." His dad mutters and he gently nudges his dad in the shoulder. "You're not evil incarnate." He states firmly.

Soon enough, he walks back to his spot and pulls the bird that Xuanyu had been kind of working on to himself. Once his dad finished his second bird, he started cooking one for Xuanyu to eat for supper. Neither his dad or himself were limited in what they can consume, while both Little Apple and Xuanyu were. Soon the five pheasants had been done with one cooking, which seems to draw Xuanyu back into their company at the campfire.

He ignores the slight redness in Xuanyu's eyes and the other signs that he'd been crying. His dad does his best to treat Xuanyu like he did before, doing his best to engage Xuanyu into discussion in Cultivation and telling shorts from when he'd been a member of the Jiang Sect and living at Lotus Pier. He enjoys hearing his dad being so animated when the subject is his past, from before he died and transmigrated into a Slime.

"Best not transform out." Dad tells him once Xuanyu falls asleep. "We don't know if we'll encounter travelers, best not take the risk of exposing ourselves as anything less then human." His dad adds and it's hardly the first time they've had to do it, but it's likely worse at this point as he's still not full up on magic.

"Understood." He murmurs and it takes a bit for him to find a spot for he himself to settle down in for a sleep. He's fairly sure his dad won't be able to fall asleep, so, his dad will likely be keeping watch for most of the night.

"Night dad." He says as he relaxes once he's comfortable, trusting that his dad can hear him just fine. "Night my son."

- **: -

Chaos, just, chaos. Wanjyu did his best to stick to Xuanyu's side, particularly when dad had transformed into a black bird to escape a strange golden net and then, well, then they encountered that brat in yellow robes, who started in on yelling and berating Xuanyu and himself about Little Apple's distress cries from up in that net, him doing his best to defend, the net getting cut which caused Little Apple to fall to the ground along with the destruction of every other net, the Lans from Mo Manor showing up... it just got more and more overwhelming.

In the end, he doesn't like the brat that's named Jin Ling and he particularly found the man in purple robes and is Jiang Wanyin, who'd his dad likely would claim to be his uncle, to be someone he didn't see any reason to like, never mind being worthy of having his dad as an elder, 'adopted' or otherwise, brother. He loathed that he didn't get to introduce himself to his father, but given who was near, it was for the best. Sadly, Xuanyu ended up having a panic attack, which was depressing and would take sometime to help the man calm down, which means that they were alone by the time it was settled, for the best.

Shaking his head, watches as arrow after arrow doesn't do anything to the stone statue. He's already moving to tackle the brat down before either the brat or the statue seem to be aware that there's going to be an attack happening from one party to the other. "Get off me!" Snaps the brat as he hugs the brat, rolling them to the side, a bunch of hands slam down upon the ground following after the roll.

As he moves to get up, it's the sound of a flute that gets his attention. Ignoring how the brat angrily shoves at him and yells at him about causing him to lose his arrows, never mind the bow. He is more interested in picking up the direction that the flute is coming from, after all, Xuanyu had fainted at the sight of the statue and he'd done a hasty spell to hide the man from the sight of others.

Sure enough, the one playing the flute does look like Xuanyu but what's surprising is the appearance of the zombie. The zombie sports chains about his wrists and is surprisingly intact looking for a zombie. The robes don't seem to be damaged nor sporting any blood, either old or new.

It's the zombie that destroys the statue and he slowly moves to where Xuanyu is hidden. Glancing back at his dad in his disguise, he casts another spell on himself before finally making it to Xuanyu and picking the man up. Aging himself up, he then does his best to carry Xuanyu away from the soon to be hostile situation in a difference sense. He can't get to Little Apple but, it hardly matters at this moment, not when people have arrived and begin to make a scene concerning the zombie and about his dad having called the zombie to his side.

- **: -

Head to Caiyi Town.

That's all the note says that his dad's clone bird delivers. Of course the Caiyi Town was what he couldn't read, given it wasn't written in Common but, well, he did have Xuanyu with him so his dad must have expected him to show the note to Xuanyu. Which lead to a lot more lessens on written Common happening as they traveled slowly from Dafan Mountain towards the nearest town that is close to the Cloud Recesses.

After all, neither himself nor Xuanyu have money along with the fact that he's not the one carrying most of the food. It's both a blessing and a curse they didn't have Little Apple for the journey, as the donkey could be stubborn but also it meant that Xuanyu had to walk while he's still healing form long term abuse. He'd almost offer to transform into something that would get them there faster if not for the fact that Xuanyu doesn't really know how to ride and there's the problem that Xuanyu isn't overly confrontational when it comes to dealing with people.

Which means he couldn't look his preferred age while traveling. He settled for near or in the early twenties. He even got the trick with his ears along the way. He did get some odd looks at introducing himself with his actual name, they did have to use some other name for Xuanyu though, he might have been the one to pick Yu Ming for him. Not that Xuanyu had anything prepared after he'd introduced him as such that first time.

As for funds for inn stays, Wangyu did a bit of doctoring... And by that, he means he feeding various Potions to the patients to cure or heal them. Sure, he had to spend a few hours soaking up some sunlight in his natural Slime form but they generally got the funds needed for not just renting a room but also various other items that Xuanyu had been interested in over their time visiting various places. It made Xuanyu happy and he didn't see any harm in that.

Xuanyu did come to relax a great deal in Wangyu's company that by the time they did make it to Caiyi Town, Xuanyu seemed a bit depressed over them reaching said destination. It's likely due to remembering the matter going on with the Jin Sect. He muses as Xuanyu stare in the direction of the Cloud Recesses.

Overtime, Xuanyu had revealed a bits of information concerning the mystery about what happened with Nie Mingjue and the aftermath. While the idea of taking a head as a trophy wasn't that odd sound to Wangyu, having known a few other Races who have similar ideas when it comes to their fallen, worthy foes or a cultural practice, it's the part about keeping it hidden that causes him to realize that Nie Mingjue's head likely shouldn't be in Jin Guangyao's keeping at all. It implies that it's not a trophy in the right sense and, from some bit of information gathering while leaving Xuanyu alone in his room, found that most believe that Nie Mingjue's death was natural, if unfortunate, as the man died from a Qi Deviation.

Why would Jin Guangyao keep the head? It seems like a poor idea to keep it, given he doesn't want anyone to know he'd been the one to kill his Oath Brother... Did he at least destroy the rest of the body? Wangyu sighs and wished his dad thought to send them notes about what's going on with him.

Sighing, Wangyu writes out a note and then creates a clone in the form of a bird. Rolling the note up, the clone knows what to do and flies off, heading in the direction of the Cloud Recesses. Xuanyu squawks at the fact that the clone bird flew out of the window and he gets a bit of a glare.

"Wait, you can create a... clone too?" Asks Xuanyu and he nods. "And... Oh, you didn't know where the Cloud Recesses were... That's why you asked for a room that faces it..."

"Correct." Wangyu agrees. "Also having the window facing the direction, I can set up something for dad to find us later, at night."

Xuanyu nods in understanding before leaving the window alone, heading for the desk and looking through the various items he brought out of his magical pocket. There's a few yellow books, which feature pron it seems, blank paper, and an brush set with some ink he made himself.

"I'll go order you supper and I'll slip out to get some Emperor's Smile." He says to Xuanyu, leaving the brush set and ink out. "Hope you can entertain yourself for a bit." He says with a smile.

Xuanyu nods and seems to relax. It's hardly the first time Xuanyu has needed time for himself, although he suspects that it's more Xuanyu writing letters to someone and receiving letters in turn. It's suspicious, but something he suspects will be revealed in its own time, after all, Xuanyu hasn't tried to do anything towards him nor ask him to try anything in turn.

As he leaves the room, Wangyu dismisses the matter from his mind and begins to muse about what to set up for his dad to be able to know which room they are in without anyone else taking note of it. He is sure to put in that order before leaving the inn to fetch at least two jugs of rice wine. There's gossip about something happening at Yi City concerning a mix group of junior Cultivators, then there's mention of some young Lan juniors coming back from a Night Hunt that seemed to sport low spirits.

He mingles a bit before he puts in his order and pays when the jars are brought to him, he includes a tip as thanks for such speedy service. Wangyu heads back to the inn and to the room he's sharing with Xuanyu. Supper arrives before he had but he is sure to pay for it before heading up to the room.

Putting the jars down near the table before settling himself, Xuanyu is busy reading one of the porn novels and eating to realize he's returned. He waits until there's no food in the bowl and that the tea cup is empty before announcing his presence at the table, which does indeed startle the other. The bowl and tea cup does get tipped over but there's nothing in either so it's harmless.

"Be louder next time!" Xuanyu scolds him before recovering the book and putting righting the bowl and cup. "Like, knock or slam the door."

He can't help but smirk lightly at the scolding. "Maybe you should set up an alarm talisman at the door instead. It's not like we don't have the funds for you to practice making them." He teases Xuanyu, widening the smirk a touch before allowing it to fade and his eyes drifting down at the other novels.

He adverts his gaze to the other stack on the table. Pulling a blank paper over to him, he takes the brush set and after a few seconds, creates some green ink, which comes out of his right index finger, just under the nail. With a quick cleaning cantrip, he uses the brush to soak up some of the green ink and begins to draw. He doesn't have anything in particular in mind to draw but that doesn't stop him much.

A bunch of freshly herbs slowly appears upon the paper, with each brush stroke, a sprig there, a whirl and another for a leaf. A light touch for lighter green while a bit more pressing to get a darker one. Finishing with the green, he takes a moment to regard the drawing before noting the amount of ink left. He considers what else he wants to draw, moving the paper so that he can draw something else, he decides to make a purple, it takes a bit for him to pick a shade, picking a lighter violet purple, it exits out from his right pinkie as he's busy holding the brush in his right hand.

Another cantrip to clean the brush, Wangyu begins with a roundish shape with light strokes. In time, he finishes drawing a pair of birds, one is a sparrow while the other a chicken, a rooster in fact. The rooster looks like it's trying to step on the sparrow. The sparrow is a bit busy pecking at the ground.

He must have giggled out loud for Xuanyu lowers the book and then snorts at the sight of the two birds. Wangyu smiles at the slight shake of Xuanyu's head and goes back to drawing a bit more. He uses the cantrip to clean both the brush and the ink, he creates a brown ink and creates a bunch of seeds on the ground and then moves to add some more detail to the herbs, this time roots among the pick stems and adds some aging effect to some of the leaves.

Then he doodles a banner that's not unlike Ge'Rotte's Acting Troops one. A few ripped cloth, a hood, and a random saying in Draconic. He adds a pole for the banner to flutter from and then does some shading. Then he adds a few Homunculus created flying eyeballs, classically done with bat wings, to flutter around near the banner for kicks.

"Flying... eyeballs?" There's a bit of strain in Xuanyu's voice upon saying that. "Homunculus." He states in a dismissive tone as he takes in what he's drawn.

"..." It takes him a moment to realize that Xuanyu likely doesn't know what one was. "It's something a spell worker can create, typically using Alchemy. It's not alive or did it come from something that had been alive."

"I've seen someone with a Homunculus as a severed hand and a face upon the palm of it." He thinks to add and that... seems to not have the affect he expected. "They're mostly used as spies and to unsettle people." Wangyu does his best to reassure Xuanyu. "Their regarded as magical gimmicks to startle the more mundane folks."

"...Are you able to make one?" Asks Xuanyu and he takes a moment to consider that. "Never need to, not when I can just create a clone of myself. Particularly when I learnt how to shape it into a suitable form." He admits and he notices how Xuanyu seems to process this.

"You haven't..." There's a touch of worry in Xuanyu's tone and he shake his head, "I've only created the one since arriving in this world. You saw it leave through the window."

"You trust me?" Xuanyu asks with clear disbelief after a bit as he adds a bit of brown to the rooster's wings that are stretched out. "Got to give trust to earn it." He quotes to Xuanyu.

"I see...?" Xuanyu mutters and he mentally shrugs, it's not until later, when it's night and Xuanyu is fast asleep that it finally dawns on him that Xuanyu's ability to trust has likely been damaged. What a shame. He thinks to himself as he waits next to the window with the jars within reach.

His clone returns without the note and as he absorbs the clone, he sighs that it seems that it'll be a while before his dad gets finds and reads the note.

- **: -

Wangyu isn't sure how to interact with his father or elder brother, he suspects that it's likely the same for them as well. He isn't sure if dad had revealed to either of them about what he is now or about what he himself is. Xuanyu knows, that couldn't be helped given we arrived with little reserves in magic due to being Summoned and thus he didn't have the magic to assume another shape while his dad had managed to pull in alternate energy to do so.

Glancing to the side, he takes note of Xuanyu stubbornly looking down at his food while sitting across from Jin Ling, who's his nephew. In his private opinion, he suspects that Xuanyu didn't have any thoughts about his survival being common knowledge nor coming face to face with the various Cultivators that were about. Those same Cultivators who'd previously gossiped about his sexual preferences and the lie concerning him having kissed his half-brother.

Around the hall, there's a low murmur of various conversations going on around as they eat. As his gaze sweeps around, Wangyu wonders if Jiang Wanyin will be kicking out his 'guests'. As his gaze settles on the Cultivator, the man is glaring at his dad but there's been shifts in those eyes as they flicker towards Xuanyu, the look shifts just slightly, more of a sneer then icy hatred and burning envy at the sight of his dad. There's contempt and disregard when Jiang Wanyin meets his gaze. It's clear that the man sees him as something lesser then himself.

He tilts his head just slightly as he continues to match the man's gaze without blinking. That provokes a very childish reaction from the grown Cultivator but he doesn't blink nor look away, keeping a simple mild look of being pleasant on his face. In the end, Jiang Wanyin looks away with a blink and it's clear that the man's feelings towards him just went down. "A-Yu, must you poke the bear?" His dad inquires and he looks down at the empty bowl and plates before him.

"He's been glaring hatefully at you." He replies to his dad. "How childish is he, in the end, that something as simple as a staring contest wound his pride?"

"That's just how Jiang Cheng is." His dad states. "He hasn't changed much."

"He hasn't grown, you mean." He counters. "Almost two decades have passed and yet, he still blames you for... What? I mean, I know there's a list of things but, ultimately?"

He adds, "You dying didn't do anything, it clearly didn't improve his life any nor did it restore life to his parents nor to his sister. It clearly did help him settle his own demons either, not when he'd been whipping suspected Demonic Cultivators to death."

"Just don't provoke him, you're more mature then that." Is all his dad tells him and he looks at his dad out of the corner of his eye. Wangyu kind of wants to pout, after all, his dad had been acting very childish when he'd been his age and even a few years older too.

He wasn't overly impressed with Jiang Wanyin, then again, he's not overly impressed with most of the Cultivators in this hall. Wangyu would compare them to some kind of beast if he didn't think it would insult the beast kin as a whole. Animals, at least, have the excuse of having a limited ability to relate to others outside of themselves but men, like most Races, possess a greater ability of awareness of anothers' state, even being able to put themselves into various situations and think on how or what they'd do in said imaginary situation. They can be empathic, if they only just tried.

He knows that isn't must of an excuse either, that they lack the desire to take a long, hard look at themselves. That they lack the drive to better themselves, to be better versions of themselves. It's hardly the first time they've encountered people like this, it's just... Maybe I just had hopes that they were better then that? Wangyu muses to himself.

Which, well, is likely unreasonable to take out his disappointment in them being able to realize their faults in regards to their treatment of his dad and their inability to realize just who it was that they ultimately killed during that so called Siege. He wonders if this in ability for self reflection is the reason why they find it so hard to ascend beyond being human. Well, besides processing the raw potential. He muses to himself.

It's not long before Wangyu's eyes are wandering around the hall again, he doesn't feel overly hungry. Sitting across from him is his dad and next to his dad is his father. His elder brother, Lan Sizhui, is sitting with Lan Jingyi and some other Lan Junior disciples that he might not have gotten the name of. There's nobody sitting next to him, to his right.

The previously kidnapped disciples from other Sects are sitting with their fathers or Sect members. Once again, his gaze drifts towards where Xuanyu is sitting, it still feels rather odd not to have the older man sitting at the same table as him. "What's going to happen with Xuanyu? ... Mo Xuanyu?" He asks out loud, deciding to involve his father in conversation instead of just keeping it between dad and himself, without anyone ease-dropping on it.

A bemusing grin graces his dad's face while he notices a slight flicker of eyes from his father towards that direction. "I'm sure the Lan Sect will make good on their promise to lend their aid to him." His dad says and he's fairly sure that when that promise had been made, it had been directed at his dad, who'd been wearing Xuanyu's looks.

His father hums in agreement and he gives his father a bit of a side long glance. "Seems like a trick, given that it had been meant for you, dad." Wangyu points out, once his attention snaps back to his dad, who's eating a good amount of food, which... "Are you...?"

It takes dad a few seconds to puzzle out what his last bit implied, what with his eyes going slightly wide at him before looking down at the table. "Ah... A-Yu, hahaha, it's just, well, stress! Yes, stress eating!" His dad assures him while he notices his father taking a bit to study his dad with a great deal of focus, likely trying to figure out if something is wrong.

"But..." He trails off and shakes his head, deciding not to bring up the last few times his dad had eaten so much before. "Wei Ying." His father states and it's not long before his dad does his best to assure his father that it's fine, that nothing is wrong.

He's not sure if his father fully believes his dad, which, well, fair. It's clear that his dad would love to have more to eat but, well, realizing what it could mean, his dad declines having his plates and bowl filled up once more. "I'm not. Even if I am, I won't follow through." His dad reassures him.

While skeptical, he knows his dad is right about being able to not follow through with it. Although... What have they been doing to bring that urge up? Wangyu wonders to himself.

- **: -

"Senior Wei... Pregnant." His elder brother states, repeating Jingyi's news, from having accidentally heard it from visiting the medical ward. Wangyu frowns as he considers the implications of that particular statement, after all, it shouldn't have taken this long for his dad to have given birth already.

"Really? I mean, it's been five months since that thing that happened near Lotus Pier." He states in a puzzled tone. "That's a pretty long time to be pregnant..." For a Slime. He doesn't add the last to that statement.

For some reason, the various Lan disciples seem to share looks with one another. "Well..." "You see." There's lot of that getting spoken out loud and it takes him a bit to puzzle out what it is they are trying to explain to him.

"Oh, I know about sex and how a male can get a female pregnant, that it takes varying amount of time before the birth." Wangyu assures the group but it seems him speaking so bluntly about the subject gets awarded with interesting looks that tend to be either vary pale or very red. "It's just... It shouldn't be... I mean, dad should have..." He's not sure how to really explain it without revealing just what both dad and himself actually were.

Finally deciding he needed to see his dad for himself, he walks off the training feeling, Wangyu puts the wooden sword into the ground before getting off the field. It's not long before he's being trailed but his mind isn't on who's following him. His mind trying to come up with reasons why it seems that his dad could come across as pregnant, but, well, it's hard for him to come up with anything that sounds believable.

"Dad? Are you pregnant?" He asks once he's within range of his dad.

"A-Yu! Wait, what?" It takes his dad until he's at the building before he gets a reply, both out loud and mentally. "I'm pregnant?!"

He speeds up his walking while hearing that those following behind him halting. It's not long before they are doing their best to catch up while he's already in the same room with his dad and father. His dad is staring rather dumbfounded at his father while having a hand over his midsection. "Dad?" He manages to voice out.

"A-Yu..." His dad gives him a lost look and it's not long before he settles next to his dad and pulled into a hug. He wraps his arms around his dad, finding comfort in his dad's embrace. "Senior Wei?" There's a chorus of voices ringing out while he finally notices the pair of life forces within his dad.

"Twins?" He inquires as he pulls away after his dad greets the Juniors that arrived. "Twins?!" The two teens while he looks into his dad's face.

His dad hums, chuckling slightly. "Yes, it seems so." Then his dad ruffles his hair. "So quick at picking up on them, huh, A-Yu?"

Wangyu nods, though, it wasn't the only thing he had noticed about them. "Ah, but... but... how?! You're a man!" Jingyi pretty much shouts, causing him to turn to look at both Sizhui and Jingyi.

"Ah..." "Well..." He shares a look with his dad before he looks towards his father while his dad looks at the teens.

"Wei Ying?" His father asks in a soft tone. He feels his dad deflate a bit.

"Well, you see. Wei Wangyu is my son. As in, son of my body and he's a lot older then he looks." His dad admits and he is quick to look at his dad, ensuring he has permission to assume his natural form.

"What?!" "HOW?!" Jingyi is very loud compared to Sizhui.

"A-Yu." And with that, he lets his current form go and is sure to send the cloths into his storage. It's been a while since he's assumed his Slime form and it's a bit of a relief while he gets picked up by his dad.

"My soul got transmigrated into the body of, well, a black version of A-Yu here." His dad says in a forced cheerful tone. "I gave birth to him in said new body about thirty days after I ended up in said body."

His attention is more on the lives growing in the uterus that his dad created for this form for... some reason. Lives that aren't Slimes at all. Half-elf? He wonders but he's not going to check using magic.

As his dad explains things, he's content to rest in his dad's arms, taking in the presence that is his younger siblings. Also enjoying some time in his actual form, pipping in at times in a telepathic manner, being as gentle as he could when sending his thoughts out.

He doesn't react much when the two are invited to give him a poke, he lets his grey both ripple upon getting poked and on the third poke from Jingyi, lets the finger come into his body, he's quick to create some ink so when the finger gets pulled out, light grey ink is on the skin. "Just ink." He sends out after letting Jingyi react for a few seconds of trying to get it off. "It'll wash off." He promises.

A bit of silence after the explanation, he slides out of his dad's arms and resumes his previous form, ensuring that the cloths are brought out to cover him. "That's... well... Is it..." Jingyi clearly doesn't know how to use his words.

"It's not just ink I can create nor is it just the two forms I can assume." He informs the three. "Same with dad, it's easier to make organic things then inorganic."

"So... Senior Wei... he... well, ah..." Jingyi looks between his dad and his father.

"It seemed like a good idea at the time." His dad admits. "I didn't want to accidentally... Particularly not when it's that! I didn't want to risk my Lan Zhan-gege in away way!"

"But you weren't married back at Lotus Pier!" Jingyi exclaims and he tilts his head to the side, trying to make the connection of sex and marriage, before it dawns on him that it's a social stigma to have kids or sex outside of marriage. "Dad's already handled father's forehead ribbon... If I understand the significance of it, they've been engaged longer then I've been alive." He pipes in.

"What? When?" Jingyi demands before realizing how rude that is, along with having raised to his feet. He bows in apology to father while dad tells the story about said incident, which had been the last Discussion Conference before the Wen Sect burnt the Cloud Recesses.

It seems that this is a first time that his elder brother is hearing this story as well. "Is that why you call Hanguang-Jun father?" Jingyi asks Wangyu.

"Hard to say, I mean, it's not like we knew we'd get Summoned nor that I'd end up meeting him?" The real reason, is of course, his dad had replied yes once upon a time to him asking if the man was his other parent along with feeling that the man had a very special place in his dad's heart. Plus, it seemed like he'd been returning a jest.

"So... Back at the training field. You found it hard to believe that... Dad, was pregnant, not because he was a man." His elder brother reasons out loud.

"Hm." He nods in agreement. "Slimes can have a very short pregnancy, I mean, like within a day? From beginning to end." Wangyu is fairly sure that that's how it was with him.

"Well, that's what it seemed like when I had you." His dad agrees. "For other Slimes, I assume it can be any number of reasons for it taking longer then a day."

It's not long before his father's uncle arrives after they dropped that discussion to focus in on names for the twins, tactically avoiding bringing up the whole Slimes having no real gender and that his dad has managed to keep the pregnancy without even realizing it. It's not long before they are assigned punishment for skipping classes and the three of them leave the 'adults' alone. They also do their best to ignore anything that's coming from the building as they leave.

"So... how do you know your a boy?" Jingyi asks as they approach where they're suppose to be. "Jingyi!" His elder brother states in exasperation.

"I only had dad for a role model and, well, I just... why not? It's not like I felt any connection to the idea of being a girl later, even now really." He admits. "Before the thought that being female was an opinion, I was already comfortable with thinking of myself in the masculine way and couldn't see thinking of myself as a she."

"Huh." Seems to be the end of it as they have arrived to where they are suppose to be. Wangyu does his best to focus on the rest of that day's lessons, after all, there's very little magic in this world but an abundance of Spiritual Energy, so he better learn to harness it in order to ensure he isn't drained from a single spell. He's confident that he'll be able to make a Golden Core, or a Slime's equivalent of one.

} - O - {

Ending it here!

Shifting Between Illusion and Reality P1

I don't own Kateyo Hitman Reborn!

To: Mr Sawada

Congratulations, you have been chosen to participate in the Beta Phase of Mythical Flames of the Soul: Sky Edition! This is Phase One of the Beta and for participating, you will earn the minimum amount of a hundred Yen a day with extra earnings based on your progress, all of which will be deposited in your bank account. Thank you for your participation in our Phase One of our Beta Testing of Mythical Flames of the Soul: Sky Edition.

Signed Department Head,

Kawahira Checker

Head of Beta Phase,

Wonomichi Wright

"Huh?" Is all Tsuna could think to say upon reading that letter for a third time. End the end, the seven year old sets the letter to the side and takes a moment to study the box, the package is one his Okasan gave him upon arriving home from school today, which is also the end of the school term.

At first, he thought it was something his Otosan sent him but then he opened the letter and, well, it seems that it's not. Maybe he signed me up? He wonders as he bites his lower lip as he uses the letter opener to tear into the tape of the package to get at what's within the box.

Within the box is a head piece and upon touching it, the clear gems fill up with a pale orange that went away when he yelped and stopped touching it. In the end, the seven year old reaches for it once again and shivers after touching a cluster of gems. Pulling it out, he finds that there's a neck part that kind of seems to go along the back of his neck.

Frowning, he's not sure if he should put it on yet, it's clear that it's something he's suppose to wear for this Beta thing. Well, it can't hurt to give it a try, right? He tells himself and so, he fits the likely expensive device about his head, it then auto adjusts to his head and even moves so that the back part is at the back of his head.

=Seal Detected=

=Analyzing=

=Analyzing=

=Analyzing=

=Analyzing=

=Complete!=

=Beginning Seal Destruction=

=9=

=7=

=6=

=5=

=4=

=3=

=Start=

Warmth spreads throughout him, chasing away the cold and he feels... Whole. It takes him some seconds to realize that he's laying on his left side, given he's sitting on his bed, he's not hurt from his collapse.

Groaning, Tsuna reaches to run a hand through his hair only as he touches his forehead does he note that the head piece is gone. Sitting up, he begins to feel around his head for it but can't find it on his head. Then he looks at the box to find it there only there's none of the gems and it's got holes in said areas. As he reaches to touch the device, it happens again.

=Welcome Tsunayoshi to Phase 1 of the Beta of Mythical Flames of the Soul: Sky Edition=

=Request: Please repackage the remains of the device and return to mailing address=

"Huh?" He finds himself this rather... overwhelming yet, in the end, there's really no reason not to do as it asks. "Ah, ok, sure? I'll do it tomorrow, if it's alright with you?"

=Quest Created=

=Title: Return to Sender=

=Summary: Tsunayoshi is tasked with repackaging the delivery device and mailing it back to Truth Behind Reality Corporate Headquarters.=

=Rewards: Earning two hundred Yen if Quest Completed within 24 hours.=

=Timer Unlocked=

And now there's a clock counting down from 24:00. It takes him a few seconds to realize that it's counting down the hours and for the next few minutes, the seven year old just stares at the timer. In the end, he gets up and taking the package, he heads down stairs to find tape to tape up the box. It takes him a bit to figure out what address he's sending it back too, feeling rather stupid upon realizing that it's already on the package. Once he's put that address on the blank sticker and then his own address, only he puts the company address to the delivery space, which is highlighted for him in a pale orange and it also highlights the spot for where his address should go.

Looking around the house, he finds some change when he realized he didn't have the money in his piggy bank to pay for delivery. Placing the Yen into the pocket of his jacket and the package next to the door, Tsuna heads for the living room to watch some TV before bed, doing his best to ignore the timer.

/ [- | T | -] **

=Quest Created=

=Title: Monkey See, Monkey Do=

=Summary: Tsunayoshi wishes to play on the jungle gym in order to improve his coordination. Complete the Quest by swinging from one side to the other without falling off.=

=Rewards: Unlocks Status Page=

=Rewards: Fifty Yen=

None of the created Quests ever have a failure condition, if he doesn't complete a Quest at the end of a day, the Game will remind him of the Quests he still needs to complete but that's about it. Tsuna's looked up game mechanics which is how he notices the lack of failure conditions. Oh, there's been a decrease in reward money but that's about it.

Also, he's been sent a bank account card within three days of joining the Beta, having spoken with his Okasan, it seems that he doesn't have a bank account, which kind of hurts while she assured him that if he ever needed anything, he was just suppose to ask her. But, well... he just shake the Feeling that he can't Trust her, he doesn't know why either. Tsuna also finds himself watching his Okasan, trying to figure out why that is, yet, she acts like he recalls her acting, although he could do without her using his recently acquired nickname of Dame-Tsuna...

Putting the matter out of his mind, he watches other kids swing along the jungle gym. Doing his best to see how to move while doing it so he can do it himself. Glancing around, he notices a few kids snickering at him already, likely due to his cloths that his Okasan put out for him to wear.

Tsuna does his best to ignore the looks as he approaches the jungle gym. It takes him a few tries to succeed which earns him some jeers from the kids who likely attend school with him, again, the nickname they've coined for him being used instead of Tsuna or his last name of Sawada. The jeers hurt and he's done his best to swallow the urge to break down and cry.

=Quest Completed=

=Status Page Unlocked=

=Fifty Yen deposited=

Grinning widely, the seven year old runs off to a near by tree to sit down. It took a lot out of him, trying to swing properly from one side of the jungle gym to the other and now, there's a flashing icon. Sitting down, he murmurs, "Open Status View."

The icon with an image of a person glows solid before orange flames flooding his vision and he finds an image of himself in the top left corner while the rest just details his Age, Date of Birth, Parents, Birth Location, Location, and... Flame, which is simply called Sky Flame. Then there's the usual Game information concerning stats only, instead of numbers, it's English letters. A guide pops up when he taps his STR to inform him what the letters mean for him, which is which Stat he's using most often in his day to day life, which he exercises daily.

A being the best, B, second best, C is average, D being second lowest, and E being the bottom. The note mentioned that D ranking is atypical for children under the age of ten with E being for those below the age of five. Then it mentions the color that the letters are in, white being average potential, gold good potential, and black meaning poor potential, which only comes up with something is hindering said Stat. Two of his Stats sport gold color text and they are CHA and WIS, the rest is all white.

There's a lot on the Stat page that does fall in line with the usual game mechanics like Status Conditions and something that keeps track of his physical needs. Then there's Flaws and Merits, he's in possession of Soft-Hearted - Major as a Flaw, it means that he can't stand to see someone hurt in his presence outside of combat, it's listed as a Mental Flaw. The other Flaws are minor ones while they are listed are mostly Social with one Physical Flaw that will fade once he's over the age of nine.

Among the Merits listed, he has Hyper Intuition - Weaken, which grants him extra awareness of intent. It's Weaken due to him being Sealed at Age four, two months before his fifth Birthday and it'll grow powerful over time, new features of this Merit will either be unlocked or he'll find ways to use it in a creative manner. Then his attention goes down the list.

"Cloud Territory?" He murmurs in puzzlement and it turns out, that the infamous Biting Kid does exist and that Hibari Kyoya, the kid's name, is the Cloud claiming Namimori as his Territory and thus, is investing time and energy into keeping kids, or herbivores, safe. It's a Social Merit and, yea, there's a few hindrances about this Merit too, like if he crosses whatever line Hibari-san has, he'll be 'bitten to death' by said Cloud.

For some reason, he has this urge to yelp at whenever he read that part about being 'bitten to death'. Shaking his head, he notices that there's other tabs and trying to tap them, he gets a message that the other tabs are Under Construction and will be Uploaded after a month of time. There's nothing more to do and he doesn't really have a lot of information concerning certain Flaws but from what he's gathered, he can't do anything about them since they're not there because of anything he's done but his Otosan, is listed under the Flaw Enemy along with the Vongola Famiglia, both sport Minor next to their name but still, it's pretty clear his Otosan doesn't have his best interests at heart nor does this Vongola Famiglia.

It also mentioned that if he ever went against his Otosan's expressed wishes, his Okasan would fall in behind his Otosan's wishes. Which means that, he can't trust his Okasan to support him when, not if, he ends up in conflict with his Otosan. That isn't a pleasant thought and he bites his lower lip as he feels tears pool up in his eyes that he can't trust his Okasan to pick him over his Otosan who's never around.

With a sniffle, the Status Page fades and in the end, he kind of lets it out, he doesn't know how to stop as he hurts so much over this knowledge. After a while, he's got no more tears and he feels kind of numb, but he's hungry and kind of exhausted. So, he gets up and heads home, finding it hard to really want to do anything for the rest of the day.

/ [- | T | -] **

"Your a Beta Tester too, right?!" Tsuna jerks his head while lowering the book to find a girl and he notices she's got a green glow to her eyes yet, that's not really her eye color. "Oh! Haru thinks that's a pretty shade of orange!"

Then Haru cheers as her gaze turns to something else, which likely means that she just completed a Quest. "Haru almost forgot, I'm Miura Haru! A Lightning!"

"Ah... I'm Sawada Tsunayoshi, a Sky." He admits. "I prefer Tsuna though."

Grinning widely, the bold girl moves to sit at the table and he can't help but study her while she seems to be returning the favor. "So... Why were you looking for others?" He asks Haru curiously.

"Parties and Dungeons, Haru didn't want to deal with Dungeons on her own, so Haru set out on a Quest to find someone to bring Haru materials so Haru can make things." She tells him and he blinks before pointing out, "I don't think Dungeons are going to happen, I mean, there hasn't been anything but Quests."

Haru pouts, after all, in the almost four weeks since he got the package and started this Beta Test and yet, he's not really stumbled across any Monsters nor have he got anything save actual Yen for rewards and him slowly learning to use his Hyper Intuition, which is slowly growing in strength. Thankfully, the Quest creation helps him figure out what his Hyper Intuition is trying to alert him too, which is now helping him to learn to control the Merit instead of it controlling him. He also has a long term Quest to help him weaken his Soft-Hearted Flaw into one he can live with, after all, he's going to be in conflict with his parents in the future and given that his Otosan continues to remain an Enemy, he won't allow this Flaw to keep him from winning that future conflict.

"Haru thinks it's coming up." The other states and he tilts his head slightly to the side. "Well, maybe but we might not be allowed to test it." The seven year old points out. "Cause it'll likely be too... voi-lent for kids."

"Ah! Tsuna-chan is right!" Haru exclaims, her eyes widening and the green returns, covering the whole of Haru's eyes, including the whites, while he flushes and pouts at the -chan. "Not a girl." He murmurs.

"Haru thinks Tsuna-chan is cute like one." And thus, they spend the rest of the hour arguing over whether or not he is adorable like a girl before they both end up having to head off home.

/ [- | T | -] **

To: Mr Sawada

Congratulations for being chosen to participate in the Beta Phase Four of Mythical Flames of the Soul: Sky Edition! It has been noted that you have participated in our Phase One and thus, your implants have been reactivated and the updates transmitted! We can't wait to see how you will progress during our Phase Four of our Beta Test.

Signed Department Head,

Kawahira Checker

Head of Beta Phase,

Wonomichi Wright

"That... explains the notification I got from waking up." The nine year old admits, today's the last day of school's summer semester, which he's more then happy about as it means he won't have to put up with the strange attention he garners from various classmates, upper class-men, and teachers. Plus his chances of encountering Hibari Kyoya, the Cloud of Namimori, due to said attention will, hopefully, be zero until school resumes in September.

Folding the letter, he heads back to his room to change out of his nightwear, putting the letter where he put the previous one. His Okasan is already in the kitchen by the time he's coming back down the stairs and they exchange greetings while he moves to sit at the table. "Open Status Page." He whispers and orange flames surge before his eyes as the Status Page forms from said flames, it's a rather cool effect and he can't help but grin at the sight of it, it feels Right begin able to access it once more.

After a minute of going over it, he notices a number of changes and a quick tap calls up a summary of Updates that have been done to the game, which includes Combat, Monsters, Flame Training, and Alternate Reality. Phase Two of the Beta had been Combat Oriented and did bring in Monsters to fight. Phase Three brought in Flame Training along with an Altered Reality to interact with. From the looks, Phase Two and Three happened at the same time and then combined into a single 'Phase' in the last two months. It appears that Phase Four is bringing in Monster loot drops and Special Areas that will be where they can go to face said Monsters plus there's a skeleton of a Crafting System.

It hints that there's going to be something coming in Phase Four, he wonders if it'll be an Inventory System as it seems to be missing from the summary. Or will there be actual Dungeons? Tsuna wonders as he checks his Quest tab to note that it looks like it kept his previous history and he Resumes the Incomplete Quests.

He hears his breakfast being placed before him and he murmurs his thanks before he begins to eat while going through his Quests to see if he's made any progress. After a few seconds, he closes the Status Page and focuses on his breakfast. It's been a week since his Otosan phoned and it's clear that whatever exchange that happened, it's affecting his Okasan to the point she hasn't asked him about school since said phone call nor has he been able to get any meaningful information about what the two talked about save that his Okasan seems to be under the impression that his Otosan might be visiting or sending something to the house.

Once, he would have hoped for his Okasan's sake that it was true but, well, he's come to a startling conclusion that his Okasan is in a miserable marriage and that she could do so much better then the man who she married, the one that is never around, barely phones, or sends his Okasan anything for any of the special holidays or anniversaries. These days, he knows that his Okasan's devotion to his Otosan isn't healthy and that her suffering is as much her own fault as it is his Otosan, that she should have woken up to that fact a long time ago. After all, the neighbors likely would understand if she files for divorce, a number of them, from what he's over heard, seem to wonder why she hasn't already.

Yes, he still loves his Okasan but he won't turn a blind eye to the fact that if his Okasan just had a touch more spine, she could pull herself out of this sham of a marriage and could easily find someone who'd be actually there for her on a physical and emotional level. Tsuna wonders if he ever thought to blame himself for keeping his Otosan away before dismissing that thought. After all, the two were adults and thus should have known what they were getting themselves into when they got married, right? If they hadn't then why did they get married in the first place?

Nodding to himself, he then notices that his portion of breakfast isn't what it should be. It seems he'll have to ask his Okasan to get him bigger portions again, but given how she is right now... It'll be for the best for him to head off to buy something from a store, likely needing to grab something more for lunch too as he notices the size of the Bento that's now waiting for him on the counter. For some reason, having the implants cause him to need more food then most kids his own age, even Haru, who does come around to bug him into letting her dress him up one every few weeks, needs to eat more too, so he's not alone in that, even when they were inactive.

A number of Quests get created as he puts his dishes in the sink and the rewards were still Yen getting transferred into his bank account although now there's a number of question marks, which is rather odd but then, perhaps it's just that he hasn't encountered the items yet? Grabbing the Bento, he says good bye to his Okasan before leaving the kitchen and once he's done switching to outdoor footwear, he jogs to the nearest grocery store to make his purchases.

/ [- | T | -] **

"Tsuna-chan!" Haru cries out and she pretty much gives him a quick hug before she gives his school uniform a look and then beaming up at him. "Haru knew you'd be coming to this Area! Now, join my Party!"

And sure enough, there's a Party invite to a Party called Haru's Stylish Rangers. It takes him a few seconds before he actually does press the Accept and it's then that he notices that Haru decided to engage the Nickname System as there's a Green Ranger Haru floating above her head in bright green text. "Ah, you didn't create a Nickname! Quick, put in Orange Ranger Tsuna!"

"Ah, Haru? I think you are not suppose to use your actual name when you make a Nickname." He tells the Lightning who's pretty much the closest person he has in his life that's a friend, a kind of annoying and a girl, but still a friend. She pouts at him and he crosses his arms, doing his best to out last her pout, even though he already feels his resolve slowly, VERY slowly crumbling away.

Given how impatient Haru can be and his practicing of being patient, Haru's the one to give up after a minute and she scowls at him, not that it's all that threatening, he attends the same school as Hibari Kyoya after all, and manages to give her a blank look. "Nickname." She states and the tone is one he knows well, it's one that means she's not moving from that stance.

"Fine." He admits and wills the Status Page to appear, it's trying to do it without murmuring a trigger but it comes. Tapping the Nickname option, he turns to stare at Haru, not really watching as he types something in, anything really, and Accepts it as his current Nickname. "Natsume?" Haru mutters and it takes him a second to realize that yip, that's what he ended up putting in as a Nickname.

"It's not my actual name." He defense it while the Status Page fades away. "Well? We got Quests to do, right?"

"Right!" Haru agrees after giving the name now floating above his head a final look. "Haru found a Chest with light armor and a dagger." He watches as sparks fly and lightning in the color of green arcs as leather armor appears to be covering Haru's body with a dagger hanging from the belt. The sparking lightning fades but the changes remain and he glances to find that Haru's eyes are now softly glowing an emerald green.

Haru pulls him over to the entrance of the Special Area and he does notice the chest. It's clearly old with the metal being pretty tarnished plus the wood looks like some large feline took some kind of personal offense to the chest. Paint chipped around the claw marks and the dents has the paint being rather worn. Walking over, he barely touches it before he gets notifications that he's looted leather armor and a dagger, they also get Auto Equipped to his body, orange flames move over his body and it's pretty much the same leather armor and dagger Haru is wearing, only it the armor is clearly meant to fit his body.

Thus he completes a few Quests and is awarded with Yen plus two new tabs is unlocked on his Status Page, one that covers his ability to fight and the other covers his capabilities with his Sky Flame. It takes a minute for the Combat tab to finish running its Scan on him before pretty much giving him information concerning his fighting potential. It pretty much informs him that his ability with his own body is what he's best at while he's pretty much average concerning more melee weapons and poor with handguns... He's confused as to why it would go out of its way to inform him of that since there's no other listing concerning firearms listed.

"Haru? Did you get anything concerning guns?" He asks as he feels her moving to stand behind him.

"Nope! Just normal ones like swords and other stuff." Haru chirps and he finds himself running a hand through his hair.

"Well, according to this, I sport poor potential when it comes to handguns." He admits and Haru laughs while he finally switches to the other new tab. "How did I...? I mean, really? I can Harmonize with electronics?"

"Tsuna-chan only has one Flame Skill?" Haru remarks, her tone is clearly amused. "Haru's got three!" Clearly bragging and Tsuna sighs.

"Well, we best get this over with." He says as he closes his Status Page. "Ah... What do you have to carry loot with?" He thinks to asks.

"Carry? Haru thought there was..." He watches as the Lightning is not going through her Status Page, looking for an Inventory tab. "Darn it, how is Haru suppose to gather materials if Haru doesn't have an Inventory?"

"Why don't we just go out and buy some large backpacks? I mean, we have our own money... You spent everything you earned from playing in the Beta One, didn't you?" He realizes and the girl looks sheepish yet depressed.

"Well... You'll have to pay me back, in full, for the backpack, ok?" Haru nods in agreement, eyes clearly displaying honest relief and agreement with that idea. As they exit the Special Area, their leather armor and daggers fade away and their respective cloths can be seen.

Haru is quick to grab his hand and pull him along, heading for the nearest market. "Camping store likely has something durable and can store a large amount of stuff." He remarks and Haru merely nods, he doubts she's really paying him half an ear.

Not for the first time does Tsuna wonders what his life would have been like if Haru hadn't found him in the library back when he was seven. He's not sure if he should be thankful that he's the first Beta Tester beside herself that she encountered or not, given how busy she can be. Though, he'll admit, having her in his life... he's not so lonely nor does he feel so isolated from everyone else because he was lucky enough to get picked to Beta some ultra secret game and likely has to keep it a secret, after all, the company could sue him for releasing that information. Well, that's kind of the conclusion he reached and shared with Haru, who, after speaking with her parents, agreed that he's right.

Finding a store that carried camping backpack was hard but they found said backpacks, although, the nine year old is puzzled as to why an Antique store would carry camping equipment... The strange, yet nice man behind the counter seemed bemused concerning their kind of truth concerning why they were looking for said kind of packs and did, it seem, have a few in stock. The two backpacks only differed by color with one being a simple dark brown and the other being a sleek black, Haru claimed the brown one, leaving him with the black one.

They also ended up stopping off to grab something to eat cause it took time looking for a store that carried the packs. The restaurant belongs to a classmate of his family, Yamamoto Takeshi, who seems to enjoy playing sports. Haru seemed rather disappointed upon realizing that his classmate wasn't a Beta Tester as she wanted more people to join Haru's Stylish Rangers, he already decides to be the Party Leader in the future so their party isn't named that, he'd likely just stick with something simple like, Duo Trouble or Strike Force or something like that. He even generated a Quest to that effect.

Haru is fairly loud as she says farewell to Takeshi, who's helping out behind the counter. His classmate, well, former classmate, grins widely at Haru while saying his own good byes, each of them having paid for their own meal and drinks. "See you Yamamoto-san." He says after Haru elbows him and gives him a meaningful look.

Takeshi returns his clearly forced good bye, "See you as well, Sawada-san." There's clear amusement in the other boy's tone and a slight glint of humor in the other's eyes.

With that, they leave and he rubs the spot Haru elbowed him, giving her a dirty look but she ignores it. And so, they return to the Special Area and as they prepare to enter into it properly, they get a notification that their backpacks are now equipped and the backpacks serve as an Inventory, although there's a limited space to store things. Given the various pockets, their Inventory isn't all that dissimilar to a Pokemon game pack only they get to assigned what goes into what pocket or into the main bag. If they assigned a pocket to something, when they loot Monsters or Harvest from the Terrain, it'll automatically get put into said pocket, which saves time.

So they do that for the smaller pockets leaving the larger space unassigned. They check how easily they move with said large backpacks on their back along with engaging in a minor Spar, which completes another shared Quest that Haru won. They wait five minutes for his health to return to normal and he endures the victory dances Haru tries out along with poses, leaving him to sulk over his defeat. Her Lightning Flame allowing her to act and react faster then him, although his Hyper Intuition did kick in by the time his health had dropped under fifty percent but it was too late, Bleeding it what got him 'killed' in the spar.

He hopes there is a way to use his Sky Flame to heal himself and that thought generates a Quest, which he takes as a yes, there is a way. He just needs to figure it out and then practice it. After all, this game doesn't seem to have any Classes just Flames, which it doesn't really explain very well beyond which Flame is what color along with a name that goes along with it. The only reason he knows that Lightning Flames are green is because of Haru and it goes for her concerning Sky Flames being orange.

Then again, Hibari is a Cloud, so... If I ever figure out how to see that, I'll know what color Flame a Cloud is... Again, another Quest generates as he climbs to his feet. Clapping his hands to get rid of dirt and dust, he asks Haru, "Ready to begin?"

"Haru will become the Greatest Crafter in Mythical Flames of the Soul!" She declares and her pupils glow green for a few seconds before Haru marches through the large glowing portal that officially leads into the Special Area where Monsters spawn. He hurries to follow after and once the trip through the portal ends, finds that they have arrived in a large meadow that's sparse with bushes and the odd tree while off in the distance, there's a forest and further out, what might be a mountain range.

Then he hears a growl and Tsuna pulls out his dagger, preparing to face whatever Monster is growling, which turns out to be a fox looking Monster only it's fur is spring green with a 'mane' of what could be pine needles. With a yell, Haru is already attacking the cat size Monster that's got a question mark over its head. He does his best to join in, moving to the side to attack it from the right. It manages to evade a lot of their slashes and darting in to bite their legs or incoming arms.

They finally kill it, he manages to come up with a plan where he kicks it as it leaps and when it's on the ground, Haru's to lodge her dagger into its unprotected belly. The body remains and they get a notification that their skill with daggers went up, which means that they will actually see what kind of level or rank they actually have when it comes to using a weapon. "How does Haru loot it?"

"Ah... Well, we might have to... Skin it? With our daggers?" He suggests and Haru gives him a look of horror and disgust at touching the dead body of the fox Monster. "I mean, this game kind of seems real, you know? So, skinning it with cause it to drop its loot?"

"Haru think Tsuna-chan should do it as it's Tsuna-chan's idea." The girl states and he sighs at the ten year old Lightning before biting his lower lip as he alters his hold of his dagger as he moves to kneel by the dead Monster's side.

Taking a deep breath, he lodges his dagger into the body and it makes that sound, the one of metal cutting into meat, only it's more wet sounding. It's slow but he does manage to cut the Monster from its chin to its tail tip, which is hard given the needle mane remains sharp and able to stab him with its points. Thankfully, the game seems to take pity on him as he tries to make sense of why that didn't work, the Monster gets consumed in orange fire and there's now a pelt without the needle mane, a pile of needle hairs, meat, and bones.

He also gets a notice that he used his Sky Flame Skill to turn the Monster into Loot and he privately thanks any Kami willing to listen to him for that odd yet useful Skill. "Ok, I turned it into Loot, you want the pelt for making leather, right?" He asks and turns to find Haru looking at him with an odd look on her face before she comes out of it upon realizing he was looking at her.

"Right! And the meat for cooking." Haru states and he collects the needle hairs and the bones. Haru timidly approaches and touches each with her own dagger, which causes the pelt and the meat to vanish into the backpack's Inventory space.

They take a rest and their health regenerates, once they are fully healthy, they move onto attacking another fox Monster. Slowly, they get use to Combat and his Hyper Intuition begins to activate faster and faster in future fights. Of course, he's the only one able to use Flames to transform Monster bodies into neat piles of Loot. It's by the twentieth one that they kill that the fox Monsters get names above their heads, Evergreen Foxes, named for their mane of harden fur that is dark green in color and they completed a Quest which grants Haru a Recipe Book that possesses two ways to cook said Evergreen Fox meat while he gets a Recipe for making a Bone Dagger, which makes sense as he's been collecting the bones.

They also learn that the Entrance Hall leading to the Special Areas will now possess Craft Stations where they can turn Material Loot into stuff. Which has Haru squealing although she pouts at the fact that he can't hand over the Recipe for crafting a Bone Dagger to her, it seems that it's bound him. "Maybe I can make a copy of it?" He suggests and thus generating a Quest to see if he's able to create copies of Recipes.

Also, the Area now hosts more kind of Monsters and they can now interact with various bushes, the odd mushroom, and, of course, flowers. They leave off hunting for more Monsters and focus on Harvesting Loot from the Terrain, only killing Monsters if said Monsters attacked them. Both of their armors and daggers are looking rather worn by the time they exit out of the Special Area and into the Entrance Hall. Sure enough, Haru doesn't want to leave until she's turned some of what she's gathered into something not so... icky, her words not his.

So, he finds a Crafting Station that allows him to transform those bones into daggers. Unlike in other video games, he actually has to do some work and it takes a lot of tries before he create a poor example of a Bone Dagger but at least he now has a feel for creating them. He does his best to use up all the bones, some of his Bone Daggers are still poor quality but he's managed to create average ones. The average ones didn't match up with his metal dagger but then, he can now see if he can't do some range attacking viva dagger throwing as it doesn't matter if he loses or breaks these Bone Daggers as he can craft replacements as long as the Monsters drop bones as Loot.

Then he notices that he's also have to experiment to create his own Recipes when it comes to creating things out of bones. In the end, he shrugs, he's pretty sure its late and they best heading home. So, he makes sure to store what he made into his backpack's Inventory before going to check up on Haru...

"And your sleeping." Tsuna states upon checking to see if Haru is still alive. "Maybe I can..."

He tries to lift her only, yea, he's not strong enough and she's far too heavy for him to carry, without the backpack as it's resting on the counter of the station. Groaning, he tries to think of something and winces at the sight of what appears to be a rest area, complete with boxes that might be beds as there's covers and pillows on said contents. Looking between Haru and said location, he sighs in defeat and begins to drag her towards said area, having to take a few breaks due to reason but does manage to get her on one of those box beds, at which point, Haru grabs a pillow and snuggles with it, much to his amusement.

After taking a breather, he goes to collect Haru's backpack and places it on the ground next to the box bed she's on. Then, he sits down on another bed box, allowing his own backpack to drop to the ground next to it as he tries to figure out if he really wants to leave the Lightning alone in this place or if he should stay, even though he doesn't have anyway to contact either of their parents. But, well, he yawns and the toll of the events within the Special Area finally settles on him, so, he finds it hard to not fall asleep right there and then.

Kicking off his shoes, he moves the top of the sheet over, getting under it before covering himself with it. He moves the pillow just so and closes his eyes, the place is so different from his room yet, he's tired enough not to care. It wasn't long before his breathing evens out and everything just fade away.

To be continued . . .

Shifting Between Illusion and Reality P2

I don't own Kateyo Hitman Reborn!

"Tsuna-chan! Wake up!" And he's startled awake by Haru's voice being next to his ear. They butt head as he jerks to sit up quickly and they both hiss in pain while the nine year old Sky tries to gather his thoughts about what happened last night.

"Haru? What time is it?" He asks once he recalls that his implants are active again and he's able to play Mythical Flames of the Soul once more. The update about active Quests doesn't happen like it once did, then again, he's got a Quest tab to check his current Quest list, so the game doesn't need to do that upon the start of a new day.

"How would Haru know? Haru's phone is dead!" The girl informs him and he blinks before asking, "But... shouldn't you be able to charge it with your Flame? I mean, isn't Lightning just electricity?"

"Tsuna-chan has a point. Haru will have to give that a try... After Haru is home and can experiment using old cell phones or home appliances." The ten year old muses while he finds himself starting at the floating Nickname above Haru's head, which reminds him to look at the space over his own body to study the Nickname he put in without noticing what he was typing. Natsume hangs above his head in orange text while Green Ranger Haru hangs above Haru's own in green text.

"Never mind that, Haru wants to know why Tsuna-chan didn't carry her home." The other asks him and he gives her a frank look as he replies, "I'm not strong enough to carry you, I ended up dragging you over here."

"Boys are suppose to be strong." Haru points out and he bristles at the beginning of that old argument. "I am a boy! I'm also NINE!" He counters as he crosses his arms about his chest.

"Tsuna-chan is still Tsuna-CHAN." The girl states and he growls while glaring at her, a scowl fixated upon his features. She, of course, ignores his displeasure and moves back to her own bed box.

For the next little while, they refuse to look at one another or speak with one another. Which results in him glaring off at some random interesting decor on a wall within the resting area. In the end, he kind of feels a familiar need and shifting about, he begins to look for what could be a restroom. Upon spotting a door sporting a familiar figures, he swings his legs over and walks quickly in that direction, feeling the chill of the floor through his socks.

"Where are you going?" Haru asks before he hears her running to follow behind him. The door has both and upon opening the door, it looks like the restroom has ten stalls plus four sinks with two foot stools for kids to use.

Haru is quick to enter into the first one and he moves a few stalls to the left before entering to do his thing. His shoulders sag with relief as the toilet flushes itself once he's done, walking out, he washes his hands, noting that he's the first to finish. Now, he's hungry and thirsty, at least he knows that Haru made some food last night, well, it might serve as breakfast but if it doesn't, he could go out and buy something for himself at least, for breakfast before heading home. After all, given the mood he recalls his Okasan is in, it's likely she didn't realize he never came home last night.

Looking into the big mirror, he notices that he's still wearing his school uniform and then, he wants to be in his leather armor, orange flames flare up and race about his body, soon enough, he's wearing his leather armor and sporting that dagger in his belt. His eyes also shimmers orange while the adventuring equipment is on display then fade as his armor and dagger fade into orange flames, revealing his normal cloths. Humming thoughtfully, the nine year old gets off the stool and heads out of the restroom, heading for his backpack and to where his shoes should be.

Sitting down on the box bed, he puts on his shoes and then collects his backpack. Then, well, he kind of pauses as he looks towards the restroom door, torn between leaving Haru to her own devices or waiting for her. After all, Haru's more then capable of getting herself home and should have money in her bank account to buy something for breakfast if they ended up sleeping in later then they're use to.

Before he really comes to a decision, the Lightning exits out of the restroom and seems to notice that he's looking at her, which seems to cause her to pause before she hurries forward, being sure to look pointedly away, which he returns by looking towards the door way that leads out of this place. Moving to stand and shouldering his pack, he slowly walks towards the door that will open up to a street.

"Thanks..." He looks towards Haru, curious about why she's thanking him but she's got her back to him. "Haru's parents are going to be so worried for Haru!" The other says in a much louder voice and with that, the girl bolts for the exit at a flat run, causing him to blink before realizing he just doesn't get Haru and figures that he may never understand her, after all, she's also a girl and from eavesdropping on the older kids, they all seem to agree that girls, also women according to grown men, are impossible to understand.

/ [- | T | -] **

"Tsuna-chan! Ten minutes until the mystery feature is unlocked!" Haru pretty much yells in excitement upon his answering of the phone.

"I know, Haru, I know." He murmurs, it's nearly midnight and he'd been reading a manga while sitting in the living room. Yawning, he hears Haru huff but also kind of yawn. "I was reading a manga, waiting for it to count down."

"Oh! Which one? Is it a Love Story~, Tsuna-chan?" The ten year old inquires in a sing song tone by the end there and he feels his face heat up.

"Not a girl! And it's an old one called Ranma one half." He informs her. Sure, the main character is engaged to a number of girls but he clearly didn't want to be! Never mind the whole cursed to turn into a girl when splashed with cold water, at least the curse gets reversed with warm or hot water.

The character's hair style is really the reason why he even picked up the manga in the first place as he recalls seeing a toddler sporting a similar look, who also owned a pet monkey. Only reason he knows about the monkey is due to the white furred found him at least once a day during the toddler's stay in Namimori, it's also how he got into Hibari Kyoya's sights as well. He's never seen the Cloud of Namimori sport such a glaring look to anyone like the one he gave the toddler, it was enough that he actually yelped with a slight jump. How Fon, the toddler's name, didn't start balling his eyes out from getting such a look...

"Oh! Haru knows that anime! It's also a manga?" The girl muses and he sighs while running a hand through his hair.

"Yes, though, I did not know it was also an anime." The Sky admits. "Is it any good?" He asks curiously.

"Haru finds it rather confusing and frustrating as Haru really wishes to make Ranma wear so many different outfits but he only wears such boring cloths day after day." Which was something he really should have seen coming. "So many nice outfits, for both boys and girls... Why can't Ranma wear something stylish?"

"I think it's a personal point for him to, you know, empathize the fact he's a guy even though he's cursed to transform into a girl." He remarks and could understand that, after all, his Enemy Flaw has long since received an update and he really doesn't want anything to do with the Mafia let alone like the idea that his Otosan is slowly plotting out his life. Genma did the same for Ranma by engaging him to so many girls and even getting Ranma cursed, the man putting the blame for everything on Ranma's shoulders, forcing the cursed teen to deal with Genma's choices and decisions...

Yes, Tsuna can empathize with some of what the main character of Ranma one half goes through but he also knows that he'd handle things differently. Then again, they are to very different people, living two different lives, plus, one is a fictional character. "I mean, how would you like it if you turned into a boy when you get splashed with cold water? I'm sure you'd refuse to wear typical boy cloths or alter your address."

"Tsuna-chan shouldn't joke about that! If Haru experiences a nightmare like that, Tsuna-chan better watch out!" The older child grumbles and he represses the urge to sigh. "Haru is a cute, adorable girl and will grow up to be a beautiful, young lady."

"Then I'm a boy who's going to grow into a young man." He counters and they bicker over that old argument, which is still one he doesn't get. After all, why can't Haru acknowledge that he's a boy? Why can't she just call me Tsuna-kun or just Tsuna? He wonders to himself. Haru doesn't mind him calling her by her first name without anything else added to said name, then again, she seems to enjoy hearing her name being spoken given she still like to talk in the third person.

Then, well, the count down appears before his eyes and Haru squeals within seconds as it count downs from twenty.

=19=

=17=

=16=

=15=

=14=

=13=

=9=

=7=

=6=

=5=

=4=

=3=

=Avatar Unlocked=

"Avatar?" They murmur at the same time, although his tone is sports disbelief while Haru's tone sport excitement. "I thought for sure it would be Dungeons..." He admits while Haru just hums in a distracted manner, it seems that she's already looking at what that even means.

Sighing, he murmurs, "Open Status Page." Orange flames flare before him, it's open straight to the new tab, which then opens a summary concerning what an Avatar entails along with how it'll now change how he'll experience Mythical Flames of the Soul. It means Avatars now achieve Levels and that Stats now have actual values while the play style also determines Class. Due to his usual sneaky approach to hunting Monsters in the Special Areas plus his ability to avoid Monster Traps left behind by other Beta Testers and his throwing dagger attack style, he unlocked Rogue as his Class and his Stat point allotment has been arranged thus.

As for his Avatar's Level, it's at Level 10 from the amount of Monsters he's killed from spending time in that Special Areas, which isn't a lot as he's been busy spending time working on personal Quests like creating and improving his use of his Sky Flame plus doing his best to work on his ability to cook for himself as his Okasan hasn't come out of her state concerning his Otosan. From what little he got about it, it seems that his Otosan is suppose to be coming home for a visit at some point in September, no date given, which is fast approaching along with school, like in a week.

He's got fifty Stat points to spend as he sees fit as well, five per level but he can also spend these point to purchase a Flame Perk instead of spending them in improving his Stats. The Flame Perks generally improve their FP, short for Flame Points, from use, generation, and adding additional effects when using a Flame Skill. There's mention of a number of Avatar Races able to channel certain a certain Flame better but at the cost of being more susceptible to the 'stereotype' related with said Flame, following it to the instinctive level.

Which... he really doesn't get then again, it's not like he's met many fellow Beta Testers beyond Haru and finding those traps laid out by at least four other Beta Testers. There's no real hints concerning their Flame nor have they ran into said Beta Testers during these pass few weeks. It's likely that whoever they are, they are older then they are.

=Quest Created=

=Title: Colors of a Sky's Court=

=Summary: Curious about what other Flames are out there, Tsunayoshi is charged with meeting with another Beta Tester who isn't Miura Haru or is a Lightning.=

=Rewards: Hundred Yen=

=Rewards: New Friend=

=Rewards: Knowledge concerning another Flame of the Sky=

Tsuna blinks while realizing that a similar Quest is how Haru found him back when he was seven. "Haru... I just created a new Quest about locating another Beta Tester who's not a Lightning." He tells her, for some reason, he swears she stiffens at the news.

"Would you mind... Helping me look?" He asks before adding, "I mean, you don't have to but I thought, well, it rewards knowledge concerning another Flame and, well, I'm curious as to what other Flames there are that aren't Cloud, Lightning, or Sky." Even though he doesn't really know what Cloud really governs, only that there's a characteristic that Clouds claim Territories. Having spoken with Haru, she admits that Lightning governs Hardness or Harden plus electricity while he, in turn, admits that Sky governs Harmony and that's about it, no real additional bonus like electricity for Lightnings it seems.

"Haru... might have a lead..." The older child admits. "His name is Irie Shoichi and I think he's new to being a Beta Tester."

"Oh?" He is rather curious, after all, why hasn't Haru approached him? "What's the color about his eyes?"

"Haru thinks... it's yellow?" Haru recalls. "Haru doesn't know what Flame that goes with though..."

"I'm kind of surprised, Haru." He admits. "I mean, haven't you approached him yet?"

"Haru has Tsuna-chan." And though he waits for her to explain more, that's pretty much it. "Ah, Haru? I thought you wanted more people to form parties with? So, why haven't you approached this guy?"

"Haru was looking for other girls to party with, not boys." Haru states simply and he frowns, "I'm a boy!"

"Tsuna-chan is Tsuna-chan." Haru says in a dismissive way and he growls before huffing. "Whatever, that doesn't stop me from being able to pee standing up."

"Gross! Tsuna-chan shouldn't talk about such gross things with Haru!" The Lightning states and he sighs.

"Well, thank you for telling me about him, Haru. I'll have to track him down." He tells her and wonders just how much older this Irie Shoichi is that Haru decided not to approach him.

"Haru wants to know what Race Tsuna-chan is going with concerning his Avatar." Haru asks him as his Quest: Colors of a Sky's Court gets an update with this new information. "Haru's thinking of going with an Elf."

"Ah, Race?" He does his best to find a listing for Avatar Race but it's not on the summary notification. "Tsuna-chan is still reading the update notice?" Haru teases seconds after he murmured that. He skims through it a few times, being sure he read everything before closing it.

"Just wanted to be sure I didn't miss anything." He defenses himself from the Lightning's teasing while going through the steps concerning Avatar Creation. To Gender, he did pick male and his choices for Class is Rogue but there's also Sorcerer. "What Class did you pick?" The Sky asks.

"Sorcerer." Haru states. "Tsuna-chan going to place Sorcerer too?"

"No, I unlocked Rogue given my style concerning Monsters and disabling traps." He admits and picks Rogue, locking in that as his Class. Which now brings him to picking a Race.

"Haru unlocked Fighter as a Class, Haru did not like fighting with weapons as Haru did not like getting Haru's outfits ruined." And that makes perfect sense, given that Haru's wants to focus on creating stuff using Monster Loot. Moving to look at what an Elf is, he finds a male human looking person only sporting antlers coming from the temples plus the ears are rather long and pointed. The face kind of implies a muzzle but, otherwise, as a Race, Elf looks fairly human compared to the few he flipped through to find it. He wonders what a girl version looks like, but then, he'll likely be seeing Haru's Avatar soon enough.

According to the summary concerning picking Elf as a Race, they don't specialize with any particular Flame but does grant bonuses when using Flames in and outside of combat. They have a harder time increasing their physical Stats and using Stat points to bring them up costs two points instead of one. On the flip side, they have an easier time bringing up their INT and WIS and then, concerning the use of Stat points, the most notable advantage an Elf has is that CHA can get increase by two at the price of one Stat point.

"Well, not an Elf." He states, after all, Rogues generally need a high DEX. "I need a Race that doesn't hinder my physical Stat growth."

"Well, Haru can't help as Haru's Avatar has been completed." The ten year old girl tells him and he isn't all that surprised. "Haru's tired so, night Tsuna-chan!"

"Night Haru." He says and once Haru hangs up, he puts the phone down and then, closes his Stat Page, heading to grab his manga, he heads for his room. Changing into his nightwear once he put the manga onto the desk, he lays on his bed before calling up his Stat Page, which is still on the Avatar Creation but no longer on the Elf Race page. The Race on display is Tengu sporting an Eagle appearance instead of Crow appearance plus functional wings.

As a Race, Tengu does gain the Beta Tester Flight but there's a cost in the form of being among the shortest of Races at four foot five inches being their max height. They also have an encumbered limit that a Beta Tester's STR can't increase at all, again, it kind of makes sense given Tengu can fly. The Race proves to grant bonuses to those possessing Cloud and Sky Flame at the cost of more instinctive behavior concerning their Flame 'stereotype' characteristics.

Having spied the reference to Sky Flame, it makes sense as to why this Race is the first one to appear for him. And so, he spends time going through the roster of Races.

/ [- | T | -] **

Yawning widely, Tsuna realizes that he fell asleep while trying to pick an Avatar Race and is rather bewildered at the sight of his open Stat Page concerning Avatar Creation just hanging there, before his eyes. The Race that's on display is that of Kitsune and, well, he ends up yawning which usually means he's stretching, and that... As he views the Stat Page, he finds he approved Kitsune as his Race, which causes him to pale but even closing and reopening the Stat Page doesn't do anything, leaving him to Edit Appearance.

In the end, he just picks white fur, no additional markings, and then sapphire blue eyes. He just picks age appropriate height and weight plus enabling the Avatar to age, which transforms the Kitsune on display to look much younger and, well, rather cute, like a young kit really. Before accepting, he moves to pick a very light gray for his limb stockings, tail tip, and backs of his ears, not liking how the typical black looked against such stark white fur. Approving the look, he's informed that Natsume the Kitsune has been confirmed as Sawada Tsunayoshi's Avatar.

With that, the Stat Page vanishes and he's confused as to where the name Natsume came from... until he realizes he never changed his Nickname, like, at all. Haru's Nickname did recently change it to Sango, then again, Haru went through a lot of Nicknames since her first one, which had been Green Ranger Haru. In the end, there's not much he can do, so he rolls out of bed and head for the bathroom.

Once he's back in his room, Tsuna stands before the mirror and after a few seconds to willing the shift, orange flames roll about his whole body and upon vanishing, he finds himself staring at the Kitsune Avatar and doing a few tests, well, he finds out how to move the ears and then the tail. He opens his mouth to take a look at the kind of fangs within before closing it. Then, he moves a hand paw through the fur about his neck and finds that he can almost feel the way it moves as his hand goes through it.

Shaking his head, the Avatar fades as orange ashes fall, disappearing within an inch of his body. Leaving his real body to be seen and reflected in the mirror. With that, he moves to go through his dresser drawers for cloths to wear, after all, he's got things to do today.

As he finishes making himself breakfast as his Okasan is out of the house, which is kind of odd but, well, it hardly matters as his Okasan is an adult and should be able to take care of herself. Plus, she might have mentioned something about getting up early for errands yesterday but he'd been too hyped over the unlocking a new feature for the Beta Test. Then there's the fact that it's pass eleven am, so, it might be his fault for not waking up earlier to actually talk with her.

Once he's made brunch, it's a term used when one combines breakfast and lunch, he goes through his Quests and finds the Quest: Colors of a Sky's Court . He's kind of puzzled by the working used but mentally pushes that away, after all, this Beta is for the Sky Edition of Mythical Flames of the Soul. He's got the base Flame from the title, which likely means Sky Flame is the most numerous Flame type and thus nothing special. Then again, Cloud, Lightning, and Sky... Well, if Lightning gets used as a name, maybe Storm and Rain does as well?

In the end, he finishes up his meal and puts the various dishes into the sink while soaking the stuff he used to make his brunch. Tsuna heads off to complete his usual Quests concerning his physical conditioning before deciding to look up the name Irie Shoichi or just looking for those with the last name Irie. Haru finds him just as he finishes his push ups in the Entrance Hall of the Special Zone that's the first one they found and have come to visit regularly, it's kind of like they have mentally claimed it as theirs.

"Tsuna-chan should head off to take a shower." The Lightning states and he chuckles slightly while she gives him a very unimpressed look. "So... what does a girl Elf look like?" He changes the topic as he drinks some water from a water bottle that he bought on his jog here.

Haru's expression changes and it's clear that she's very excited to show off her Avatar, given that she didn't comment on him needing to at least go wash his face viva the restroom of the Entrance Hall. Green begins to glow and then lightning spreads about her skin before it flashes brightly with a slight roar of thunder as he gets his first look at Sango the Elf. He blinks for a bit, the flash is rather blinding after all.

Sango is clearly a young woman and like the boy version, there's something in the face that suggests a muzzle and it's then that he really notices the eyes, how instead of the whites being white, they are actually black. Emerald green is the color of eyes that do seem to be very bright but that could be because of the black that's surrounding it. There's no hint of antlers but then, perhaps that isn't that surprising the animal they seem to be hinting at is a deer and it's the boy deer that grow antlers.

The hair is a glossy navy blue as is the thin eyebrows. The cloths that the Avatar is wearing are clearly a woman's kimono but the bone and stone bead necklace kind of reminds him of those seen in anime and manga for religious characters like monks, priests, or priestesses. "Did you craft a Flame focus?" He asks curiously, he never created one nor did he ask Haru to create him one, he rather figure out how to use his Sky Flame without one as then he doesn't waste time reaching for it or calling it into his hand.

"Of course I did." The voice does sound like Haru only... far more mature. He watches Sango the Elf holds out her hand with the palm facing up and a rather large orb that looks to be made from jade appears in the air before the palm, it hovers and it takes him a second to realize that the orb likely only appears to be made out of jade but it likely has a metal core as he's seen Haru in the library reading different books, some very advanced books at that, which means that her Lightning Flame is the cause of the hovering. It's clear that Sango seems very pleased with his reaction.

"So that's why you've been spending all that time in the library, huh? Trying to figure out how to that kind of effect?" He asks, he's spent a lot of time with her after all. He's seen her pouts when it comes to certain feats that look rather stylish and among them is usually having a hovering ring or an orb following someone while hovering in the air without touching the owner.

"Your turn, Tsuna-chan." Haru states as the Avatar vanishes in a flare of green static. It's clear that he hit the nail on the head.

It takes a few seconds but the orange flame covers him and heralding his Avatar covering him. "So cute!" Haru squeals at the sight of Natsume the Kitsune, he feels his ears move back while Haru seems to suddenly teleport before him, clearly admiring his 'cute' factor. He barely has a chance to jerk back before Haru is overcome with the impulse to try and pet him.

"Haru!" He notices his voice is also kind of different, not that Haru cares as she manages to coo while running a hand over his head. His face heats up and after a few seconds, he pushes Haru's hand from his head. "Haru! Don't do that! It feels weird!"

He's sure to let the Avatar go when Haru tries to reach out with her other hand and she pouts, going so far as to cross her arms. "Meanie." Haru says in a sulky tone and he gives her a scowl, not liking the fact that she just invaded his personal space just because.

"Your the meanie." He counters as he crosses his arms about his own chest. "You didn't even ask!"

They look off at different directions for the next little bit but, well, he gets hungry and he's also got something else to do. He walks over to his backpack and pulls out a snack from the large camping pack and drinks some more of his water before capping it. Sitting on the floor next to his backpack, he opens his snack and begins to eat it.

Haru huff upon noticing what he's doing but she pulls out her own cell phone. As he finishes and pockets the garbage, he gets up and begins up shoulder the camping backpack. "I'm off, you wanting to come or you just going to stick around here?"

"Haru's coming." The Lightning says and the cellphone goes into a pocket, he half expected that Haru would have wanted to do a minor run of the Special Area but, well, it seems he was wrong as she didn't even bring her backpack. They walk out onto the street and they both pause at the sight of the infamous Cloud, who seems to pause to stare at the two of them, then pointy at him.

But then, there's something happening with a woman shouting at some teens about smoking. Thus he's saved from an encounter with Hibari Kyoya as the older boy, who's two years older then himself, growls and glares off at the spot, it's not long before there's yelps of pain while he does his best to calm down from his close encounter. Haru also seems to be recovering from the near miss as well, after all, ever since Haru started hanging out with him, she's meet the older boy.

With one last deep, calming breath, he heads off to the library with Haru in toe. Using the library's computer, he does find a listing for an Irie family here in Namimori and so, his Quest updates with an address. He waves Haru over from her talking with some younger kids. Tsuna heads for the exit, waiting for a few minutes for the girl to catch up. "I got an address." He tells her and Haru hums in acknowledgement.

He leads the way, heading for the address. As they pass a bus stop, the returning and his, maybe, future classmate, Yamamoto, calls out a greeting to Haru and to him, which Haru is happy to return and he gives a wave. He kind of recalls hearing that Yamamoto Takeshi signed up for a number of sports camps, one after another. Yes, the Lightning continues to be disappointed at the fact that Yamamoto hadn't been picked as a Beta Tester as, before Yamamoto left, Haru had been more then happy to visit the restaurant just to speak with Yamamoto, then again, he's seen her face redden slightly after a friendly smile the other boy gave her once.

The young Sky takes a moment to study the ten year old sports enthusiast as various kids from school welcome the other back. He can only guess at what the other boys are saying but for some reason, the smile on Yamamoto's face isn't... Shaking his head and scolds himself about 'knowing' anything about Yamamoto Takeshi when the most interaction he's had with the other had been at Yamamoto-san's restaurant twice this break, once for that supper and when Haru dragged him over to the restaurant to ensure he gave the other farewell and wishes of fortune for his various camps.

After all, Takeshi's always been popular at their school while he'd still trying to figure out why he keeps getting targeted by various people out to bully him for no reason what so ever. Which means he's usually seeing Hibari Kyoya on a daily basis due to said attention and the older boy seems to have a special nickname for him, Fluffy/Small Animal. He's Fluffy Animal when Hibari is in a semi-pleasant or normal mood, for Kyoya at any rate, and Small Animal when the Cloud is in a more violent mood. Thankfully, Haru hasn't heard the Cloud use said nickname or she'd be using it to tease him when she's in the mood to do so.

Turning away, he picks up his pace and continues on, after all, he's got a Quest to finish. Soon enough, they arrive at the house and now... the sight of it, of the end goal... The nine year old begins to get cold feet yet, well, it's kind of too late to back out now. After all, he doesn't want Haru seeing him chicken out and so, he approaches the house, ringing the door bell the moment he reaches the door, he feels himself freezing slightly.

"Coming!" He hears an older girl's voice call out. Soon enough, he recovers just as the door opens and a look of surprise flashes across her face. "Yes? Can I help you?"

"I'm... I'm looking for Irie Shoichi? We're kind of..." The girl seems to grin, "You're also Beta Testers? Yea, sure, still kind of freaky who this game works."

"Come in, I'll grab the little dweeb, he needs to get out of his room at some point after all." The girl opens the door wider and he walks into the porch but doesn't move to switch his footwear, the door closing while the older girl heads off to fetch someone who sounds like he's a heck of a lot younger then he expected.

"How... old is he?" He asks upon turning to look at Haru. "Bit younger then Tsuna-chan." The Lightning admits and he just stares at her, finding it hard to wrap the idea that Haru didn't approach this Irie Shoichi if the kid is younger then he himself.

He jumps slightly at the shouting that suddenly breaks the silence of the house, it's that of a boy and it's followed by that girl's voice. Then a door get banged closed only for it to be slammed opened. It takes some minutes but the girl marches a young boy, who really is nearly his own age, down the stairs. The kid sports red hair, wears glasses, and sporting an angry scowl but upon spying them, he notices the yellow that shimmers in the boy's eyes and the other jerks upon meeting his own eyes, orange likely doing the same for Irie Shoichi.

Then he gets a Quest Completed the moment the other boy walks over, the anger from earlier gone while there's excitement and touch of shock. "A Sky... Your a SKY! I can't believe it!" He's rather bewildered as to why that's so surprising. "There's a Sky here in Namimori!"

"Ah... I am Sawada Tsunayoshi and yea, I'm a Sky." He admits while the shock turns to awe. "This is Miura Haru, she's a Lightning."

Shoichi blinks and glances towards Haru, looking a tad confused before he seems to recognize her. "Oh, I remember you! From the book store! You were looking into magnets." Haru gives him a weak smile and wave.

It's not long before they are led up the stairs, pass the bemused sister, and then into Irie Shoichi's room. "Oh, yea, I should introduce myself. I'm Irie Shoichi and I'm a Sun!" The boy says, again, staring at him with a look of awe.

"I never thought I'd get the chance to meet a Sky..." Shoichi admits. "According to what I've come across, Skies are so rare, Clouds are a touch more common then Skies."

Something hardens within his stomach as he realizes that his thoughts on the subject concerning him possessing Sky Flame seems to be wrong, dead wrong from just the way Shoichi reacts to him. "How do you know that?" He asks, his mouth feeling rather dry.

"Well, that's what I've found online from the previous Beta Testers accounts." The Sun explains. "Of course, it took a lot to find some hidden forums that some other Beta Testers made, most of it is complaining about everything little thing like how Flames are distributed and their names to the fact you actually need to skin and butcher Monsters to get Loot if you don't have the right Flame."

"Anyone complain about the Avatars yet?" He asks after Shoichi gestures for them to sit on his bed while he's sitting that he rolled away from the desk top computer. "Well, it's too early to tell, I mean, we here in Japan were among the first to get it unlocked, you know?"

"Haru picked Elf and Tsuna-chan picked Kitsune." He flushes at the reminder, he didn't mean to pick Kitsune as his Avatar's Race, he'd been more inclined towards Leonine or Lupine as they just appealed to some deep part of him.

"Tsuna...-chan?" Shoichi asks and he replies, "It's just how she decides to address me. I've tried getting her to stop with it but, she's stubborn."

"Oh, so, ah..." Shoichi trails off and he says, "Tsuna or Tsuna-kun is fine."

"Shoichi-kun for me then." The slightly younger boy admits. "Haru is fine with Haru." The ten year old states and he shrugs at the startled look the red head gives him.

"Ah, ok, thanks... Tsuna-kun." Shoichi says, ducking his head slightly. "So, yea, my Avatar, I picked Tengu. The appearance takes after a magpie."

"Yea, I was tempted to pick that, I mean, who wouldn't want to experience flying?" He admits and Shoichi seems to sag in relief while Haru murmurs, "Haru wished they had a cute pixie instead of just ugly Tengu."

"At least you won't have to worry about instinctive behavior given you are neither a Cloud or Sky." Tsuna points out and Shoichi smiles while returning the gesture, "And you given your not a Mist or a Sun."

"Haru's a Sorcerer, Tsuna-chan is a Rogue." Pipes in Haru in the slight silence that descends. He sighs, running a hand through his hair while Shoichi blinks, looking between them before saying, "I, ah, haven't spent any real time in the Monster Areas so, I don't have a Class yet."

"That's kind of odd, Haru recalls having two options." The Lightning recalls and he kind of nods, adding, "Yea, Sorcerer just seemed to be one that we both shared... You... haven't actually done any of those Monster Quests yet, have you?"

"No, I haven't... I'm not... It's just that... My stomach is rather... sensitive." Shoichi admits with a weak smile and a hand going to his mid section.

"Well, we could escort you into the area and I've gotten the hang of using my Flame to turn Monsters into Loot. Haru should be able to make you something if you don't like the idea of using a dagger, she's trying to be the Greatest Crafter in the game after all." He assures the Sun, who looks rather relieved at the idea.

"Well, according to my Combat Tab, I'm simply average for most weapons, which includes the category firearms, surprisingly enough." Shoichi explains. "So maybe something ranged? I mean, I can fly around attacking something while it can't attack me?"

"So a bow or a crossbow? After all, unless you know how to create a gun using Loot from Monsters and Terrain, those two kind of sound like your best bet." He admit while Shoichi's head jerks up at something.

"Wait, if you know how to make something like that, you can actually make it?" Shoichi asks and he slowly nods, feeling Haru doing the same. "Yea but the end result will be different as creating anything gets awarded a Quality, I mean, I can make fairly decent Bone Daggers now but at the beginning, I'd just make poor or average. Plus, the Loot that's Harvested from Monster corpses and the Terrain might have certain things that might help increase the Quality or decrease it."

"Plus, Haru likes to experiment which Haru then creates notes for before having Tsuna-chan create an actual Recipe for Haru." The ten year old states in a sage like manner. "She's hoping that an Auction House or System will open up at some point so she can actually sell those for large amounts of money." He explains.

"And for Haru to buy material that Haru has never worked with before." The Lightning states and he nods, adding, "Yea, that as well."

"Wow... Now I wished I'd hooked up with you two earlier as now I don't have that much time left before school starts up again to test this creation system out." Shoichi admits.

"Ah, well, you might get picked again for the next phase of the Beta, we both did after all." He admits and Haru nods, "It's how Haru met Tsuna-chan when Haru was eight."

"We were part of the first phase of the Beta Test, which was just the Quest generation and making sure the implants worked." He admits and Shoichi looks rather stunned by this news. "Haru found me due to a Quest and then, last night, I created a Quest looking for other Beta Testers, which is what brought us here as Haru realized you were also a Beta Tester, I guess you didn't realize she was one in turn?"

"Yea, I just thought it was just my imagination playing tricks on me." Shoichi admits. "I, ah, kind of don't sleep, sometimes, at night, like I'm suppose to." The red head rubs the back of his neck while looking rather embarrassed over that. "I just get so wrapped up in something that I just can't fall asleep nor can I just stay in bed until that energy wears off, so, yea, I just find things to do to wear myself out, only by that point it's usually time to wake up, then school..."

"These days, I just blame it on my Activation trait of my Sun Flame." The other boy admits, laughing slightly while looking up while his one hand is rubbing the back of his neck, eyes closed with a sheepish grin.

"Haru knows that feeling." Haru admits with a nod. "Shoichi-kun doesn't have anything to be ashamed of."

"So, when is a good time to do this Monster killing?" He asks after a bit of silence. "I mean, we can eat supper and then head out, if we run a little late, there's beds we can use to rest."

"Also bring a pack... Haru needs to run home for Haru's pack if Shoichi-kun wants to do it tonight!" Haru exclaims and Shoichi looks a bit nervous yet there's some resolve there.

"Yea, just a quick trip, right? And would like to try a bow, I mean, I've seen some how to videos when it comes to using weapons and a bow seems a lot simpler to use then a crossbow."

To be continued . . .

Shifting Between Illusion and Reality P3

I don't own Kateyo Hitman Reborn!

"Hey Sawada-kun!" Startled Tsuna looks around only to find Yamamoto Takeshi approaching him at a fast walk. "Ready for the start of another school semester?"

"Yamamoto...-kun." He nods a greeting, a tad confused as to why Takeshi added -kun to his last name but thought it best to return the favor. "And, well, kind of?"

In all honesty, Shoichi's come up with a lot of interesting idea and yet, much like Shoichi kind of mentioned, the other boy seems to be able to go about two days without any sleep and it also be came apparent that Shoichi hasn't been eating enough given he's got an implant either. Which means that he's found himself gently, most of the time, getting Shoichi to eat regularly, usually a hearty soup filled with veggies and meat plus spices for flavor. According to some articles he's found online about food that lasts the longest within the stomach, soup was the most recommended and thankfully, the easiest for him to make.

And so, Shoichi's beginning to put on weight in the form of muscle and is also growing taller plus, it seems that it's also helped level off Shoichi's sleep pattern, making it a bit more easier on the Irie Household as a whole. Haru's rather pouty that soup is pretty much on the menu throughout their time within the Special Areas but then, as he pointed out, if Haru wanted something else, she is more then welcome to bring her own meal. Which, for some reason, she just doesn't do, seemingly preferring the free meal of soup then bringing her own lunches.

"I hear that your Okasan is gone, so, you're alone at the house?" Takeshi asks and he sighs, yes, his Otosan did finally make an appearance just a few days into September then took his Okasan off on a cruise, leaving him alone at the house with no baby sitter.

"She's suppose to be back by October." He admits weakly but, well, there had been some strange tension in the air between Otosan and himself. Never mind the Quest that got created the moment he heard about this 'cruise' as something about it just seems... rushed. "Not sure if my Otosan will be returning with her though." I hope he doesn't. He can't help but think.

"So... You're kind of on your own then?" Takeshi asks and he nods. "Yea, been doing my best to keep the house clean and been making my own meals. Soup is pretty easy to make." He admits with a slight smile, he's pretty certain Haru is the one to tell Takeshi about his current situation. After all, she seems to like Takeshi and he can see her visiting the Yamamoto family's restaurant, which he though had been co-owned by Takeshi's parents only to find out that it's just owned by the father, Takeshi's mother does help around it but she's got her own job.

"That's rough, why didn't they take you with them?" He blinks and looks over to Takeshi, studying the other's face for a few seconds. "Neither of them thought I wanted to go, I think? I mean, it's not like they asked if I wanted to go. Plus, school was coming up, that could be the reason they didn't asks, maybe?"

Though personally, he thinks it might have something to do with that odd tension and the stirrings of... something that he thinks might be anger or hatred, after all, that man is still on his Enemy List and the short amount of time he spent in the man's company... He found it really hard to think of him as his Otosan, it had been easier when he didn't know what his Otosan looked like or Felt like. He still recalls how he bristled at being called tuna-fishie and realizes he scowled upon thinking that thought.

He gets the feeling that Takeshi noticed the scowl and would remember it. "How was your camps? Haru was more excited that you were back then your experiences during this break." He admits and there's a change in Takeshi's expression at the mention of the Lightning, it's clear that Takeshi regards Haru fondly, even if she can be a bit pushy and bossy.

"Great! And from now on, I've decided to focus on Baseball as I found it to be the one I liked the most." Takeshi tells him and he moves a bit closer to Takeshi, there's something in the other boy's eye but it passes quickly as the other begins to recount the reasons why he finds Baseball to be his favorite.

As the gate of the school comes up, Tsuna notices Hibari on the wall near the gate sporting a fairly neutral expression while watching students enter into the school. "Hey Takeshi-kun! Over here!" He hears someone call the few months older boy over to them. "See you, Yamamoto-kun." He says as he ends up catching the eye of the Cloud of Namimori, who seems content to watch him like a hawk.

"Talk with you later, Sawada-kun!" He feels Takeshi move off to join up with those boys who beckoned him. His pace slows, he's not sure what to expect from Hibari as it's unusual for the Cloud to focus solely on him while there's other people around, capable of crowding him. He's yet to blink and it takes him seconds for it to dawn on him that he's in a staring contest with Hibari Kyoya of all people! Now the question is, does he want to win? What happens if he wins?

Then he's bumped from behind and the staring contest ends as he turns to find someone, an older someone, steadying themselves. "That's Extremely mean!" The almost teen shoves him after giving him a sneer, turning to glare at the white haired boy in the company of Sasagawa Kyoko and Kurokawa Hana, he knows Kyoko is the most popular girl in his age group while Hana is her best friend slash bodyguard. "You Extremely should apologize to my sister, her friend, and that boy you just pushed!" The older white haired boy informs the teen while Kyoko seems to be trying to talk her older brother from doing something.

"For crowding the sidewalk leading to the school's gate, you all will be Bitten to Death!" And with that, whatever was going on between that teen and the siblings plus Hana comes to an end while he is quick to enter into a flat run, heading straight for the school, hopefully he won't be confronted by Hibari Kyoya at a later point in the day or that the other will recall he had been part of that crowding situation.

/ [- | T | -] **

"I'm sorry about my brother including you like that this morning, Sawada-san." Sasagawa Kyoko apologizes, both Hana and her looked for him during their respective lunches, he wasn't in their class so he's almost done eating his soup when they found him. The look on Hana's face...

"It's really nothing, Sasagawa-san, I wasn't hurt nor did Hibari-san catch up to bite me before he had the chance to do so." He assures the girl, hoping that Hana will now stop giving him that look. "You didn't need to seek me out to apologize on your Oniisan's behalf."

"See, Kyoko? You didn't need to apologize at all, I told you the monkey was fine." Hana states in a put on tune with hints of disdain and he gives the other girl a puzzled look at the monkey comment.

"Are you sure?" Kyoko asks, her gaze moving between her friend and himself. "You never know with Hibari-sama, he might just track you down to give you your bites."

"That's between the two monkeys, Kyoko. Let's go, we still have our lunches to eat." Hana states, the girl seems to possess the two Bentos.

He looks down and off to the side, feeling a tad responsible for the two not eating their lunches, yet he knows it's really not at the same time. "I'm pretty much done, why don't you two just sit here and do that?" He gulps the last of his soup before twisting the cup onto the thermos then gets up.

"It's a nice spot..." Kyoko admits, taking a look around and Hana just seems to be happy he's leaving plus they'll actually eat some of their lunch. "See you, Sasagawa-san. Kurokawa-san." He says as he begins to walk away, Kyoko's farewells are more heartfelt then Hana's.

Heading for the boy's washroom and ends up running into Takeshi, who's exiting. "Hey Sawada-kun." The boy says with a smile.

"Yamamoto-kun." He greets the other with a slight smile of his own. "Have you signed up for the Baseball team yet?" He asks, recalling the conversation from this morning.

"Oh, no, not yet, they won't have the sign up sheets until after-school." Takeshi tells him. "Say, are you thinking about joining a club or team?" It's clear that it's a thought that just crossed his mind.

"Ah, no, I likely won't be joining any club or team, at least not for this semester." He admits. "I'm kind of testing something out for a company so, that takes up most of my free time outside of school and chores."

"Oh, wow, really? What kind of game is it?" Takeshi asks.

"It's another one of those massive multi player, role playing game." He admits with a bemuse look, amusement likely dancing in his eyes. "Not sure when it'll be released though, it's still got a lot of things to test out."

"Is it any good?" Takeshi asks and he nods, his smile growing just a tad. "Yea, I'd say so. It's rather expansive too, which is likely why it's going through so many Beta phases."

"Well, I guess it's too much to ask for a title huh?" Takeshi asks and he sighs, admitting, "I'd like to share it but, well, I kind of don't want to get kicked out of it, I mean, I'm getting paid to do this, you know? But, when I hear they're done with the Beta Testing and are set to release it, I'll share it then, ok?"

"Fair enough." Takeshi admits after taking a moment to study him and he relaxes upon hearing that, glad that the other isn't pressing him for more. "See you later, Sawada-kun. Also, be sure not to be a stranger at the restaurant, ok?"

"Ok, I'll remember, Yamamoto-kun." He promises and Takeshi heads off while he enters, washing out the thermos with some water from the sink.

Soon enough, he's putting it away and grabbing what he needs for his afternoon classes. He makes it back to the classroom just as the first bell rings.

/ [- | T | -] **

He half expected to be confronted after school by his usual 'admirers' yet, nobody moves to hinder him as he leaves for home. As he nears the house, he Feels that something is wrong, which causes a Quest to be created concerning said Feeling and how he'll investigate it. Tsuna frowns as he considers his options and, well, he rather not deal with what the Quest entails. He doesn't want to involve either Haru or Shoichi, after all.

In the end, the young Sky retreats from the neighborhood and considers the few adults he has in his life before realizing that, well, the list doesn't really have any names on it, given his Okasan's away so that rules her out automatically. He considers phoning the local police before discarding it as he doubts they'll accept 'I have a bad feeling about heading home' or 'I got this Quest and it's warning me that somebody or bodies are looking to capture me'. Nor did he want to involve either of his friends' parents.

So, well, he walks off as he worries his lower lip before coming to a stop under a tree. Closing his eyes, he just touches his Sky Flame and just soaks his being in the warmth the orange fire seems to give. Then after sometime, Tsuna realizes that he's started walking again, he opens his eyes, feeling an icy resolve grip him. There's no real direction but there is a sense of destination though.

As he arrives at what Feels like the right place, he feels kind of exhausted and yawns while rubbing his left eye with the back of his hand. He's standing before Takeshi's dad's restaurant and glancing around, he enters it, not really sure why this was his destination. There's something that tries to wrap its way into him but he just 'ghosts' through the 'bindings' covering the area so that he can enter into the building. He's kind of confused at the sight within the building yet, it seems that those who were actually there seem to turn to regard him.

"Ah, is Yamamoto Takeshi here? Or is the baseball team doing something with those looking to sign up?" He inquires and the man who is Takeshi's dad seems to recover, while this dark blond wearing a crown seems to turn his nose up at him. The... 'baby' seems to be regarding him with what he thinks might be a frown.

"My son might be hanging out with his future team-mates..." The man trails off and he introduces himself, noting the way the 'baby' and the crown wearing blond stiffen, "Sawada Tsunayoshi, sir. I'm friends with Miura Haru."

It's clear that Haru is instead well known to the man, given the smile. "Yamamoto Tsuyoshi, owner of this establishment." Yamamoto-san says. "I will tell my son that you came to see him."

"Ah, yes, sorry, it's just that, I thought you'd be open. I'm sorry for not noticing the sign." He says for clearly, he missed something given the lack of hassle and bustle of the supper rush. Bowing in apology and he hears an odd laugh but doesn't turn to focus on the one who laughed.

He leaves with a simple good bye and a bit away from the restaurant, the Quest updates, which is odd, given he hadn't done anything save for putting some distance between himself and that restaurant. Sighing, he's growing hungry and yet, he doesn't want to try for home. So, he heads off to find a fast food place to eat at and he reconsiders the reasons why he doesn't get himself a phone while he finishes eating the burger and fries. He doesn't leave until he finishes the drink.

It's getting late and he can't avoid this Quest, so, he exits and heads home in a passive mood. That Feeling remains as he gets close to the house, yet, for some reason, he's kind of reassured that it'll work itself out, which is just odd but, well, he kind of has to trust that feeling. Unlocking the door, he enters and turns on the lights, taking off his runners, he puts on his slippers. He can't help but find the house to be eerie as he closes the door with a frown. He manages to dodge the attempted strike to his head but he's so startled by the fact he's getting attacked by actual people that he get sent flying viva a kick to his mid-section, he gets stopped by a wall while someone speaks in a foreign language yet the tone and body language clearly say they are annoyed with him.

The next blow is to his face...

/ [- | T | -] **

"Small Animal." He hears a familiar voice, clearly annoyed yet... was there worry there? Opening his eyes, he finds Hibari Kyoya crouched next to him and that his face hurts.

Hibari grunts before looking up at somebody, a sour look clearly plastered upon the Cloud's face. "Clean up the mess." Hibari states and, well, he closes his eyes due to the fact that, his head is pounding and he feels rather tired but he did note that his Quest has been completed and the rewards he received means that whoever they had been, they hadn't taken him out of Namimori and he had only been captured for four hours, well, that's what the Quest informed him.

He hears Yamamoto Tsuyoshi murmur something to someone while he feels like someone is picking him up. He tries to stand, yet, his body doesn't really respond to him like it should. There's a huff that's likely from Hibari, who might be the reason he's getting off the ground. "Sorry." He slurs out, likely not even sounding what he said.

"The Vultures have been dealt with." Hibari states simply. "You, Small Animal, did nothing wrong."

He kind of hums in acknowledgement, he's having trouble orienting himself while he hears a familiar sound of metal slicing through bloody meat, he shivers slightly as presses his eyes close even more. The smell, it's not all that different then a Monster's corpse gives off and, well, he's pretty certain that by 'dealt with', Hibari means dead. "You hurt?" He asks softly, his voice wavering yet he's pretty sure that was fit for human ears.

Hibari scoffs while there's that odd laugh and it kind of clicks into place that whoever that 'baby' and the one wearing the crown are, if he hadn't gone to the restaurant, he might have been taken out of Namimori before anyone knew that something happened. "Thank you for your help." He says as he does his best to ignore the bodies of the men to look at the blood splattered, crown wearing teen and the 'baby'.

Although he doesn't see the eyes of the dark blond, he can feel them on him and they are assessing him before a judgement is reached. "The Prince does not need to be thanked for putting uppity peasants in their place." The teen states and the 'baby' states simply, "We'll be charging your father for this."

"Ok?" He gets out before the pounding becomes to much and that tired feeling, what feeling he has with his body slips as he senses Hibari tense up and he can imagine the scowl. In the end, Hibari manages to man-handle him into the likely back of a car and, well, he falls asleep as it drives towards a doctor's clinic or hospital.

/ [- | T | -] **

"Tsuna-kun!" Twin voices cry out, one being a boy and the other being a girl's. He's rather startled out of his almost nap as Haru and Shoichi are quick to approach his bed, both looking rather harried.

"Haru. Shoichi-kun. Are your schools are out already?" He asks, he knows his face still looks rather messed up but his Flame Skill for self regeneration is working on it, just at a slower pace then if he'd been using it in the Special Area.

"I looked worse this morning." He admits. "I'll be fine by tomorrow."

"What happened?" Haru hisses and there's fury in that one statement, which takes him back for a few seconds as he's never expected to hear that tone coming from Haru. "Kidnapping. I didn't spend more then four hours in their clutches though."

He'd hope that would reassure them, only it seems that Shoichi's not sporting a dark expression in his eyes while Haru's face displays her anger at what happened. He can honestly admit, he's not sure what to make of his two friends at this point as it's like looking at a pair of strangers who merely share Haru and Shoichi's looks. Did that head blow send me to an alternate dimension or something? The Sky wonders.

"Why you?" Haru demands while Shoichi muses, "Maybe because of the game? After all, with his mother out of the house, they thought he'd be an easy target?"

He dimly recalls something from last night, something about his... "We'll be charging your father for this." He repeats and he feels the two pin him with a look.

"The... not baby said that. I think they were a very short dwarf, I think is the right term?" Then again, he's kind of surprise to recall anything about that short time he'd been found. "Hibari was there, he propped me up but I don't think I could walk... I heard... I..." He swallows as he recalls that snick snack sound, of a metal cutting through bloody meat. Didn't I see someone covered in...

He feels Haru place a comforting hand on his shoulder and it seems that he'd started shivering. Shoichi goes to pour him some water before bringing it over, he takes it and gulps it down in hopes of appeasing his stomach. It doesn't do much but, well, he takes some deep, calming breaths.

"What... what does your father do, Tsuna-kun?" Shoichi asks. "I've never heard you mention him." He notices a slight guilty expression and he's pretty sure it likely had to do with drawing his own conclusions about his home life.

"Lie." He admits in a frank tone. "Lies a lot to my Okasan, who passes them on to me." Then adds, "I... never mentioned him because, well, it involves a lot of heavy, kind of family history stuff."

"It started due to the actions of an ancestor of mine and, well, it seems Otosan decided to involve himself in that dark world and might be planning on dragging me into it without caring for my opinion on the matter." The Sky admits with a sigh, leaning back in the bed. "I won't allow him to make that decision for me, he maybe have sired me but he's long since given up his rights as a father when he doesn't fulfill his duties as one. I only call him Otosan more out of habit but, since his visit, I really don't want to call him that." He's looking up at the ceiling, glaring up at it, although he doesn't really see the ceiling, no, in his mind he sees the man who married his Okasan and pretty much abandoned her to raise him on her own, only sending money to support them, as if it could fill the void in his Okasan's life that his absence leaves unfulfilled.

"How do you know any of this?" Shoichi asks and he blinks, turning to regard the two, having kind of forgotten they were in the room. "Oh, ah, a Flaw of mine. It's been there since phase one, I should see if it received an update..."

"Your Otosan is a Flaw?" Haru asks with a hint of disbelief and he sighs. "He's listed under the Flaw, there's a lot of names listed under it plus some summaries as to why."

"Are all of them names of people?" Shoichi asks curiously and he presses his lips before shaking his head. "No, some of them seem to be whole Mafia Families."

"Mafia? Not Yakuza?" Haru asks, eyes wide, clearly disbelief in her gaze.

"Yea... that ancestor of mine? He kind of founded a vigilante group that transformed into a Mafia Family after he gave up the leadership position." Tsuna admits. "I'm not sure why he picked Japan to immigrate too but he did. I mean, he was an Italian, why comes all the way east to a land that didn't even like the teaching of the church?"

"Any idea of what year he did so?" Shoichi asks and he tells the pair the date of when Giotto had given up claim to the group, he's pretty sure the man would have made it to Japan within a year of doing so. Which causes them both to get looks of understand as to what he meant by that.

"So... Mafia, huh?" The Sun repeats and he nods. "Yea... My Otosan seems to have a talent for pissing people off." He admits.

It's not that surprising that silence over take them, after all, it's likely because of Otosan that this kidnapping even happened. Minutes pass and then, he hears someone knocking near the door, looking he finds Takeshi and it's soon that Haru is calling out a greeting to the other, who returns it. Shoichi seems to curl in on himself slightly but he gives the younger boy a reassuring smile, which Shoichi returns, relaxing. "Hey Sawada-kun."

"Yamamoto-kun. This is Irie Shoichi, we meet through the Beta. Shoichi-kun, this is Yamamoto Takeshi, he attends the same school I do." He introduces the red haired Sun, who says, "Hello, nice to meet you, Yamamoto-san."

"Tsuna-kun talked about the Beta? Haru thought we agreed not to mention it!" She huffs and he counters, "Well, Shoichi-kun told his family and some online friends, so why not tell our other friends about it?"

"You didn't want to tell me about this, Haru?" Takeshi asks in a slightly wounded tone while Haru flushes, answering, "Haru didn't want to make Takeshi-kun jealous of Haru and of Tsuna-kun for not being included."

"Huh, well, that's a fair point." He can tell that it seems that Takeshi seems to relax and some of the hurt that had settled upon his face leaves the other ten year old. "I mean, a lot of kids would get jealous for getting paid to play a game."

"Tsuna-kun!" Haru whines and he chuckles a bit. "You even told him about that?"

"I told him it's a massive multiple player role playing game and I promised to share the name of the game once they announce that its in production." He admits and Haru seems to nod, it seems that at least he didn't spill all the beans as it were.

"So, Irie-kun, how long have you known Haru and Sawada-kun?" Takeshi asks the younger boy while Haru seems to be giving him a certain look that promised a long talking too. "Oh, not very long, I mean, I did meet Haru at a book store earlier in the break. It was Tsuna-kun's idea to track me down after the latest feature of the game got unlocked and they arrived at my house. We exchanged information and they've helped me test out a feature of the game I didn't feel comfortable doing on my own."

"Tsuna-kun's also been ensuring Shoichi-kun eats regularly." Haru pipes in and he's pretty sure that both Shoichi and himself duck their respective heads, he can feel his face heat up. "It's why Tsuna-kun has started to learn to cook before his mother left on that vacation."

"I was doing ok." Shoichi weakly defends himself while Haru pins the younger boy with a look. "Shoichi-kun skipped meals or didn't eat all his food, Shoichi-kun also tended to stay awake two nights straight."

"I am still alive." The Sun points out, again it's a weak defense. "Shoichi-kun is looking much healthier because of Tsuna-kun's efforts." Haru states and he is rather embarrassed at the fact he's kind of acting like Shoichi's older brother or in some way like the Sun's mother.

"So... Irie-kun is like having a younger brother, Sawada-kun?" Takeshi muses and he blinks, looking over at Takeshi, being reminded that the other boy is still in the room, visiting him. "I guess so? I mean, he's not related to me but I do feel responsible for him..." He admits and he feels Shoichi looking at him, there's surprise but it's also clear that the response seems to please the Sun. "He never seemed to mind my treatment of him." He admits and he notices that Shoichi's face goes slightly red, likely from embarrassment.

Yes, he has come to care about Shoichi and their relationship is different then the one he shares with Haru. After all, why else would he take it on himself to ensure that the Sun actually eats regularly? One would also wonder why Shoichi even allowed himself to be treated like that, after all, Tsuna had been a stranger just a few days before that point, there's no reason why Shoichi should listen to him concerning the importance of meals or accepting what food he brought. Haru must have rubbed off on me. He concludes.

The topic changes to minor things, like Haru chatting about this new show, Shoichi bringing up a few articles relating to programming language, and Takeshi relating rumors going on at school plus that Hibari being a touch more violent. There's not much news for him to share and after an hour, the others realize they best head off as they do have to have supper. Feeling a touch tired, he decides to nap for a bit.

/ [- | T | -] **

"Ah... Hibari-san? Why did you follow me inside?" And why do you have a pack? He asks the Cloud. It's been three days since that kidnapping event and the hospital kept him for so long as they had tried to reach his Okasan.

When the nurse mentioned that, he ended up having to explain that she's gone and won't be returning until the beginnings of October. It took the staff an hour to find out he told them the truth, yet, they didn't want to send him out without some escort. Which, it seems, to be where the Cloud of Namimori came into play.

"Fluffy Animal should not be left alone." The other states in a flat tone. He opens his mouth before thinking better of it, leading Hibari up the stairs.

"This is our guest room." He says as he moves in just enough to flick on the light switch before moving out of it, allowing the preteen to enter the room. "I best check on the kitchen as I might need to make a grocery run."

Hibari grunts an acknowledgement and so, he walks down the hall and down the stairs, running a hand through his hair, not sure what to make of this. After all, it's not like it's going to happen again, right? But, if it makes him feel better... It's just for a week or two, right? He tells himself.

Entering the kitchen, he winces at the mess, it's clear that whoever those kidnappers had been, they went through the cupboards, destroying things for entertainment. It's clear that he doesn't even need to go through the fridge as the contents is also about the kitchen, which causes it all to smell rather ripe. A pair of Quests get created in regards to cleaning up the kitchen and going out for groceries, with a sigh, he heads for the cleaning supplies that were untouched.

As he never cleaned up such messes before, he's isn't sure where to start and he switches between tasks, likely in a clumsy manner. He spotted Hibari at the door once, watching him for a bit before the Cloud moves off, although a Quest concerning the grocery run gets an update. Huffing slightly, he's lucky it's the afternoon so he'll have a chance to head off to buy groceries before supper. It's slow progress yet, as he cleans up certain messes, his cleaning Quest gets update. Once he's put the cleaning supplies, the Quest does an update before awarding him his Rewards that he earned.

Taking a moment to wash his hands, he takes a moment to stare at himself in the mirror. "Open Status Page." With ease, he moves to his Flaws and Merits, staring at his Otosan's name, there's no Minor by the name but there's no Major either. The reason for the upgrade? The man felt Threatened by him during his stay and, well, it's not something that he can take back. Tsuna wonders if it'll go down after a period of time, he hopes so, he's not ready to confront either him or the Vongola Famiglia yet, or, likely, ever but it's foolish of him to think he can avoid that conformation. At this point, he'd almost do anything to escape their radar, well, theirs and the other Mafia Families.

Letting the Status Page fade, he walks away from the sink and mirror, drying himself with a towel. Leaving the small washroom, he heads for the living room. "Hibari-san, do you have any requests concerning groceries?" He already suspects that the preteen does but he's not suppose to know that for sure.

"Door." He heads for the door to find a list and reads it. Another Quest gets created concerning making Hibari's request which means he'll have to look it up on the computer. "Do you want the spare key? There should be one in the end table's top drawer." Nodding towards the end table that's sporting an empty vase.

Hibari gives a slight incline of his head. "I'm off to get some groceries, I'll be sure to get what you asked for." He tells the Cloud and so, he switches footwear plus making sure he's got his wallet with him, thankfully, he did put it into his current pant's pocket upon getting his school uniform back along with some spare clean cloths that Takeshi brought for him when the other had come to visit him the next day as he had been ready to be released by then.

The Sky leaves, being sure to lock the door behind him as the Cloud of Namimori won't have trouble unlocking it when he decides to leave. Pocketing the key, he jogs off to the market, it'll take him longer to get there then taking a bus but he kind of wanted to keep in shape, particularly given that he hadn't been able to prevent his own kidnapping. Grinding his teeth at the thought of how he froze up just because it had been other human beings doing the attacking...

Never again! I know I could have done better, I should have done better. I can't afford to freeze up like that, not if I want to keep out of being dragged into the Mafia Underworld. Into Giotto's mistake. He tells himself, his hands balling into fists for a few seconds.

It takes a bit but he manages to relax his jaw and his fists, he barely acknowledges the Quests that got created, after all, he's grown use to them getting created based on his desires and what's happening in his life. He'll go through his list of Quests later, but for now, he's just doing his grocery run and then he's to prepare supper for not just himself but for Hibari, a test of his ability to cook something other then soup or using pre-prepared packaged ingredients. After all, cooking steak should be within his ability, right? Likely but it's a question if he's able to cook it to Hibari's satisfaction and he's gets the feeling that the Cloud is very particular when it comes to his hamburger steak.

To be continued . . .

Shifting Between Illusion and Reality P4

I don't own Kateyo Hitman Reborn!

It's the beginning of the latest school year and he's thirteen yet, Tsuna can't help but feel... It's something he can't really use words to describe the... well, closest words he finds work is wondrous dread. It's likely that his friends and close schoolmates have also sense it or maybe they are taking their ques from him?

Either way, Haru and Shoichi make it a point to text him during lunch and after school, even being sure to hang out with him on the weekend when they can or inviting him over. It's nice of them and he's so glad to get out of the house and away from his mother, he's not sure when he's stopped using Okasan in reference to her but he's pretty sure it was around the time Takeshi's mom died in a traffic accident, back when he was ten years old. He's not sure what caused their relationship to sour only it seems that it's clear his mother hasn't noticed anything different between them, then again, she still tended to refer to him as Dame-Tsuna even though nobody uses that old, hurtful nickname these days.

"Hey, you alright, Sawada-kun?" Takeshi asks upon putting a comforting hand upon his left shoulder. The slightly older teen's eyes covey worry and he sighs.

"Just... that feeling of something coming, Yamamoto-kun." He admits as he gives the baseball player a slight smile. "I don't know why but... I really dread whatever it is." It feels like I've forgotten something too.

"Well, come on, I'll walk you home." Takeshi declares and he does his best to protest by saying, "No, you don't need to, Yamomoto-kun! Really, it's not like it's going to happen today!"

"I mean, won't there be a pick up game happening after school?" He adds as he glances towards the slightly taller boy. "There was one last year I recall."

"I can always come back to join in." Takeshi states while the hand upon his shoulder leaves. He sighs but comes up with a compromise, "I could just hang out to watch, it's not like I have much to do as we don't get homework."

"You know, you could join in." Takeshi points out and he gives a slightly flat look at him. "Ok, yea, they... it's rather odd... And yea, Hibari-kun did pretty much send most of them to the hospital huh?"

"Yea." He admits with a soft sigh while running a hand through his brunette hair, it's an incident that he really didn't want to be reminded of. Kyoya seems to have decided that Tsuna is in need of a bodyguard and then self appointed himself in said role.

"I have my phone so I can send Haru some recordings of you playing." The teenage Sky remarks and Takeshi just beams, he's not sure if Takeshi returns the crush Haru has on the other boy but it's clear that Takeshi does seem honestly fond of Haru for who Haru is and doesn't mind her brash, forward manners, or habit of speaking in the third person, even though she's more then capable of not doing so, although he kind of can't think of any examples of times she hadn't spoken in the third person...

A slight headache forms but it fades as he dismisses the thought. "Ok!" Takeshi states. "And we'll stop by my dad's restaurant for supper before I walk you home."

Tsuna smiles at how up beat Takeshi is and wonders, once again, if his life would have turned out if Haru hadn't decided to befriend him all those years ago and help him break out of his shell.

/ [- | T | -] **

He's jogging to school after a very unsettling morning featuring a self proclaimed hitman in the form of a toddler, a shape shifting chameleon, and him supposedly being the next Don of... Tsuna's jaws clinch at the thought of his many times grandfather's mistake and feels a fire flare up within him at the thought they could just waltz into his life and make DEMANDS of HIM! That they had the RIGHT to DECIDE his FUTURE for HIM!

Their Ruin, always going to be their Death, All will curse Vongola for their PRIDEFUL ARROGANCE... Its an Oath of the Ending of a Mistake that was sworn at some point in the past, a Promise of Stay Free that sings within his blood, his bones... In his very SOUL. He'd burn the Mafia world to its foundation then inherit the Vongola Famiglia, his only acceptable role in that underground world will be that of its Destroyer not one of its Gatekeepers, a Staff Member, or that of a fellow Inmate.

"Sawada-kun!" Kyoko calls out in greeting and he is pulled from his thoughts to notice said classmate, who's without Hana it seems, so he slows. "Sasagawa-chan." He greets in return as he comes to a stop near her.

"Eager to get to school?" Kyoko asks and he chuckles slightly, replying, "I... didn't have the best morning so far."

"So I was just trying to calm my temper by jogging." He adds with a slight frown as he glances towards the school gate. Might need to speak with Kyoya about this too. He realizes, after all, keeping this morning's turn of events from the Prefect, he's pretty sure there's a different word he should be using in regards with Hibari Kyoya.

Kyoko's eyes take a few seconds to study him for a few seconds before changing the subject towards their homework, they are walking towards school together. As the topic of their respective homework comes to an end, silence descends and as they get within sight of the gate, Hana is arguing with Mochida, who's still one of the few members of the student body who continue to stubbornly bully him and who's been harassing Kyoko, trying to get her to go out with him. Glancing around, he lets out a slight sigh that Kyoya isn't perched on the gate today, making sure he arrives on time.

"See you in class, Sasagawa-chan." He says as he moves to slip off to the right before Mochida spies him walking with Kyoko. Kyoko gives him a smile and nod, understanding clear in her eyes as to why he's trying to slip by without the older teen noticing him.

Well, it would have gone as plan if not for something impacting his head and all of a sudden he feels his headgear Activate due to Sun Flame. Then there's memories that filled in so many odd points of his life as well as why he even has that bank account, which had nothing to do with that sperm donor like his mother told him when he asked. But he also begins to feel the headgear begin to power down and it is also trying to dull his memories of said game.

And so, he uses his first Flame Skill to bypass the shut down order, refusing to Forget about the times he's spent killing Monsters with Haru, about helping Shoichi unlock his Class, and of that kidnapping attempt that seems to be one of the reasons why Kyoya has every right to be protective of him. He's not sure when but he feels his emotions seem to get pushed aside while he finds himself more then capable of Focusing on Harmonizing with the headgear to keep it from blanketing his mind.

He feels Kyoya come running while Takeshi seems to be jogging over. In the end, his Quest to keep his headgear active is successful and the last of that Sun Flame dies, which brings him out of his tunnel vision. He's dizzy and it's Kyoko who moves to steady him while he feels exhaustion creeping up on him along with the feeling of his stomach flip flopping. It's about then that he realizes that people were talking but as he tries to listen in, he winces at how his hearing is ringing and he finds it kind of hard to pick up the words let alone the voice.

Someone places a hand on his forehead and is quick to move it. Feeling Kyoya getting close and Takeshi pretty much behind him, he sighs and lets himself fall asleep, trusting that between Kyoya and Takeshi, he'll be Safe.

+ \ _ | V | _ / +

Reborn can't help but stare at the literal Crown of Sky Flames that burns brightly the moment his bullet slams into his current project's head. He's already mentally cursing the External Adviser for the lack of information concerning this development, for clearly, some Famiglia has already made a move on the boy and now he's going to have more work to do, particularly when it comes to checking the boy for sleeper triggers. Which means rearranging his plans by bringing in Shamal earlier then expected.

He notices the potential Rain Guardian jogging through the school gate and is moving to stand behind the boy while the latent Cloud, who he marked down as a potential Cloud Guardian, comes running. It seems that both were already in the process of Harmonizing with the boy, which means that there's no Seal on the boy, which means another part of the information packet is wrong. Returning to study the young Sky, he notices the brightly burning orange flame that's hovering in a ball of flames before the boy's forehead, the size of which seems to be the size of the boy's fist. The Crown's light seem to have dimmed at some point, he also notices that there's light coming near the back of the collar of the uniform.

Then the Crown's orange points of light flare up and burn the same shade of orange as the ball of Sky Flame that's been hovering before the forehead. Then the Crown's light dies and checking his watch, he notices that his bullet's effect is about to end and the ball of Sky Flame fades. The girl that the boy walked to school with moves to catch the boy, who seems to be dazed from the effects of the bullet, the Activation of the Crown, and entering into some type of Hyper Mode. He watches as the boy sags and then falls unconscious by the time the latent Cloud gets within a couple of feet, the latent Rain is sure to help catch the boy as the girl likely couldn't manage the boy's weight on her own.

The latent Cloud is glaring about the area, there's an almost purple glow in the teen's eyes and he sighs as it looks like the teen is struggling between becoming Active and staying latent. The young Cloud's mood causing most of the students near him to become rather nervous. It's clear that he's going to have to tread carefully in regards to the Cloud sporting a clear family resemblance to Fon as it seems that something seems to have happened in the past to cause the Cloud to become so protective of the boy, so much so that upon sensing something was wrong, the Cloud came running and from quite the distance it seems, from the other side of the school.

The Cloud regains semblance of control over himself before following after where the two girls and the latent Rain, likely taking the boy to the nurse's office.

+ \ _ | V | _ / +

So cool... He'd been in awe at the sight of the orange ball of fire hovering before Tsuna's forehead and then the soft orange glow of various pin points about Tsuna's head, kind of creating a crown in a way. The sight of the orange fire, it stirs something in him and he feels a fierce sort of pride/connection about and with Tsuna.

Moving to stand behind Tsuna, he got a good look of the fact that there's a small line of orange lights moving from the back of the head and down about five dots the neck, both sides of the seven are a glow. He itches to reach out to touch and trace the seven glowing dots. A part of him though is enraged upon hearing Kyoko and Hana mention a bullet impacting Tsuna's head, it means someone wanted his classmate and semi-friend dead. The two are clearly freaked out by the fact that someone just tried to kill Tsuna and they don't understand how it is that Tsuna is still alive.

He wonders if the two notice the orange fire only to notice the looks Hana keeps giving Kyoko when she pays the orange ball of fire a little too much attention. Which means that yes, they can see it but Hana is the reason why it's not mentioned. Then again, given the looks the current Captain of the Kendo Club, Mochida Kensuke, receives from some of the other students, he assumes that Mochida can see the orange fire too but most of the students don't. Thus most seem to think him crazy.

It's the arrival of Kyoya that seems to be a signal of some kind as Tsuna seems to faint or something, he's quick to help Kyoko keep the slightly shorter boy from falling to the ground. A quick check and he is smiles softly, Tsuna's merely sleeping and perhaps that's normal, after all, the fuel of the orange fire had to come from somewhere, right? So, they decide to take him to the nurse's office, with Hana being the one to open the various doors as Kyoko seems to refuse to let go of Tsuna, clearly at a lost as to what's going on and using Tsuna as some sort of anchor.

"Explain." Hibari-senpai states once they settle Tsuna on one of the beds. Hana stays between Hibari-senpai and Kyoko.

"Well, from what I gather, a bullet hit Sawada-kun in the head only it doesn't kill him." He tells the Prefect, he recalls how Haru told him that Hibari-senpai is the Cloud of Namimori, even though the teen doesn't seem to fit his thought of what a Cloud is, white, fluffy, and easily pushed around. "It caused something to happen, I arrived to spy an orange ball of fire hovering before his forehead while there's these pin points of orange light glowing under Sawada-kun's head, kind of reminded me of a crown."

The two girls glance at him before looking at Hibari-senpai and realize that Hibari-senpai isn't calling either of them out on it, just glaring off out of the window. A fist tighten about one of Hibari-senpai's favorite weapon, a metal tonfa. "His eyes were also orange." Kyoko admits softly and Hibari-senpai nods in acceptance.

Then Hibari-senpai turns to study him and Takeshi stills, no smile on his face and he allows himself to display his own feelings about this attack on Tsuna. After a minute, it seems that Hibari-senpai decided he passed his test and turns to look at the two girls, "Go to class."

"Guard him." The Prefect states to him and then the older teen prowls out of the room. It's clear that Hibari-senpai is going to hunt down the gunman.

"Shouldn't we be phoning the police? Or his mother?" Hana wonders.

"You should text Haru, she'll want to know about this." He tells them, not wanting to talk about the likely uncaring reaction of one Sawada Nana. If not for talking with Haru and Shoichi or noticing Tsuna's interactions with her, he'd assume that Sawada-san is a loving mother and that it's just a phase Tsuna is going through in regards to the strain relationship with her. "What kind of mother doesn't even remember her own son's Birthday?" He recalls Haru remarking back when they decided to take Tsuna out for his eleventh Birthday, which was a supper and then a movie.

"Right." Hana decides after a few seconds to studying him and gently pulls on Kyoko's other hand. "We best go or we'll risk being Bitten to Death by a certain bird monkey, Kyoko-chan."

"I'll make sure nothing happens." Takeshi promises and after a few torn seconds, Kyoko nods before getting up and walking after Hana, leaving him alone with Tsuna. With them gone, he does keep his hands from moving to touch the memorized spots where the orange glows had been coming from for about... two minutes.

It doesn't take him long to home in on the correct spots, after all, he can't help but notice a slight change within him upon getting close to the spot nor how there's this draw to the center point. And yes, there's a slight hardness under the center spot, one that isn't bone and it's temperature is above Tsuna's normal temperature. He muses over his memories concerning the three Beta Testers and wonders if this might have something to do with why none of the trio recall the game they'd been playing and the glazed looks the few times he brought up the game.

If these implants were for the game then it must be one advance game as it interfaces the player's brain directly. Which the game company might want to keep secret about and thus, might have done something to ensure that those Beta Testers can't talk about it now that the players aren't part of the Beta any more. It's a thought but what does this now mean for Tsuna, though? After all, what was up with that orange fire?

While he's not the smartest when it comes to book learning, he is good when it comes to reading people and could tell that this fire wasn't that shocking to Hibari-senpai, nope, it was something about why it occurred due to a bullet and about these implants. So the fire is expected but the bullet and crown weren't? He muses to himself as he moves his hand to the back of Tsuna's head and finds that the implants that fascinated him seem to be in the spine starting from the back of the head and goes down slight towards the neck.

Tsuna sighs slightly as his finger moves down and up the seven spinal implants, clearly relaxing even more while also clearly going deeper to sleep while it feels like something is pulling on something within him. He can't help but smile fondly at the brunette as he continues doing this for a bit, who he really needs to have a talk with concerning their relationship as they've known each other for some years now and he would like for them to use each other's first names. After all, they're friends, right? Right!

+ \ _ | V | _ / +

Sawada Tsunayoshi, nicknamed Tsuna, who he regards as Small Animal or Fluffy Animal, is a Sky. Kyoya has known this since that kidnapping when the brunette's eyes displayed a clear orange while struggling against the drugs meant to keep the child unconscious. The two assassins and the former assassin turned sushi chief had been more then pissed at the lack of security around the Sawada Household, particularly as one Sawada Iemitsu, who he has never met and will be Bitten to Death upon such a meeting, squirreled the Small Animal's mother out of Namimori for a vacation, disregarding the Small Animal's need for a support structure or gave thought to leaving any sort of protection. The two assassins also seem to be rather bemused at the Small Animal's thanks in regards for saving him but he would have rather bundled the Small Animal off into the car and way to the hospital to be checked over.

It had been Yamamoto Tsuyoshi, a retired Carnivore, who explained the importance of the color orange in regards to the Dying Will Flames to him. Of the role it plays in helping to stabilize those in possession of the other colors and what those colors can do along as the usual personality traits, of which he is likely to call upon the purple fire, which are termed Cloud Flames, given how he has claimed Namimori as HIS. Which means that the Small Animal, who is a Sky, was part of Namimori, which made the Sky HIS as well and so, he set out to ensure the protection of the Sky, who did have a support network, small and made up of young animals as well but were also in need of their own family's support as well, so he decided to take up residence within the Sawada Household.

He had not been overly impressed when the mother returned, far later then was promised and with little to no care about having left Small Animal alone in the house. Yes, Small Animal turned out to know a few things about taking care of the house and cooking, most experience seems to be of stew and soup, but he was quick to learn that the mother nor the so called father left a card behind for the Small Animal to use, thus he grew suspicious about where the money was coming from only to learn that the Small Animal plus two of his network earned money Beta Playing a game. While not pleased, Kyoya admitted that it was good experience for later in life when the Small Animal would be old enough to leave the mother behind, so he made sure to chip in with the grocery bill from then on as he wasn't going to rely on the Small Animal to buy him food.

Few things happened since then in regards to the mother or the absent father beyond ensuring the herbivores knew to leave the Small Animal alone, although some still haven't learnt the lesson and he's been slowly working on the problem of the herbivore teachers. There had been a few threats that made their way into Namimori but the fake-baby assassin tipped him off while charging Iemitsu for the information so he's dealt with them and got tips from retired Carnivore about how to deal with the bodies. Everything seemed to be going well, but then he noticed the worry that the small network displayed, taking ques from Small Animal as it seems that the Sky sensed something coming, coming for him and now it seems, it's here and the fake-baby assassin clearly didn't know about this.

"Hibari-san." The fake-baby states. "Small Animal was fired upon and the bullet did something." He states in turn.

"Did it cause the cloths to burn off and the hair to turn into fire?" Asks the fake-baby and he takes a second to blink before replying, "Crown of Sky Flames and then a fist size ball of Sky Flames hovering before the forehead, orange eyes."

There's silence on the other end and it's becoming clear that this Crown of Sky Flames was new. "No cloths burning off? No bellow of doing something with 'My Dying Will'?"

"Felt it happen." He admits, he'd been running before he even realized something was Wrong. "Didn't say a word, not even before collapsing in exhaustion."

"The bullet sounds like Reborn while the aftereffects don't sound right." The fake-baby assassin states. "Beware of strange behavior."

With that, the call ends and he scowls, but at least he has a name for who would shoot Small Animal. That's a start.

+ \ _ | V | _ / +

It's hunger that really causes him to wake, otherwise, he'd be content to remain in his semi-sleeping state. Groaning slightly he opens his eyes to find a number of messages waiting for him and blinks his eyes a few times, it takes him a few seconds to realize that while he did manage to keep the headgear from making him Forget it seems that he's caused some of the basic functions to remain active. The first few had to do with Quest alerts and informing him of the fact that he developed a new Flame Skill in regards to Rain Flame use, which is strange as he doesn't recall anyone he know a player who sports that Flame.

"Sawada-kun? We need to talk." He blinks and turns to look to find Takeshi sitting in a chair.

"Uh? Sure?" He finds his mouth dry and wouldn't mind something to drink before realizing that Takeshi sports a pretty serious look in his eyes and there's no upturning of the other's lips. "Is everything ok?" He asks with worry coloring his tone.

"For now, but, well, I've been meaning to bring this up for some time now..." And Takeshi takes a deep breath, likely trying to calm his nerves while he moves to sit up on the bed, totally focus on the baseball player. "I think we're friends, we've been friends for at least two years now and I think it's time we start calling one another by our first names."

"Oh." He can't help but find himself rather stunned and a tad embarrassed. "I... I just... I mean, yea, I was hoping we were but, well... Haru was the one to... And then with Shoichi, it was like gaining a little brother? I kind of didn't know if we..." He tries to explain himself and it looks like Takeshi gets the gist of it.

"We're friends and I want you to call me Takeshi." The slightly taller teen states and he nods, replying in kind, "Tsunayoshi, though, I don't mind being called Tsuna." There's this sense of relief now and it feels like tension has lifted from between them.

"So, head implants?" Takeshi inquires and he blinks, looking confused. "They lit up like an orange crown."

"They did? Really?" Tsuna asks and Takeshi nods, adding, "Then there was this fist size ball of orange fire hovering before your forehead. Oh yea, orange eyes too."

"A ball of..." He's at a loss as he's never hear of Haru or Shoichi remarking on him causing something like that before. "Huh, the orange eyes are something that only other Beta Testers notice." He admits. "Not sure about the other stuff, neither Haru or Shoichi mentioned me ever calling up a fist size ball of Sky Flame and have it stationary like that."

"Oh, you remember now! That's great!" Takeshi remarks and he recalls a few attempts by the other bringing up the Beta Testing, how it just...

"I guess it was a security feature?" Takeshi muses and he hums, replying, "Likely, I mean, I kind of wondered about the reason Haru approached me that day... It makes more sense now."

"Is it going to..." Takeshi asks and he sighs. "I hacked it, I am not sure if that alerted anyone to its Activation or to its continued activity but, I should get a warning if they try to turn it off again so I can at least try to counter it."

"You hacked it. How? I mean, you didn't even involve your cell phone!" The other teen remarks and he shifts his weight as his eyebrows furl as he ponders the question.

"Maybe that's what the Ball of Sky Flame was for? I mean, usual when I use my Harmony like that, I usual have a hand on it or on what I'm channeling the Skill through? The implants are already touching my skin so I just needed to call on my Flame to hack it?" He reasons out and then sighs, "Sorry, this must seem pretty out there, people being able to conjure fire out of no where and for it to not burn the user."

Takeshi chuckles, waving a hand in dismissal. "I'm the one to ask and you answered, at least you seem to know what was going on. So that's something, right?" The other asks and he sighs before his stomach makes its demand for food. Placing a hand over the area, he looks rather embarrassed but also knows that he's going to be eating a great deal more from here on out with the implants up and running off of his own Flame.

"It's about an hour to lunch." Takeshi remarks and he admits, "I will need to eat more now that the implants are active and that I'm going to be using my Sky Flame too." And I'm unsure if I'll be getting money deposited into my account from Quests.

"Ah, I guess the energy has to come from somewhere." Takeshi remarks and his stomach rumbles within seconds of that statement. "Here." Takeshi pulls up his book bag and he brings out the Bento Box that his mother packed.

The usual word spoken and he digs into the food. As the edge of his hunger tapers off, he turns to regard Takeshi, asking, "How come you aren't in class, Takeshi?" He's awarded with a wide grin upon the use of the other's name which he feels his face heat up upon receiving.

"Hibari-senpai's order was for me to guard you, Tsuna." There's a warmth hearing Takeshi say his shorten name before he blinks as he considers that. "Oh... Ah, any idea what started the whole..." He doesn't know if there's a word to ultimately describe what occurred.

"A bullet." Takeshi states and he'll admit, he's confused. "Shouldn't I be dead if that's the case?" There's something dark and foreboding lurking in Takeshi's eyes. "You should be." The other agrees and there's no smile upon Takeshi's face, he can tell that the other teen, he's brooding now.

Not wanting to derail Takeshi from his thoughts just yet, he looks down at his Bento and continues to eat, his own mind recalling the hitman from this morning and he can feel his Sky Flame prickle at the thought of him Inheriting that Mistake of his Ancestor. Willing his Status Page to appear, he mentally goes to the Flame Tab and stares at the Oath he made using his Sky Flame before mentally heading to the Flaws and Merits, there's an update concerning Sawada Iemitsu and it merely mentions said man as his sperm donor and his mother is now listed as Enemy Support before bringing up the Quests, reading the details of the Quest that's entitled, Burn it to the Ground, Prolong.

Shouldn't be that hard to reactivate Shoichi's and he'll be able to help reactivate Haru's. He mentally notes. Although he'll have to wait until this weekend as they might need to rest afterwards from having them reactivate.

"What are you planning?" Takeshi asks once he finishes his Bento. "To reactivate Haru and Shoichi's implants, I'll have to do Shoichi's first as he possesses a Sun Flame and thus we should be able to do Haru's easier between us."

"Sun Flame?" Takeshi asks and he begins to explain about the Flames of the Sky from the game, although they likely have a different name among the Underworld, to the other teen. It's clear that Takeshi is absorbing this information and asks a few questions about a few things like could Flames do the reverse of their attribute and could two Flame Users work together without any Sky Flames helping to meld the two together.

It's a few minutes until lunch when Kyoya arrives, he is a touch surprise to find he felt the Cloud as Kyoya drew near. The door opens and Kyoya takes a moment to study him, clearly searching for something for a few seconds before marching over. "Mafia."

"Fake-baby with a yellow stone shaped like a pacifier showed up and, well, I refused but the so called hitman didn't seem interested in my opinion." He admits. "I was planning on looking for you, to tell you."

"Mafia?" Takeshi inquires and he sighs, "Ancestor of mine founded this group that devolved into a member of the criminal underbelly and instead of doing the smart thing and burn it to the ground, left meekly and came to Japan to hide from his mistake and shame."

"Sperm donor learnt about his relationship to the founder of the group before it became a Famiglia and decided he wanted to be part of it. He's pretty much married to the job and only married my mother because he was expected to have an 'heir'." He continues. "The Ninth Don and the donor visited the house back when I was almost five, I went Flame Active but instead of seeing it as a way to bind me into the Famiglia, they pretty much fucked their whole stance on Sky's been a Blessing and Sealed me, which screwed me up and the damage would only grow worse the longer I was Seal."

Kyoya's eyes are now blazing purple which means that the Cloud is now Active while it looks like Takeshi doesn't fully grasp what kind of damage he could be talking about. "Seven years old and I was picked to Beta Test something, the implants in my head? They Unsealed me and a bit later, I unlocked the game's Status Page, which has a list of Flaws and Merits, which lists Sawada Iemitus as an Enemy and gave me my history lesson along with where the Seal came from. Same goes for the Ninth plus the Vongola Famiglia. I never wanted to inherit that Mistake, so when I learn how to do it, I went so far as to swear an actual a Flame Oath to that effect and if I fail to follow through by accepting the Heirship, I will die as my own Flame will burn me from the inside out." He states. "I rather be dead then a fucking, kami forsaken Mafioso Don."

Takeshi looks alarmed while Kyoya just seems to go still for a few seconds before Cloud Flames begin to flare up, he's not sure what language that is but by the tone alone, it's clear that Kyoya IS NOT PLEASED. "But, didn't this ancestor start out making this group into a crime organization?" Takeshi asks and he's more then a little relieved to be able to look away from the enraged Cloud.

"Ah, no, he was more into going around and killing nobility he thought were abusing their privileges and positions. Kind of enforcing his out look of right and wrong on the masses." He admits. "The group only became a crime family under the Second, which means that the Second's bloodline is the actual Famiglia heirs and as long as the Second's blood exists in some form, my ansestor's bloodline doesn't have an actual claim to the Donship of the Famiglia. If it remained that vigilante group, then yea, I would but it isn't and hasn't been that kind of group for generations now nor can it really go back to that way as it's long since carved its place in the Mafia Underworld."

Something he must have said seems to still Kyoya as the other now sports a thoughtful and yet very bloodthirsty smile. "You put a lot of effort into learning all of this, huh, Tsuna?" Takeshi asks and he turns to look at Takeshi. "Well, yea, I mean, I wanted to be sure I had my bases covered and given human nature, plenty of Dons likely had daughters that they married off or had bastards who went on have their own families or their own bastards. It's just them needing to crack open their record books and, you know, do some actual research. Odds are, there's got to be at least two Mafioso with the right blood who would jump at the chance to take the position, who would already have the proper mindset too."

Kyoya walks out of the room without a single word and both Takeshi and himself share a look. "So... been wanting to rant and rave about that for sometime, huh?" Takeshi asks and his face heats up, ducking his head. "It's not like I haven't told Haru or Shoichi but at the same time, we figured they weren't that stupid as to go for the civilian child then someone who's already part of said world."

"Shoichi even helped me word the Oath, so either they select someone who's of the Second's blood for Donship or they press the matter with me and... Well, I'm not looking to die, Takeshi and as I said, Giotto should have done the right thing and destroyed it in its infancy then to the easy thing and let what he found become even more corrupt then it already had been."

"How was being a vigilante corrupt?" Takeshi asks and he gives the other a slightly sad smile. "It's no different then a tyrant enforcing their will on the people, a lot of those people who died? A lot of them had merely been paid to do their job to support their own families in the position of tax collecting, militia, and general staff. The group rarely just cut off the so call serpent's head and left it at that."

"Only difference was criminal groups did things like that for money while the vigilante group did it in the absolute belief they were in the Right and had the Duty to Punish those people." He admits. "The group tried to be for the peasantry, to aid them and protect them, not exploit them like the nobility had only, they ended up doing just that under the Second."

"I can only guess how entrench the Vongola Famiglia are in both sides of Italy's culture and I can only hope that someone among that Famiglia actually has common sense to see that having an unwilling heir to one of the most influential Famiglia isn't going to end well." He admits. "Cause what follows if they don't... It's not going to be pretty, not one bit." He looks out the window, his Sky Flame swirling within him as he recalls the sight of those actual dead people along with the smell... The sound of metal slicing into...

"With My Dying Will, I will burn the Mafia Underworld to ashes ." He whispers as he senses someone listening in and with a simple look, gets Takeshi to be quiet as well, after all, it wouldn't do for whoever get information.

He uses his cell phone to type in a text, We now have an eavesdropper listening in. Just type out a question on your phone, show me the screen just don't send it, ok? Takeshi blinks looks him in the eye before giving a slight smile.

It's not until midway into the afternoon classes that Kyoya seems to recall they were in the nurse's office and that both of them are well enough to attend classes that sees them leave the room. The eavesdropper follows them but, well, there's not much to listen to beyond classes and then Takeshi chatting about anything that comes to mind that doesn't involve Flames or the Mafia.

To be continued . . .

Shifting Between Illusion and Reality P5

I don't own Kateyo Hitman Reborn!

"Reborn, you know I don't treat males!" Whines the latest adult to be hired at the school while he sits on a bed, Takeshi is at the door. The teen followed him when Tsuna was to report to the nurse's office with a very weak lie that the teacher accepted, likely due to the Rain's athletic prowess.

It's clear that Reborn's patience is on a short fuse but then, he has made use of some of his own Flame Skills to minimize the fake-baby's antics, namely ensuring that the hitman only wakes just a few minutes after him along with using his Harmony to keep the fake-baby from getting a peaceful sleep while resting upon it. So many little things that keep the fake-baby from feeling comfortable in his room or in his presence. There's plenty of Quests generated daily that allow him to throw wenches into the plan concerning his 'training'.

So far, Reborn hasn't seen fit to really scout out Haru or Shoichi so those two are taking advantage of this oversight to get things done. It also seems that Shoichi located an online friend who's focus is on engineering, which lightens the Sun's load by a lot. Haru's been busy retraining her Lightning Skills as they've grown a touch rusty plus it's helping her with her temper plus helping with what she can with Shoichi's various projects. The source of the information is from the Quest getting updated as new options appear or are completed.

As for Kyoya, he's been busy learning how to properly use his two Flames, Cloud and Mist. The Lightning and Cloud have only had three spars to date but it's clear that Kyoya isn't happy with his own, personal progress, never mind that Haru's been semi-Active since she was seven and fully Active when she was ten. He'd like to spar with Kyoya, if only to figure out how rusty he is but with Reborn pretty much keeping him in sight as much as possible, he's only been able to work on a few of his non-lethal Flame Skills.

"I won't repeat myself, Trident." Reborn states in a very soft voice yet there's threat and danger in that tone, a promise of death as it's clear that the fake-baby's patience is gone. The strange chameleon is visible and waiting upon to turn into a gun.

Trident jerks his head back as though the fake-baby punched him or hit him in the face with a hammer of some sort. He watches the color drain and the Mafioso swallow hard, eyes wide while staring at the fake-baby as though seeing him for the first time. Then the adult dressed up as a doctor turns to regard him, eyes calculating and drawing conclusions about it. Tsuna finds he's not sure why he's here but at the same time, he's pretty sure that it's going to be a mix bag of good and bad.

"So... what can you tell me about your previous experiences with doctors?" The man, Trident, asks, approaching him and he raises a slight eyebrow. "Never had much reason to visit one before." He replies.

"No head injuries?" And he blinks as it dawns on him why they're there. He snorts and laugh, replying, "Got implants after being pick as a Beta Tester for a game back when I was seven. They recently reactivated about three weeks ago."

"Who'd installed something like that in a kid?!" There's a touch of actual concern and outrage from the man. "No surgery, they implanted themselves upon my putting on the helmet like device. Takeshi already pin pointed their location on my head." The Sky states and the two glance at the other teen, who is likely giving them both an empty yet easy going smile.

"What game?" The fake-baby growls out and he glances towards the hitman. "If you must know, it was for Mythical Flames of the Soul: Sky Edition." Oh yea, the two clearly look like they just ate a lemon slice.

"It's a pretty advance game, the first phase was just going through the bare bones of the game, namely giving rating concerning a person's stats, a Quest generation system, and Flaws and Merits." He continues. "I wasn't part of the second or third phase but fourth phase introduced Flame Skills, weapon rating system use, Monster Spawn Areas, Special Areas where we could create stuff from butchering dead Monsters or Harvesting the 'natural' resources, Leveling, and Avatars plus the usual kind of Stat Point System." He muses. "It's kind of depressing that it hasn't seen release yet, to be honest. I miss my Avatar."

"Just how many Beta Testers were there?" Asks Reborn in a very tightly controlled tone. "In Japan? Or Italy? Or just world wide?"

"World wide." The fake-baby states and he hums as he tries to recall the number Shoichi sprouted out once. "In total, I think it was a good million and unevenly spread out as some countries only had a few thousand, I wasn't paying it much mind, really. I was more interested in playing the game then knowing what's happening in the background."

Oh look, he's got a headache. He muses to himself as the fake-baby is now rubbing his temples while murmuring in not Japanese. "I think the company was called the Rainbow Ouroboros Circuit Games. I just remember Taiyang mentioning the symbolism of what an Ouroboros is." He volunteers before either asks, he's even using Shoichi's Avatar's name, which just means Sun in Chinese, well, according to Shoichi it does.

"You didn't think to just ask the kid, huh?" Trident shanks upon turning to talk with Shoichi, only for a bullet to gaze the adult's right cheek. Like I'd answer them until now. He mentally admits to himself.

Between giving actual answers verse whatever Reborn wanted Trident to do to him, he'd go with the answering of questions. "So... your the brat who's in line for the Vongola Famiglia." He rolls his eyes.

"I'm not interested and I won't be a Mafia Don." Tsuna states in a flat, matter of fact tone. "Just because the sperm donor decided to become a Mafioso doesn't make me one." A bullet gets fired in his direction which causes Takeshi to throw the nearest thing in range at Reborn.

It startles the maybe doctor while the fake-baby merely dodges the item, he gets the feeling the hitman approved of Takeshi's sentiment and action. Which makes the fake-baby something of a hypocrite about given how effective he's been in derailing the hitman's plans for him and not getting any approval for doing so. He can feel the icy anger within the other teen lingering over the likely chance that his reaction won't keep the fake-baby from firing a bullet in his direction again.

Moving off the bed, he walks over to where Takeshi is. "Well, seeing as you now solved the mystery of my implants, we best return to class." He says as he places a hand upon Takeshi's shoulder to calm him, he's not sure if it's the right thing to do, but it seems that it's the sentiment behind the action that the slightly taller teen allows himself to calm down. "Not sure if I will require your serves in the future but feel free to charge whatever you want to whatever account Reborn has access to about this consultation, Trident-san! Higher the better in my opinion!"

With that, they leave the nurse's office and he apologizes to Takeshi, "Sorry, I touched you without your permission but you Felt like you were ready to do something rash." The young Sky gives Takeshi a polite bow.

"Ah, you weren't wrong, Tsuna. And it's fine, I mean, I did trace those spine implants sometime ago." His friend reminds him. Tsuna sighs at the reminder of how he kind of 'pulled' on Takeshi's latent Rain Flame to fall into a deeper sleep.

"Let's just get to class before Hibari learns of this." The young Sky suggests with a sigh and the Rain chuckles with a slight nervous undertone, after all, Kyoya has been in a foul mood these pass few weeks and it's due to the targets he wants to 'Bite to Death' not being in Japan and unlikely to visit any time soon.

("I like him." Trident Shamal states in Italian the moment the two teens leave the office, leaving the two Mafioso alone together. Reborn just sighs and just Knowing he's not getting Paid enough to deal with Any of this Shit. "Of course you do. Of fucking course you do." The Sun Arcobaleno murmurs in English. Now, how to break the news to Timoteo that there's nearly a million Flame Users world wide, most of which are likely not involved in the Criminal Underworld? Never mind getting that moron Iemitsu to investigate this supposed game company.)

/ [- | T | -] **

"We'll settle things during lunch." And then the silver haired newly arrived student from Italy, who's likely a Mafioso, stalks out of the class, heading for gym class. Great, just... great.

Tsuna shakes his head and clears off his desk before following after. He's got no reason to show up upon reading the summary of the latest Quest beyond not showing causing Reborn to be displeased but, honestly, he's kind of making a go of keeping the fake-baby on a short fuse along with being sure to use his Sky Flame to ensure he comes out of those episodes unharmed and unbothered, which just sets the hitman off again quicker, thus the cycle continues on and on. Honestly, he's kind of waiting for the hitman to actually snap and attempt to kill him so they can fake his death as Spanner, that online friend of Shoichi, has managed to create a prototype Fabricator machine which has already been used it to create some bones based on his DNA.

The trick will be Harmonizing Reborn into following that plan, which Haru will aid with using her own Lightning to Harden the path of that plan within the fake-baby's mind. Yes, it means he'll have to shave off his hair and go through a few chemical baths with Shoichi using his Sun to help alter the body and head hair pigment along with skin tone along with a number of other little things needed to be done, like changing dental records, finger prints, figuring out if they could alter his current blood enough to give a false DNA ID, etc. Then again, faking his death is just one of the plans and only one they'll go through with if the hitman's mind is ever fully clouded over by the desire to kill him.

Have we brought Kyoya into discussing that plan? He suddenly wonders as he waits for his turn to play on the court. After all, the Cloud might not like having something like that sprung up on him let alone not given the chance to approve of said plan. So, I'll just have to talk with him in private about our various plans that we've been brewing up. He might not disagree with any of them but he likely won't agree with them either.

He ignores the drilling look coming from the silver haired teen, cause honestly? Tsuna doesn't really care about the issue the Mafioso has concerning him nor does he see any reason to involve himself with said teen as he's got other worries to focus on then needing to add to his collection. After all, he's pretty sure Kyoya's going to be rather offended by the lack of keeping him in the loop but the older teen doesn't like being around others or people talking a lot either and that's how they come up with their respective plans, by someone musing about a random thing and they nitpick it or add to it until something begins to take shape and it's likely a process that would drive Kyoya out of the room within minutes.

Kyoya likes to keep things straight and simple but, well, this is one situation where that leads to getting entangled up, trapped, and then caged. Once caged, it's where they then do their best to break you so they can mold your behavior to suit them. He mentally admits. Here, he's a big fish in a small pond, out there, he's just another mid size fish, nothing special. And he knows that Kyoya would like to disagree with that assessment but, well, the older teen is still getting miffed about Haru's win streak in their spars and it's really Kyoya's pride that's keeping him from asking for help in asking for tips of what he could do better at.

"Yo, they've been trying to get your attention." Takeshi nudges him and he turns to look up to find the Rain standing before him. "Ah, sorry, just... Reflecting about how to approach Hibari." He admits and the older teen gives him a bit of a grin, humming while offering a hand to help him stand up, which he takes.

"Sure it wasn't something else?" Takeshi inquires as the other's eyes flicker else where. It takes him a second to realize who's in that direction, which causes him to roll his eyes. "He's not a threat nor does it really matter what issue he thinks he has with me, I'm not going to indulge him in it." He assures his friend, who hums before patting him on the back as he walks pass. "Good luck!"

He gives Takeshi a smile before he walks towards his huffy teammates, ignoring their scratching comments. Taking up position, he does his best to pull his weight in the game, he's in good shape as he had continued to exercise even though he Forgot why it was important to so. He's not one for sports though and given how hard it's been for him to befriend others once that Seal had been removed, there's a disconnect between himself and most of his classmates, one that he often times doesn't see the point of trying to fix as he's not very confident in his ability to make friends or in his kind of stunted social skills.

Dismissing that train of thought, he focuses on the here and now, doing his best to try and fulfill the gap in the teamwork. They lose by a single point but given he's scored a few points which means that none of his teammates could place the blame on him for the loss so they stick around to help clean up. Takeshi also helps out even though he was part of the winning team, which earns the other teen a great deal of praise and goodwill. Tsuna isn't sure if Takeshi is overly affected by said praise directed at him as the other doesn't seem to act any different.

The relationship between Takeshi and the majority of their classmates has always puzzled him, so it's not all that surprising that this doesn't really shed any new light on it. Then again, it's Haru who's been the one to pull Takeshi and himself together in the first place, being the catalyst for them to be friendly with one another. Yet, in the end, both of them did want a connection between them or else they wouldn't have much reason to spend time together without her around. It's only recently, they finally got around to confirming that yes, they were friends and they should call one another by their first name.

It's going to be a long day. Is all the young Sky can think.

/ [- | T | -] **

The location he finds himself at is a very familiar one and Tsuna smiles a touch sadly as memories play out in his mind, he can almost see the entrance beckoning for him to walk through it. He wouldn't mind a chance to be wrapped in his Avatar, check over his equipment before entering the wilderness, hunting for plants or animals for some Quest or just gathering crafting materials for crafting projects. His Flame purrs as he wanders the deserted spot, it's likely he's on the right track about something.

Squaring his shoulders, the young Sky closes his eyes and begins to slowly release a wave of Sky Flame from his body. There's gentle ripples that bounce back, they are faint but it seems that yes, there's something here he can make use of or, maybe, reawaken? Not wanting the delicate wisps to be overly harmed, Tsuna hums as he slowly floods the area with his Flame, as his Sky picks up the 'frequency' of the Mist Construct, his humming alters without him realizing it, his focus on drawing the Construct to 'life' with his Flame charging it.

There's a touch of resistance but, in the end, his Sky takes the form of the 'key' and with a twist of the 'key' in the 'engine', it catches and as he opens his eyes in time to watch as the Construct take over the space, transforming the space into the familiar one of his memories along with his Avatar rippling around him before taking hold about the same time the rest snaps into place. His tail slowly wags back and forth in a lazy manner while he flickers his ears about.

For now, he brings up his Menu and goes through the options, checking out if anything is altered from how he recalls it. Satisfied, he Messages those on his List and proceeds to waits, already guessing that Haru will be the first to arrive and he's right. There's a squeal near the entrance and he sits up on the bed he'd settled down on, turning to regard the Lightning, who seems more then happy to have her Avatar wrapped around her.

It's clear that she is already going through her Menu, then there's muffled cursing, which, he gets, after all, he forgot to retrieve his own backpack that houses his Inventory. Still, Haru merely sighs and does a tour of the stations. Tsuna can only imagine her expression on her face as she does so.

Author's Note: So, yea, that's all I wrote before my muse left me.

Reflecting Upon Fear: Grandmaster

I don't own Grandmaster of Demonic Cultivation

For as long as he's wandered the streets, Wei Ying has ever really come to have one fear. It's a very understandable fear that many street urchins likely develop when faced while wandering the streets, looking for something to fill their empty stomachs. There's competition on the streets for that very same resource and the various players aren't all human.

Stray cats and crows are generally smaller then the average child. They give way easily as one can hunt the vermin that make their nests among the houses and the other can fly further then a street urchin could ever hope to cover in a day. After all, there are places that do chase off street urchins and have no problem with striking said children until they're out cold.

No, not even mice or rats are in the running, they are far too small along with able to get into places that a child can only dream of. Never mind that they are very much aware of what a death sentence being out in the open is for something of their size. It's unheard of swarms of rodents to attack other beings, for all that they have the numbers on their side.

So, the only other beast left that could fit the profile is that of man's best friend, the dog, or more accurately, a single or pack of stray dogs. A single dog of a certain size is more then enough to scare a child from a meal. A pack, even with just smaller size mutt, could rule a block as not only would they have the needed teeth to threaten but the ability to harass a child until they have the misfortune of dropping their prize.

For five years, Wei Ying had lived on the streets, roaming on his lonesome since he'd been kicked out from the inn that his parents had left him in, waiting for their return. Time enough for the child to have plenty of experiences with stray dogs and come out of said experiences on the losing end of such encounters. Without any support of any kind, Wei Ying learnt he could ill afford to be injured for none will find it within themselves to take care of him for long, if they even do follow through with such an impulse in the first place.

Wei Ying had little choice but to learn to be adaptable and a good judge of the worth of an action or item. Dogs being the main competition when it came to food, after all, another street urchin could be reasoned with, but not a dog. After all, between starving child and a normal size dog, the dog wins out in the physical capability, it wasn't much of a contest, really.

Perhaps if Wei Ying had been left to fend for himself against stray dogs while getting taller, the fear might have slowly faded into trepidation but he could find it within himself to confront his fear. After all, street urchins really can't afford to allow fear to control them along with them growing up. Things change, ultimately they themselves change. Stray dogs know better to attack adults after all, and all children do grow up to be adults.

So, Wei Wuxian never out grew his fear dogs, he never had any true cause to.

- } F_o_T { -

Coming to, Wei Wuxian can't help but find something off. He can't pin point what but then, his head aches as loud sounds threaten to overwhelm him, the room stinks more then he recalls, and he swears there's something going on with his vision. There's something not right and as he struggles to recall what he'd done and where he is...

"Well, well, well... That old relic actual works better then the description!" There's a snide voice that echos in the room. "Here I thought it would merely cause you to have nightmares all night long!" The voice remarks as he realizes that a door was opening off to his left.

Turning his head, Wuxian growls at the sight of Wen Chao. Then he stops and a very distressing whine comes from him as it slowly dawns on him what's happened to him. Wuxian suddenly recalls why he'd been tossed in this room and the parting remark about having one hell of a night due to an old relic that the Wen had discovered in an old storage room when they'd been cleaning in preparation of this camp.

Fears' Face is what was inscribed on the mirror's back before he'd flipped it to look at himself in the polished metal surface. He doesn't really recall what happened after he'd seen a... a...

With a mixture of howl whine, he covers his muzzle with his forepaws and can't help but whine in distress at his plight.

=] C_o_V_P [=

For reason, Wei Wuxian doesn't join them after having been thrown into a cell the previous night. They also didn't get graced with Wen Chao's company for that morning, only in the afternoon did the second son of Wen Rouhan makes his appearance. Despite Jiang Wanyin demanding to know where his Shixiong is, it only causes a very bemused expression to grace Wen Chao's face before informing them that Wei Wuxian will be indisposed for awhile and they should be more concerned about themselves.

And so, with no answers coming from any of the Wens, began their re-education under the supervision of Wen Chao and his bed jumping servant, along with various other Wen Cultivators there to ensure they complied with their orders. Even though for the next few days Jiang Wanyin would demand news or the right to see Wei Wuxian, he was denied and would get punished with extra work while getting his meals cut in half. By the time five days had passed from getting such punishment, the heir of Jiang stopped asking after Wei Wuxian but would glare at the second son of Rouhan when he had the chance.

With the fate of the most out spoken disciple up in the air, many resolved to not make any trouble while attending this Indoctrination Camp. Without such a lively presence among them, the mood remained oblique and being used as live bait for Night Hunting for the Wens caused some to get injured, which only made them more weary of what kind of entertainment the Wens had in store for them. As such, the fact that Wei Wuxian had ever came with the Jiang Sect disciples felt like a dream, an illusion and thus, never discussed by the time the first month had passed.

In the middle of the second month, a rather large dog would be paraded out before the group. There's nothing overly special about the dog save for the size, which seemed to be nearly the size of a adult man, and how mournful looking the gaze seems to be. It was often trembling with the tail more often then not tucked under the legs. The fur being on the dark side, not really black but a dark brown that could almost pass for it.

Jiang Wanyin swears that the dog kept trying its gaze on him more often then not. Which, unsettles him but for the life of him, he couldn't figure out why. So, he does his best to ignore the dog when it makes future appearances.

Near the end of the third month is when things take an... interesting turn for the disciples as the Wens seem to have a sudden interest in their health and are examined by various Cultivators. Questions get asked and some of the repeat visits also involve that dog that they'd seen. Some of them find themselves having strange dreams after being given medicine, a few claim to have dreams involving a collar about their necks and having their bodies feel... off while others dream of old nightmares from childhood.

Wen Chao no longer is in charge of them nor do they see that dog again. None really know what to make of the changes going on with their treatment but there is a change. They rarely leave the Indoctrination building by the time five months have passed.

In fact, during the following months, their Sect Leaders come to visit them, although it's just one Sect at a time. This eases their fears but it's still rather confusing. The theme of their dreams after said visit is frightful and causes deep sensation of unease within the disciples, more then a few begin dreaming of their Sect getting destroyed by the Wens along with the feeling of something tying them down, keeping them from trying to do anything to help.

Once the last of the Sects visit, which is the Jiang Sect, who seem concerned about the fate of Wei Wuxian, as it seems, not even Jiang Fengmian had been informed that something has happened to his Head Disciple. Which does cause causes a lot of unease until someone points out that it hardly matters, after all, Wei Wuxian is just the son of a servant, for all that he has been appointed as Head Disciple. This causes Jiang Wanyin to ball his fists at the disrespect but nothing comes of it.

Nearly seven months in, something happens that causes the discples to spend a whole night and day trapped in a nightmare where that dog from before seems to be calling for help while Resentful Energy tries to drag the animal, the beast, into it's pool of energy. None fully recall the events of the nightmare but some among the disciples often clench their throats, fingers tracing a circle about their necks with wild looks in their eyes.

It's not long before those dozen disciples are separated from the main group. By the time it's been eleven months, even those dozen seem to vanish. When they make a fuss about those missing, finding that their courage at last to demand some explanation, they are herded into a different building that reeks of Resentful Energy and are shown a particularly nasty looking Yao that's huge, oozing a shroud of Resentful Energy, eyes glinting like rubies with the bodies of dead people littered about the feet.

"Still want to know their fate?" Wen Chao asks in a snide way and the Yao barks furiously at the sound of Wen Chao's voice. Chills go down their spines as the Resentful Energy spikes and those near the door swears that the broken bodies within the cell of the Yao begin to move.

Shaken and their resolve broken, they return to building in a meak fashion. All the while Lan Wangji couldn't get the image of something out of his mind. An image of a young man sporting animal features with a mouth moving but no words coming out.

When he dreams that night, there's a mournful howl mixed with the weeping cries of a child. For all that he would search, Lan Wangji wouldn't find either the beast that's howling nor the child that's crying. The dream vanishes slowly once he wakes and by noon, the cries and howls have vanished along with the image of that man.

A few weeks later, a number of animals get brought in, all of them rather large for their kind and also sporting very expressive eyes that spark with sorrow, fear, and resignation. About their necks are collars sporting the Wen Sect image. A dozen total without any real rhyme or reason for the kinds being shown.

Unlike before, the animals don't visit after the singular showing. Not long after, their uniforms undergo a change and more examinations take place, more medicine distributed that cause weird sensations and seems to play tricks on their minds. They can refuse to take the medicine but they go without, it's then that some begin to suspect that they are being subjected to some kind of experiment.

They organize a hunger strike and this merely causes the various Wen Sect guards to shake their heads. It's not long before their dreams get worse, of getting chased through their homes by something huge and Resentful. The huge Yao that they saw stalks them night after night, sometimes they encounter one another in those dreams but, well, it was just their imagination, right? There's no way that anyone could travel between one person's dreams to another, right?

The worse part is when they are caught by the Yao, it doesn't maul them nor does it harm them. It asks, "Why?! Why ME?! Why?!" The voice is demands an answer but none know what kind of answer to give, so they stay silent.

Without restful sleep and good meals, their mood sours and tempers flare. It is merely verbally but the spark that lead to it being physical comes from Jiang Wanyin taking offense to the manner of which Jin Zixuan and Lan Wangji had seemingly shared a look when he complained about how long did these Wen think they should continue to hold onto this excuse of reeducation? The sight of the two sharing such a look sparks an ache within him at the missing Wei Wuxian and his restraint breaks, he lunges at Lan Wangji, having come to envy the amount of attention Wei Wuxian had paid the Second Jade.

The Wens do break it up, putting the three of them into cells. Without anyone around and being oh so hungry, the sight of the food tray with a cup of something that's likely medicine... And so, Jiang Wanyin gives in and drinks the medicine before he's given the tray of food. It never dawns on him that there could be a reason for being put in a cell so far from his fellow Sect Heir and the Second Young Master of the Lan Sect, he takes it as a blessing that none are around to witness him break their group fast.

In his mind, it's not his fault, it's all Wei Wuxian for attracting the attention of the Wens. It's Jin Zixuan and that bastard Lan Wangji's fault that he'd been singled out by the Wens. Even going so far as to blame the others for being in favor of the hunger strike as it's likely because of that he's been having such weird dreams. After all, when we'd been taking the medicine, we didn't dream of anything. Jiang Wanyin thinks savagely.

With a full stomach of soup and feeling tired. Jiang Wanyin considers how to keep up appearances before the group. After spending three days in the cell, taking the medicine and eating the food, Jiang Wanyin thinks of how foolish they are being about the medicine, after all, since he consumed it, he'd been sleeping better. After getting checked over by one of the Wen doctors, he is returned to the group.

It's not long before he expresses his scourn about the hunger strike and brags about the medicine clearly being for a restful sleep. Another fight breaks out but since he didn't throw any punches, he's not taken away. Two days later, Jin Zixuan is brought back to the group of disciples and the next day, those that had been taken away as well. Lan Wangji would return once the disciples had broken their resolve to hunger strike and would be the only one to continue to reject the medicine, thus he doesn't get anything to eat.

Even the Lan disciples don't follow their Second Young Master's example. Lan Wangji doesn't say a word about it nor does he really addresses the issue. So, as the year passes, Lan Wangji watches as something seems to take root in the various disciples and does his best to avoid getting involved in the fights that begin to become common place, in fact, its to the point that the Wen in charge seems to be rather satisfied by the manners that are getting displayed.

It's to the point that when the winners are rewarded for, well, winning. It's like a long awaited change had been given the go ahead. In Lan Wangji's view, his fellow guest disciples have become... lesser, he just couldn't pin point lesser in what, extactly, not until he notices the hair growth on places hair shouldn't be, like the back of hands and necks. Teeth seem to become more pointed and eyes seem to glow at night.

Only reason he managed to gather his wits has to do with his dreams having changed. It was like by trying to comfort the Yao that use to chase him through the mountains of his home, he is given peace in return. So, as the hair becomes more prominant and the ears begin to alter shape with hair growing upon them... He finds it within himself to speak of his observations in his dreams, after all, it's just a dream, right?

The Yao takes its time before after nearly a year and a quarter into the Indoctorantion Camp, asks, "Have they grown tails yet? Their skulls change enough for muzzles or snouts? The palms of their hands like paw pads?"

Lan Wangji is unable to answer most of those questions but... finds it rather disquieting that the Yao seems to think that's what's going to happen. "Not Yao." Lan Wangji states.

"Neither am I." And the dream ends with Lan Wangji finding himself wide awake with a sense of dread. It's then that he does take a good long look at the other disciples and it worsens at the sight of hunched, nearly naked bodies that sport a coat of fur, of blacks in the eyes while the nails seem to have become black and sharp looking. The beginning of a snout with the tip of the nose having darkened to almost black.

Less then a year ago, these almost beasts had been human, not just human but Cultivators. Worry eclipses his heart and he is sure to check his own body over in a very careful manner. While there is a hint of something trying to happen to his own body, it's fairly superficial. But a notion inspires him to check over the uniform he's wearing and finds unusual Arrays and Talismans sown in and upon the layers now that he's looking for them.

It's a while before Lan Wangji finds himself dreaming of the Yao. "Wei Ying." It had taken a lot of thought before coming to that conclusion but... things seem to have altered course with the lack of Wei Wuxian being among them.

"Hey Lan Zhan, you figured it out? Yea, this is me now... I guess." The Yao, no, Wei Ying confirms.

"Explain." He demands and Wei Wing gives him a soulful look before doing just that. Lan Wangji listens, doing his best to commit it all to his memory so when he wakes, he'll remember this information.

=] C_o_V_P [=

For it has been two years now and the various Sect Heirs and a selection of their disciples have been held by the Wen Sect. They had been given the chance to visit their heirs and disciples to be assured of their well being. The last of the Sects to visit being the Jiang Sect and the news about the missing Head Disciple gets shared but, there's little that the Jiang Sect could do to get answers from Wen Ruohan.

There isn't a lot of rumors that come out of the Nightless City nor any letters from the disciples that are in the Indoctrination Camp for reeducation. None know how long this camp was meant to last. Still, when Lan Wangji arrives at the Cloud Recesses, the news he brings about the state of the Wen Sect is hard to swallow.

If not for the Wens getting pulled back to Nightless City, many would say that the Second Jade is lying. And yet, as some Cultivators go to investigate, the sight of Nightless City covered in a haze of Resentful Energy with Ghosts and Corpses having over taken the city... What Wen Cultivators that are alive are station outside of the city.

None dare to enter the Nightless City, not even to learn the fate that befell their Heirs and disciples. Many are demanding Lan Wangji to explain the course of events that led to the dead ruling over Nightless City. More are accusing him of being a coward for having fled all on his own out of Nightless City.

Lan Xichen manages to keep the inquires and demands from being heard by Lan Wangji, then again, the other Jade had been spending far too much time in the Cold Springs in meditation. The robes that Lan Wangji had arrived in where that of the Wen Sect disciple uniform as well. There had been something about how Lan Wangji held himself that had given Lan Xichen pause and to do his best to give his younger brother the space needed to recover.

Still, a month after Lan Wangji's return, the Lan hold a gathering so that Lan Wangji can speak his piece. So, after rush politeness, Lan Wangji stands before the gathered Cultivators and Sect Leaders in the white robes of a Lan disciple. The various Sect Leaders shouting their questions and demands at the lonesome Second Jade, who doesn't seem to be overly moved.

It takes Lan Qiren shouting for them to control themselves before Lan Wangji begins to speak in a short, matter of fact way. "The Wens exposed Wei Wuxian to Fears' Face and had unusual affect on him."

Jiang Fengmian has an inkling of what Wei Wuxian's fear had likely been. "Their plans changed when they realized they could potentially apply what happened to other." Lan Wangji continues.

"What do you mean, apply it? What does that have to do with Resentful Ghosts and Corpses?!" Demands Sect Leader Yao.

That causes a number of people to explode in their own questions and opinions. Lan Wangji merely waits for them to quiet down, having the appearance of being unmoved. Continuing, almost has if following a script, "A dozen had been noted for being the most susceptible and would be singled out until they no longer were returned to the main group."

More demands for explaining and it lasts for some time, but Lan Wangji continues to appear unmoved and is patiently waiting for the dim to die down to continue. "We were examined and given new uniforms. Medicine handed out before being fed."

Lan Xichen already doesn't like what his younger brother is revealing but would wish for people to not keep interrupting after each little details spoken. "Silence! Let him finish reporting before we interrogate him!" Snaps Nie Mingjue with a challenging look.

Finally, people settle down and Lan Wangji continues to speak. "We organized a hunger strike, suspecting that something about the medicine to be causing odd happenstances to our senses and that we were being subjected to experimentation."

A bit of a pause but none speak as Nei Mingjue glaring at those that look like they were about to. "Investigation by this Lan Wangji of the robes had Arrays and Talismans sown upon them and within them. Medicine was amplifying the effects of the sympathy that's the Wens were fostering upon us, using Wei Wuxian's condition as a template."

Unease spreads among the crowd while Jiang Fengmian notices Madam Yu's fist clutching as she clearly already blaming Wei Wuxian for whatever has happened to Jiang Wanyin. While Nie Mingjue is finding himself worried about what this means for his little brother but keeps from speaking and merely glares at the gathered Cultivators. Lan Xichen reassures himself that his younger brother hadn't seem overly affected by whatever the Wens had been doing.

"The Wens encouraged certain behavior after the strike collapsed and physical changes began to take hold, hair growing where it shouldn't, thickening of the palm skin, ears becoming more pronounce, eyes reflecting light during the night, and sharper teeth." Lan Wangji lists. "Their manners devolved with much encouragement by the Wens into that of beasts. When the robes were shed, collars put upon the necks."

Many Cultivators' eyes go towards the neck of Lan Wangji but there is no impression of a collar, nor does the Second Jade appear to have changes to his appearance. It causes Lan Xichen much relief that it's clear that Lan Wangji couldn't have undergone that point. More then a few were trying to wrap their heads around the idea of the Wens somehow turning their disciples into... into... beasts or would they be considered Yao?

"Wei Wuxian had been experimented on the most and had Resentful Energy infused into his being as his dog form lacked a Golden Core." Lan Wangji reports in a brisk tone. "Without any other opinion, Wei Wuxian had learnt to harness it and is how this I managed to escape from being experimented on when their patience came to an end."

Before Jiang Fengmian could register her mood as he's shaken by what happened to his Head Disciple. "What a mess this trouble maker has caused!" Madam Yu snarls and Lan Wangji looks at her while Jiang Fengmian speaks up, "It's hardly Wei Wuxian's fault, it is this relic of the Wens that is the source of this mess, my lady."

"You defend him even now? When our son has been devolved into a mere beast?!" Madam Yu snaps and it's not long before the gathered Cultivators speak their own mind.

Lan Wangji's clenched fists are hidden as he listens to the blame being settled at Wei Ying's feet when it wasn't Wei Ying's fault for having a fear of dogs so extreme that it was able to cause an actual physical transformation. Although, from what Wei Ying had shared, some Wen Cultivator had made a modification to the relic and it was considered trash when it wouldn't work not long after the modification had been added. Never mind that Wei Ying somehow managed to figure out how to Dream Walk nor did he want to be almost turned into a Monster, never mind a Yao.

If not for Wei Ying's aid when it came to fooling the Wens from overlooking him with suggestions for Arrays and Talismans, using his own blood as a medium in their creation. If not for a search of his body, he might have been able to find a way to escape without Wei Ying using his Demonic Cultivation to summons Ghosts and rise the corpses. He hadn't wanted to leave, not when Wei Ying could lose himself to the Resentful Energy that he's been forced to learn to Cultivate in his current state.

Wen Qing had helped by not knocking him out with a needle when Wei Ying began to cause a distraction. He's not sure what to make of Wen Qionglin, but the Wen had shown signs of having been experimented on himself and had lead him out viva secret passages while Wei Ying's distraction keep the other Wens from seeing him getting away. Wen Qionglin didn't come with him, having left before he could think to offer such a suggestion.

The time spent in the Cold Springs weren't just for him to cleanse himself of the remenants of the experiement but also to try and reach Wei Ying. It had been successful for a few nights and it had been Wei Ying who coached him in what to say. He mostly followed the scriped but did not speak overly much about the timeline nor Wei Ying's theories about how to create flags or Talismans to enter into the city if he succeeds in taking over the city using Ghosts and Corpses. About the means they could begin reverting the effects on most of the disciples and Sect Heirs.

Listening as they blame Wei Ying instead of going back to inquiring about their Heirs and disciples, it causes Lan Wangji to become rather tired and drained. He knew the names of the dozen that had been susptible and wished to inform those families of what news Wei Ying had passed along, particularly given that Nei Huaisang had been among that number, having become a giant fox Yao. It seems that Nei Huaisang is doing his best to make do with his current circimstances and given having met him when Wei Ying pulled him into a shared Dream, he can say that it seems that Nei Huaisang is more himself then he'd expected.

The other eleven are much more stable compared to the rest of those sent for reeducation, but then, their circumstance were very different then the main group and himself. He recalls the rewarding of what the Wens wanted in the others and how eager they'd been to engage in such behavior. One group had been groomed while the other had fallen into the transformation, although why it had been so easy for them to do so remains unclear and likely very private. For all that the latter group had been in the form of beasts, they still had enough sense of self to have a semblance of diginity and self restraint.

They might obey a command from a Wen but they could also not. It's clear that Wei Ying had done his best to resist such training and had suffered greatly for it. It's also clear that the Wens were in the process of deciding which method would reap the greater prize as it were. So they were comparing the two groups and Lan Wangji suspects that they had been coming to the conclusion of which method was the one to install greater obeyance in those undergoing the transformation.

In the end, the noise gives him a head ache and none seem to be aware of when he leaves. It's later that night that he manages to speak with Nei Mingjue concerning the state of his younger brother, his own brother is presence. "A fox. He is in the form of a fox Yao."

"Yes." Is all Lan Wangji states and drinks a bit more of the tea. "Is still himself, spoke with him when Wei Wuxian pulled him into a shared Dream."

"Wei Wuxian figured out how to Dream Walk?" Then there's a snort and a slight shake of a head. "Any other of my disciples end up like my didi?"

Humming a positive, he gives out the names of the four others and what kind of Yao they had been transformed into. A bear, a boar, a wolf, and a rat. Something about the way Nei Mingjue doesn't question why those animals causes him to wonder if the man has some insight into the reason why.

Wei Ying thinks it had something to do with getting laid bare to the world for all to see that might be one of the reasons why the dozen had been suspectible to being easily transformed in the first place. Lan Wangji wonders if the reason why Wei Ying thinks so has to do with his own self reflection upon his own transformation. Not that he could relate to such a fear.

"The seven others? We can write a letter to their respective Sect Leaders about them and what animal." His brother suggests and upon thinking about, hums in agreement that it might be a good idea, as it means that he won't have to worry about explaining himself or from having demands of answer concerning the rest of their disciples and Heirs.

When asked to go into detail about how the Wens had encouraged behavior, Lan Wangji measures his words carefully before answering. He is the only one who can speak of what happened right now and he can't keep silent about the matter, even if it sounds as though he's laying the blame of it on a certian Heir. He knows that unlike Jiang Wanyin, Jin Zixuan had tried to have his disciples be cautious about the whole affair, suggesting skipping days of meals just to be on the safe side. None really paid heed and, by the time he'd been returned to the group, Jin Zixuan wasn't exercising caution either.

It had been mere hearsay that Jin Zixuan had even made that suggestion as he'd been keep apart far longer then the other two. Other then accepting drinks, most of which being water, he'd manage to not consume any of the medicine but also didn't eat. He'd been stubborn and it served him well in this particular instance, when giving into temptation could have far reaching results to Lan Wangji's body and mind.

With the Cultivation World aware of what had been done to their Heirs and disciples, they retreated back to their Sects for a bit, then demands for how to address the issue began to get shouted by the various Sects. After all, without knowing the state of the Wens within Nightless City and thus the fate of Wen Ruohan, most had agreed to blame the Head Disciple of the Jiang Sect, after all, he's a well known troublemaker and he could have thrown his lot in with the Wens, aiding them in this experienment.

=] C_o_V_P [=

The Wens that welcomed the leaders of Three of the Five Great Sects was one Wen Qing and a number of unknown Wen Cultivators. There's a cry of Gege and a furry person that'd been wearing Nei colors throws himself at the Sect Leader. "Huaisang!"

For all that the hair is a shade of red, with animal ears on the top and a fox tail wagging behind, it's clear that this person is Nei Huaisang. The other three that were hanging back, each of them sporting Sect colors, only one of which came from another Great Sect, a woman in Jin colors and sporting the look of a tiger, including having a forehead with black stripes. She is Jin Nuan, a third cousin to Jin Zixuan. The other two sport the features of a leopard and macaque of somekind, the hair coloring gave it away. He Su is the one with the cast of the macaque, Heir of the Tingshan He Sect and Ouyang Xun is the one with leopard features, distant cousin of the current Sect Leader.

In the four months since Lan Wangji had escaped, three months have passed and Wei Wuxian's hold over Nightless City remains. No word had been sent out and it had taken the Sects a long time before committing to marching on Nightless City to retrieve what remains of their Heirs and disciples. In the intervening three months, Wei Wuxian had settled the matter of the Wen Sect's ambition in a very unexpected and yet violent way.

The result of the intervening months are seen by those three and their escort. Life had returned to the streets of Nightless City as the living once more dominate the streets. There's little signs of the previous wandering dead nor of the heavy Resentment that had been hanging over the city.

The mood is sober as the group moves through the city, heading for the Palace. It's clear that Nei Mingjue is relieved by the sight of his younger brother while Lan Xichen does his best to engage He Su in discussion while Jin Nuan speak with Jiang Fengmian. As they get closer, they find the entrance guarded by a pair of Corpses but they let them pass as various members of the escort is sure to buddy up with a member of those visiting.

With the arrival within, Lan Xichen asks, "How is Wei Wuxian? Lan Wangji mentioned him being forced to Cultivate Resentful Energy."

It had been a fight to keep Lan Wangji from accompanying him to Nightless City but his brother gave way to his descision as he is the Sect Leader since their father passing away. It wouldn't due for Lan Wangji to find himself conflicted by his sentiments towards Wei Wuxian if it comes to fighting the former man turned Monster, perhaps Demon. He didn't want his brother to end up heartbroken at his friend's death.

"He is well. A bit over worked." Wen Qing answers, the first time she spoke since they'd exchanged greetings at the gate.

"He's still using Demonic Cultivation." Nei Mingjue points out. Which causes something of a huff to come from his younger brother.

"Well, of course he's still capable of using Resentful Energy, they forced him to create some kind of core just to see if he could." Nei Huaisang states. "They've been the dozen of us do so, it's just that he's the only who'd been forced to do so out of only Resentful Energy. It's a trail for him to work out how to get his Golden Core to cohabit with his Beast Core."

"Don't call it that." Grumbles Wen Qing and Lan Xichen suspects that this is a well treaded aruguement. "It's what Wei Wuxian decided to called it." Aruges back Nei Huaisang with a fan out and fanning himself, it's a simple looking one.

"Yes, let's go with name that someone who named their sword Suibian decided upon." Wen Qing states in a drool manner and Lan Xichen keeps a slight smile upon his face while Nei Mingjue snorts slightly and there's little in the way of reaction from Jiang Fengmian.

"Perhaps now is not a good time to argue?" Suggests He Su. With a hum from the two, they continue on in silence until they hear a babe's giggling.

There's a soft sigh and a slight rubbing of the bridge of a nose by Wen Qing while the other Wens seem to relax along with sporting soft smiles. The sight that greets them upon entering the throne room, for Lan Xichen couldn't think of it as anything but, is that of a figure in coal black outer robe with darker greys with red trim holding what appears to be a baby. The head lifts up and they spy light gray eyes staring out of that mostly human face with ears facing them.

"Wei Wuxian." Says Jiang Fengmian and the ears turn back a bit while the head nods. "Sect Leader Jiang." The voice is rough and the words have a slight pitch to them.

"Sect Leaders Nei and Lan." The near man looking Wei Wuxian greets them. "I hope you've been well since we last met."

Polite greetings and exchanges get shared as Wei Wuxian ends up handing off the babe to Nei Huaisang, who promptly begins cooing at the babe, causing a sqeal of joy and gliding out, all the while talking softly to the infant. There's a few wistful look sent in the direction the pair had gone from Wei Wuxian but he remains. Lan Xichen feels a bit more secured that not all of Wei Wuxian had been lost while they ran out of plesantries to exchange.

"So... About the others, that's... going to be tricky, I won't lie." Wei Wuxian brings up after a bit. "The methods they were put under were different along with behavior grooming."

"It's best you come along and see for yourself though." Admits the near human Wei Wuxian. "It's not pretty, not going to lie."

And so, they are shown the results of the Wen's devolving of various Heirs and disciples. "The physical transformation is easy to reverse, it's not just behavior that's the hard part. It's almost like something fundamental is either surpressed or gone and they're... well..."

Nei Mingjue did, in fact, see that compared to those they've already met and Wei Wuxian himself, there's still something human looking out. In the others, it's hard to believe that they weren't Yao who'd Cultivated a human form for the way they wear the robes, scratching at areas while moving about primarily on their hands and feet. The robes were mostly durable and it's clear that those wearing them have tried to tear them off.

If not for Talismans clearly sown in them, those wearing them would have been going about naked. There's patches of hair on parts of the body that shouldn't have any or that thick. The noises are more akin to canine with more then a few reacting to Wei Wuxian's presence then theirs. Growls with very pointy teeth being bared in snarls.

Rushing at the doors and taking swings at them as they walk through the area. "Jiang Cheng!" Jiang Fengmian cries out at the sight of his son and the way the Heir pauses at snarling and growling at the sight of Wei Wuxian to looking confused at his father, even tilting his head in a manner that one would expect of a dog.

"They seem to not like you very much." Nei Mingjue notes and Wei Wuxian seems to sigh. "Yea, it's unknown if it's due to some kind of impression or from earlier encounters." Admits Wei Wuxian, there's a hint of sorrow and regret that could be seen upon the fact and in those eyes.

"Encounters?" Inquires Lan Xichen and Wei Wuxian sighs. "Yes, I was Dream Walking a lot and I wasn't always in the right state of mind. So, I chased them about their Dreams but reframed from causing harm to their dream selves, just frightened them."

"I haven't been able to reach their dreams, not sure when I couldn't but, I can't now and it's been hard to try and reach them." Admits Wei Wuxian, which cuts off that course of discussion of why can't he reach them on a different level is he could Dream Walk. "The notes that were left behind... Aren't as detailed as we'd like." Before adding, "We do know that they didn't get examined daily as we did, that might have one of the reasons for it."

"You helped Lan Wangji from getting explosed eariler for it not working on him." Lan Xichen states and Wei Wuxian blinks a bit at him, a bit of confusion. Then it seems like something clicks.

"Ah... You mean you... Huh, well, I'll leave Lan Zhan to reveal that on his own." Wei Wuxian states with a slight wave of a hand and with a sad look sent to Jiang Wanyin, who's back at snarling at Wei Wuxian, hands on the bars and giving them a look at the palms of the hands, the way the fingers seem to be rather stiff along with the black nails that seem to curve foreward, bringing to mind a dog's own paw.

Nei Mingjue raises a bit of an eyebrow at the causal use of Lan Wangji's birth name from Wei Wuxian. "Anyway, I had help in Wen Qing, she'd been able to sneak tea for him to drink while I'd spoken with Wen Ning about scounting unused routes out of the city." Wei Wuxian adds.

"Sadly, by the time we came up with a plan and having Wen Ning sneak some of my Talismans to... Well, I'm sure you can guess." There's a rudeful look that crosses Wei Wuxian's face. "Lan Wangji shared with me about the nakeness that's becoming the normal among the others and, well, when he wouldn't... That's how he got exposed."

Silence descends for the remainder of the tour. It's unsettling to see far too many disciples acting so beastly, so inhuman for all that their appearances is far more human then Wei Wuxian's own or the others who'd been completely transformed into beasts and regard a semblance of human form. As they arrive at the exit, Wei Wuxian brings them to the work room and talks about some of the hows and whats that the Wens had created in order to replicate what had happened with Wei Wuxian.

They even get to look at the infamous mirror that started all this. After a while, they break it off for something to eat and refreshments. They get to see the others that had been transformed, not many of them had progressed enough to stand upright like a man or have thin coats, yet they wear a light robe that's been fitted to their frame, a sign that they'd allowed their measurements to be taken and for tailors to be in their space enough to put it on and take it off.

They send out messangers before night to give an update to the other Sects. It would take a while for them to arrive and to react at the state of their various members and Heirs. There's talks about ransacking Nightless City but Wei Wuxian inquires if have a better place for the research in curing their disciples and Heirs then Nightless City? Crimson eyes had glinted when asking.

The Sects decided to leave the matter in Wei Wuxian'd more then capable hands, well, some, lead by the Jin Sect did so with great reluctancy. The crimson bled away and various Sects send their own healers to help with treating the disciples. Books also come pouring in, mostly from the Lan Sect.

At some point, Wei Wuxian and the dozen gain a mastery over their bodies that allows them to shift between being fully human or beastial, plus between looks. By the time five years had passed, something of a solution had been developed, it wasn't perfect but it was the best they could come up with. And so, it's applied slowly to those affected and are sent back to their respective Sects.

While some behaviors had become standard, they had managed to cause a amnesia of a sort and physically revert them fully back to human. It became more of a matter of teaching them the correct behavior along with encouraging them to think instead of merely reacting. It's not the best solution but it worked well enough.

Sadly, Wei Wuxian would never be welcomed back into the Jiang Sect and Jiang Fengmian gave way to Madam Yu's demands in that regard. Then again, no many would welcome him to visit as they continued to blame him for being the cause of the situation, regardless of the truth of what Wen Ruohan had planned originally for the Indoctrination Camp and the quick war that would see the Wen rise fully above the Sects, particularly the Lan and Nei as they had plans to wipe both the Jiang and the Jin Sects from the face of the earth. Such plans could have easily been counterfieted, those that defend their statance by preaching loudly and often.

Not all of the dozen were welcome back to their respective Sects either, so they shed their Sect's robes and take up the colors of Wei Wuxian, black, grey, and red. The Wen Sect's official Sect Leader would be Wen Ning, courtesy name Wen Qionglin, while, in truth, Wei Ying, courtesy name Wei Wuxian, was the actual Sect Leader. His adopted son, Wen Yuan, courtesy name Wen Sizhui, would inherit the post of Sect Leader from both distant cousin and adopted father.

As for Lan Wangji, he married out of the Lan Sect and into the Wen Sect, husband of Wei Wuxian, thus the unofficial Madam of the Wen Sect, and second father to Wen Yuan. The two would go on to adopt many children and when Wen Yuan ascended to Sect Leader, the pair could be spotted wandering around, helping those that need it.

It's due to Wei Wuxian's experience with Resentful Energy that would see the Burial Mound cleansed by the third decade of Wen Sizhui's reign as Sect Leader.

It's unknown when but it's recorded that both Lan Wangji and Wei Wuxian would pass their respective Divine Trials and ascend to Godhood. It would be some decades later that would see Wen Sizhui, leaving the Sect Leader position to his eldest granddaughter, also ascend into Godhood.

The End.

Author's Note:

This was inspired by It's not a fairytale by OrcaOnAStroll , which can be found on AO3.

Unknown Consequences of Quest Lines: SVS

I don't own The Scum Villain's Self Saving System's 'Proud Immortal Demon Way'! Only, it's going to be a Cultivation online game instead of a web-novel.

Xin Xing is what he named his Demon character. The Xin is the character for Heart and Xing character can be either Successful or Thriving, he means it as Thriving. Dark grey hair, dark yellow eyes, the starter clothing allows for him to pick a color set, which, for the Demon Race being black, red, and purple. Of course, he goes with black and next is the usual option where he would have picked to either to increase his starter Stats, which are under the categories of Vigor, Mental, and Spirit or he can decide to spend the points into buying and ranking selected Skills to the max of Rating 2, there's a max of the number of Skills that could be at Rating 2 as well, which is having four at that max and two at Rating 1.

Given the nature of the server he's joining, there isn't any real choice as the Stat option has been greyed out. Leaving him to pick either ten skills at Rating 1 or going with four at Rating 2 plus one at Rating 1. The Skills offered are only twenty. And so, he selects, in this order Searching, Appraisal, Bartering, Lore: Demon Realm, Lore: Demonic Clans, Performance: Acting, Performance: Flute, and Performance: Acrobatics. With two points left to spend, he increases Flute to Rating 2 and, after a bit of debate, picks Acrobatics over Acting as it will likely come in handy in fights and exploring the world.

As he finishes, he sees his starting Stats, Vigor has a total of 8 points total, which is divided between Constitution, Dexterity, and Strength, the highest at 4 and his lowest being 1. His Mental total is 3, which is divided by Charisma, Intelligence, and Wisdom. His Spirit's total is 8, and it's divided between two for his Race along with the sub-listing being Demonic Qi and Resistance, it seems that his Resistance has a 6 while his Demonic Qi has 2. He knows that each Character's Stats are also randomly generated for this server in a similar fashion with only 19 points total instead of the usual 25 points that his Race typically gets, Human typically get 20 standard points and Spirits get a standard of 30.

The Race Spirits wasn't an option and he'd been torn between Demon and Human... Until all the limited Human slots had been picked, it had been a mere two hundred Players for that Race. He'd been a late sign up for this Server, so he didn't have any solid ideas for a Character. Two of his friends were the ones to talk him into signing up for this Sever, it's some kind of custom server and very story driven, thus role play heavy, he's not overly familiar with the normal edition of this game, only checking out information when he'd been given confirmation about being allowed to join, which was two weeks ago, it's been almost five months since the closed to allowing people to sign up for it.

Xin Xing slowly rotates around before him with the room displaying signs of the Demonic Culture. The Lore skills allow players to get information viva pop up. The higher the Rating of the Skill, the more detailed the information given. He picked his first three skills due to taking his friends' advice before deciding on the others, again, following some advice his friends gave him about the art of Role Playing in games. He figured he'd manage to earn some money viva knowing how to play a Flute or joining an acting troop.

He's fairly sure that having a high Resistance is a good thing, although he'd rather not have his Mental at a total of 3. "I should be able to raise them." He murmurs as he presses the final confirm button. It's the first day of the prepping to the beginning of the Server becoming open. Each player is only allow one Character and that Character will be reviewed, if he doesn't get a message about Xing Xing, then, his Character has likely past the review, being approved.

Closing logging out of the Server and then the game, once back at his main hub, he goes through the list before selecting Eras of Cities which is a city builder and manager. It'll be six days before the Server, which is entitled Proud Immortal Demon Way will be open for them to play their Characters, the game is Worlds of Wondrous Cultivation 3, the first of the game line that's multiplayer.

(Worlds of Wondrous Cultivation is a single player game where the only Race option had been Human at the beginning. Only through special hidden Quests could the player unlock various other Races, at the time Demonic or Spirit wasn't used as a general Race. What would be consider Breeds in the sequel game were considered separate Races in the first, which needed to be unlock one at a time, be it a Demonic Tiger or Tiger Spirit. Demonic types were noted for having black Qi and are easily enraged while Spirit types for yellow Qi and have difficulty with socializing, being described as emotionally distant. Humans generally have basic and balanced light green to either white or blue, depends on if they specialize in Physical Cultivation Skills and Perks or in Spirit Cultivation and Skills.)

_ [^ _ ^] _/

As the light fades, moving his hands before him, he turns them this way and that. Opening and closing his fingers individually. There's no greeting pop up, but then, he knew that wasn't going to happen. There's no tutorial for him to go through either. Glancing around, he finds himself in a plains area and mutters out the Menu Command. There's no portrait of his current looks, taking in the Stats and then checking his Skills, he wonders what possessed him to pick Performance Skills instead of Crafting Skills given his Mental total.

With a sigh, he checks for any Racial Inherit Perks or Flaws. "Demonic Fox: Fox Fire ." It activates but vanishes within seconds as his Qi ran out before he though to dismiss it. One of the Flaws is what he'd consider a minor blessing, at least, he thought it could be, it's called Intoxication Resistance, which means it takes him a lot to get drunk. He's fairly sure that his high RES could be blamed for this particular Flaw. It's his second Flaw that causes him to despair a bit as it's called Qi Medicine Resistance and it is fairly sure that any Healing Items or Medic Arts won't be overly effective on himself because of this particular Flaw. This one means he'll have to be careful about his HP, making it worst has to do with how low it already is due to having such a low CON.

For other Perks, it's pretty much the flip side of his two Flaws, again, it's due to his RES and, yea, it's a lot listed, but he's a bit confused as to why there's an Aphrodisiac Resistance nor why it's considered a Perk instead of a Flaw? After all, it not like he has any reason to go around buying Aphrodisiac drug. "Am I missing something? I mean, this is a Cultivation game, right?" The player of Xin Xing muses.

In the end, he closes his Menu and begins to take in the room he's in. It's a shallow cave and looking around, he finds a few things that he notes as having some value. Picking them up and putting them into his sleeve, which is how he's to access his Inventory, it's not long before his Search Skill increases along with his WIS Stat. Doing some exploring outside of the cave, he again does the same to what he notices to be of value, his Skills and Stats increase within an hour of doing this.

With a better Appraisal Skill and Mental total, he goes through what he has picked up. With an increase to his INT to it being 5, he's able to use his Lore: Demon Realm to get a better idea of what each is used for. Some of what he gathered is very common and won't bring in a lot of money. It's about half a dozen of that will gather him better money for being rather uncommon given the location he's currently in.

Putting it all back into his Inventory, Xing tries out his Acrobatic Skill and does a few back flips before seeing how high he can jump, using his Qi to boost his jumps. He gets tired by the third jump and finds himself panting a bit, his Con goes up, which is a good thing given he'd managed to raise it only once before. Which gives him the idea to stick around and do some more physically taxing exercise in hopes of raising it even more.

By the end of the day, he's yet to wander very far from the cave where he'd spawned in. Still, he's satisfied with everything he's done, the only Stat he'd been unable to increase is CHA but that's rather understandable given he's alone in this particular mountainous range. For Skills, it had been his Bartering, Demonic Clans, Acting, and Flute, two of which is the same reason as his CHA but the other has to due with lacking a Flute to use.

It's not until he tries to log out that he gets a reminder about what's needed for him to log out, which is a bed or a sleeping bag. Going through his Inventory just to double check his fears, yes, he lacks a sleeping bag and camping equipment. Closing his eyes, Xing takes a series of deep and calming breaths while repeatedly counting down from ten.

Letting lose a sigh, Xing begins walking away from the cave, down the slop. He does continue to wander around, grabbing what's uncommon and higher quality Items. Altering his path, sometimes going back to grab something. It's near what he'd wager is midnight that he gets his first taste of Combat in the form of something called a {Ore Skin Boar} which is a Rare Demonic Beast that lives in Mountains rich with metal ore.

Making very good use of his Acrobatic to dodge the charging attacks and putting distance between them, Xing considers if he'd be able to flee successfully from this monster. Then something happens that causes the monster's hide to glow before it flashes, which causes him to find it hard to see clearly. It's only hearing the hooves that he manages to dodge to the left, he'd been dodging to the right, so, there's an enraged bellow and he mentally curses as his vision slowly clears up.

One good turn deserves another. Xing things and waits for the last second before not just dodging, but aiming for the nearest eye, " Fox Fire !" The boar monster screams in pain and he tries to not pant at having pumped all his Qi into that attack.

It's a bit before his Qi returns and he continues to evade the boar monster. Ignoring the sounds of the pop ups are making, only giving it a bit of a mind at the fact that this fight is helping him get stronger, the settings have the pop ups not show when in battle. He gets to the other side and does the same to the other eye.

Feeling a bit more secure, after all, he blinded the monster, he isn't expecting it to not be overly hindered when finding him. It's then that he pays attention to realize the snout seems to be moving, which means that the monster is using scent to track him. He continues to evade the charges of the monster, waiting for his Qi reserve to fill enough for him to use his Fox Fire once more and he'll target the nose for the third use of it.

This monstrous boar does the flare, he looks away as a hand covers his eyes along with him closing them. Xing focuses on listening for the hooves clanking upon the stones. As the monster moves, he lowers his hand and looks at the monster. Another series of dodging and he thinks he's got enough Qi for his Fox Fire, so, he waits for the demonic boar to charge at him again and prays that he's able to get the timing right for this, as this is risking injury from the tusks that are jetting out.

" Fox Fire !" Xing roars and pours everything into it once more. His hand doesn't move fast enough and he hardly feels any pain, likely due to his high RES. Still, he experiences a brief thrill of adrenaline as the monstrous boar seems to have crashed into the ground.

The sounds of pop ups are heard as he looks between his right hand to the monster for a bit. Straightening up, he cautiously walks over and, well, grabs the exposed throat. And so, he strangles the monster to death, which takes a lot longer then he expected.

The only reason he knows it's dead has to do with the pop ups finally explode before his eyes, with the oldest going first and the rest following in order. The bulk were just confirmation that his Stats or Skill increased. The last has to do with an increase to his STR before fading.

Looking at the monster's corpse, Xing isn't sure what to make of the fact that it remains and there isn't any loot in its place. "I'm... going to have to butcher it, aren't I?" He mutters out loud and then looks at his only slightly pointed nails of his hands before looking at the slightly shiny hide that's copper with hints of grey about the hooves and covering the majority of the snout. He wonders what kind of metal that grey represent.

He knows how valuable this monster's parts are, the most is the pelt. With a check, his Qi is mostly up and walks over, deciding to see if he can't use Qi to sharpen his nails so he can cut into the body. He's felt how his Qi when he's used Fox Fire. So, he tries to call up the feeling, which causes it to take the form of the navy blue fire that's like Fox Fire.

Letting the feeling go, he tries again. It's the ninth time that he finally manages to focus the filling into his nails of his right hand. A pop up sounds out before appearing, congratulating him on discovering a Demonic Qi Skill: Strengthen Nails. Thankfully, he doesn't need to do much as an option shows up and he selects the Skinning option. Xing finds himself watching himself use his nails to skin the monster. Once he comes to himself, that option list is still waiting for him and he selects the Butcher option, which has his body do so.

With that, he manages to get the pelt and parts into his sleeve. Once that is done, he flickers his right hand around to shake off some of the red blood on his hand. In the end, he wipes his hands on his robes and then he studies the area and then the blood splatter on the ground before him. It's still night and Xing continues on his way down the mountain.

_ [^ _ ^] _/

It's about noon when Xing finally encounters a group of Demons that weren't looking for someone to either rob or gang pressed into being a servant of the leadership of the group. He's tired and wants a bath in hopes of getting clean, given the temporary buildings, which number about twenty and are similar to tents, he's not sure of what kind. In other news, no bath. He thinks to himself.

The Demons that he sees sport various animistic characteristics like horns and odd looking eyes, be it in color or in shape to the more extreme like a tail, wings, or an extra eye. He's hardly that surprise that the women look more... human, but then, it's more in having that 'classic' hour glass figure. It suddenly makes him wonder if his looks have changed upon logging in as Xin Xing.

"Greetings." One of the Demons sporting a set of horns from behind the pointed ears and antlers coming from the temple. The nose is smashed up with only slits for nostrils above the mouth. The skin tone is a dark brown and there's a few hints of crows feet at the edge of the mouth. The robes appear to be dark red with off yellow trim, he wonders what kind of material the rough but tough robes are made out of.

"Greetings." Xing returns, his Lore: Demonic Clans doesn't register any of the Demons to be important, thus, would be classified as commoners. "I'm looking to sell and buy." It's bluntly said and he's fairly sure that he made a social faux pas but didn't feel overly invested to reflect on what.

"This one would like to see what it is that sir is looking to sell." The greeter states, hands folding into the sleeves. He can only guess at the other gripping a hidden weapon.

Humming, he pulls out some of the more uncommon items he's collected, most of which are faint glowing stones and some {Ore Rock} that he's only can guess at with some being a few light consuming flowers. Xing notices a slight, intense stare at the flowers. He doesn't have the right Rating to identify those blooms correctly, in his check, it was merely brought up as {Demonic Ebony Pansy(Unconfirmed)}. "Those..." And then the greeter looks up at him, doing his best to mask his interest.

"I'm looking to purchase, for a start, a {Bed Roll} and would like to see what you have for wind instruments." He states flatly. The greeter clearly studying him with a calculating look.

Is he about to be cheated? Yea, he likely is but at this point, he really was just done with the game and have been wanting to log out for some time now. His first encounter with his fellow Race saw him kill two out of the three of the Demons, as did one ran away, and he looted more {Ore Rock} and four clay pots of various poisons. The second had been only a pair and he got away viva using Fox Fire to set one on fire and pushing them into the other. Third had him fight a few examples of the first Demons sporting Rat traits with a singular Demon sharing traits from the second encounter, only larger and sporting slightly different looks.

When he finished with the mob of Rat Demons, not all of them died by his Qi infused nails or Fox Fire as they had been spooked. The odd one out cursed them out for their cowardliness along with offering to only maim him a little before hauling his skinny ass to their Boss. Which, Xing did object to but it was a harder fight, given that this one actually had a sabre and used it. He got away with setting the hair on fire and snapping the straps of the leather belt so it would tangle up with the legs, then he ran to the nearest tree and would then leap from tree to tree as quickly as he could to put distance between himself and that cursing Demon plus jeering mob of Rat featured Demons.

By the time dawn arrived, he'd gotten down from the trees and changed his direction. It's at the edge of a coulee and noticed signs of fire viva smoke. Upon getting closer, he did notice other signs that he's likely going to encounter something, it just surprised him to find such a small traveling band that didn't look like the Demons he'd encountered before.

Finally seemingly getting an idea about Xing, the greeter starts waxing on the Quality of what's being offered and waits for the other to finish before countering the points, particularly about the blooms. It goes back and forth for a bit before he threatens to withdraw the blooms, which gets a startled 'No!' and then the greeter coughs and tries to recover from the miniature break in his business manner. The amount for the blossoms then become the focal point for the next few rounds and he settles on 6 Gold and 5 Silver for each bloom he has, which he bring out the rest of the nearly three dozen he'd picked from the various bushes he's encountered.

More importantly, Xing now knows what they are called, {Light Absorbing False Pansy}. The dozen {Ore Rock} gets sold at 2 Silver and 9 Copper each, but the other isn't interested in buying all he has on him, which is fair, given how common they can be found near the mountain and having that river near the camp sometimes having carried a few down from the mountain. The total amount he gets from greeter is 199 Gold, 90 Silver, and 8 Copper, the Gold and Silver look like tiny boats while the Copper are those coins with a hole in the middle, they also seem to have different mints.

"About your purchases, please, follow me." And the greeter leads him to the left side of the camp. They stop before a wagon and he wonders where the beasts of burden are, along as what kind of beasts were used.

It's not long before the most important item comes out of a longish box. It's still rolled up and made out of leather, it's been used before and thus it should be cheaper then a new and unused one. Picking it up, he asks, "Given it's been used, how many copper are you wanting for it?" Taking in the weight and turning it over to looking a bit more at the few strains of fur from the streams.

"1 Silver and 20 Copper." And begins a debate over not just the price but his need for one. Xing pays 1 Silver and 6 Copper, all the while during their bartering session, the greeter had been pulling out the small collection of Flutes, some of which are made out of nice Quality material but he doubts at the sound they'd give.

"Mind if I test them?" Xing inquires as he picks up one of the more plain Flutes, it's made from a purple wood. "Is sir sure he's capable to playing one correctly?" The greeter inquires in fake innocent tone.

Rolling his eyes, it's a bit of autopilot but he manages to do a simple Twinkle Twinkle Little Star upon the {Southern Vampire Wattle Flute}.

As he pulls the Flute from his lips, he looks at the bit over two dozen Flutes, ignoring the greeter's clear surprise at him knowing how to play one. Picking one that seems to be bamboo made, putting down the purple flute as well.

{Blooming Ten Year Bamboo Flute} is a touch heavier but as he runs his fingers over the flute's surface, there's something carved on the back side of the Flute. Turning it, the carving seems to be a short poem and he is illiterate, having not picked up any of the Knowledge Skills concerning reading and writing. So, he merely hums and twists the Flute over and tests it by going with some other simple tune, which is likely native to this world.

This goes on and the camp's Demons come stand around, listening to him test each Flute, some proved to be what he expected while others exceeded his expectations. And if his playing only got better and better... Well, at least none are trying to hurry him through to making a choice right away. And so, it takes most of the early afternoon to narrow down the number of Flutes he's slowly increasing Skill helps him pick out sounds the best for what kind of music he's looking to play.

Once it's down to three of them, and they are the {Blooming Ten Year Bamboo Flute}, {Opal Bone Flute}, and {Silver Inlay Gigantic Lacquer Stem Flute}. "The price of these three?" Xing inquires and the greeter gives him the prices of each, "{Blooming Ten Year Bamboo Flute} is 1 Gold and 73 Silver; {Opal Bone Flute} is 23 Gold, 68 Silver, and 84 Copper; and {Silver Inlay Gigantic Lacquer Stem Flute} is 63 Gold, 97 Silver, and 78 Copper."

"The Silver Inlay is the cause for why it's so expensive." He muses out loud as he looks at that Flute. With a hum, he then examines the final two. One is plant and lighter while the other is more like stone and far heavier. While the hints of rainbow of the opal does look nice, he's unsure of if that means it'll shatter easier then the other one, even by dropping it by accident. Which leaves...

"I'll buy this one." It's cheap and can be easily replaced. He tells himself as he picks up the {Blooming Ten Year Bamboo Flute}.

"Would sir want to look at tassels for his purchase?" The greeter asks and he shakes his head. "No thank you."

Money exchanges hands and he plays a slightly more difficult song on his new Flute. The greeter begins putting the other Flutes away but is clearly listening and enjoying the free performance he's giving the gathered Demons of this camp. As he finishes and puts the Flute into his sleeve and thus his Inventory, which he did to his other purchase. The greeter offered him a look at the rest of what they have, which he agreed with and does go through the contains that he's directed at.

And that's how he bought three slender knives of a simple appearance, a butcher knife, a pair of winter robes with one being dark gray and the other being a light blue, three traveler's robes that match his current robes in color, a straw hat, three water skins that are big enough to hold four liters, and then cooking supplies, including dry ingredients like flour and a small jar of oil for doing some frying, curious to see if he can't fry the monster boar meat at some point. It also caused him to sell more items in the form of roots, leaves, stems, and blooms, either bloomed or as buds to help refill his coin purse.

And so, he walks out of that camp having emptied out some of what's useless for things he can make use of along with having actual money to his name. Xing would find a nice spot in smaller coulee by evening, he'd done his best to travel a bit of the way viva tree tops. He hadn't encountered many monsters since leaving the camp, but assumes it might have to do with the high number of Demons within the area, the more... meek types and more valuable plants have been chased away, hunted, or been harvested.

So, once he's got his camp set up, Xing gives cooking a try, and isn't surprised that he gains said Skill by managing to cook some of the boar with hasty carved wooden sticks and sliced the meat up to create kabob, with no vegetables between the slices. The kabobs were a bit burnt but upon biting down on it does he realize that he's been hungry for some time now. "Right, role playing." He mutters and also realizes that he likely also have to do the other kind of business as well.

It's when he tried to sign out that he finds out that the Server is on a temporal speed up, as in, the time difference between in game time and real world time is a day per ten minutes in the real world and he can't log out until an hour had passed in real world, which is six days in game. The informative pop up also detailed that the Serve will close at 5 am in China and reopen at 7 am, which is 4 pm where he lives and the time the Serve will come back on is 6 pm. It had been a bit after 7 when he logged into the Server.

And so, he falls asleep. Hoping that he's in a safe enough spot, after all, given he's been awake for nearly two days. It was surprising how fast he fell asleep.

_ [^ _ ^] _/

"So... What did you end up making?" Asks Philip while sitting across from him while at the library of their school. "I mean, you know about mine! Liang Ye, rogue, con-man Cultivator."

He hums, knowing that's true. "Might as well wait for Garth and Pat. I don't want to share it more then I have too." Which wasn't long as the two arrive, sliding their packs under their respective chairs.

"Did he?" Pat asks and Philip shakes his head. "So... you going to spill? I mean, you know about ours." Garth points out.

Sighing, he replies, "Xin Xing, Demon." He gets pitying look from the three. "So, your stuck solo playing." Sums up Pat as she reaches out and pats his hand in consolation.

"I started out with a six in my RES but only a two in my Qi." He admits and there's a whistle from his two friends while Pat mutters a simple, "Lucky."

"I only had ones across my Mental." He continues. "My DEX was the highest with CON at the lowest. Which, looking back at how events ended out playing out, was likely why I'd been able to use my Acrobatics so effectively."

"Acrobatics?" Philip asks with a hint of bemusement while Pat looks a bit interested while Garth seem to working out why he'd pick such a Skill. "So, you just leap around in a fight?"

"Works very well when you're traveling from one tree to another." Is how he replies. "Just curious, did you guys pick the Skill that grants you the ability to read and write?" He doesn't recall their Characters perfectly, after all, they weren't his responsibility.

"Didn't need to." Pat admits. "You kind of need it to read Cultivation manuals as well as to write letters to try and join a Sect."

"Oh, huh, that's kind of interesting." He muses. "But then, I guess you don't start with a Qi ability."

"What? Wait, hold up, you get a Qi ability right off the bat?! How unfair!" Whines Philip and he remarks, "Demonic Qi at two."

"What was it?" Asks Garth curiously. "Fox Fire." He admits and wonders if he should share the list of Perks and Flaws he has due to having such a RES before deciding it's not something they need to know.

"Hmm, so, you couldn't use it a lot at the beginning then?" Pat muses and he nods. "Spend the first day sticking around where I spawned and just, doing things and collecting whatever looked valuable. Only to find out that I needed a bed or sleeping roll in order to log out."

"And then found out that you can't log out until nearly seven days had passed in game." Remarks Pat and he nods. "So, bandits?" She muses and he blinks before it dawns on him what she means.

"Nope, the Demons I killed didn't have money, just ore rocks and some clay pots for poisons." He corrects her impression. "I got money from selling the various items I picked up, mostly the ore rocks and various plant parts."

"Aarg, really? You picked up a bunch of rocks and sold them for actual money?" Philip moans and Garth gives a very fake look of sympathy along with a series of pats on a shoulder. "There there." Garth adds.

"I spawned in a cave on a mountain." He states with a shrug. "The Demon World is suppose to be more dangerous, so, ecology of that world kind of calls for it? It wasn't until noon of the second day did I encounter a traveling camp of Demons that weren't interested in attacking me. Was just glad they had what I wanted to buy along with buying what I was looking to sell."

"What did you end up buying?" Pat asks curiously and he lists everything besides the mention of the flute that had been his second purchase, after all, he didn't think it worth mentioning nor about how those Demons had gathered around as he was testing out various flutes.

"Just how much money did you earn to buy so many things? Demon goods are always marked up compared to Human sold goods." Philip states while Garth adds, "Got a wider selection though. No need for a black market."

"Hm, well, the most expensive would be the blossoms of Light Absorbing False Pansy." He admits, "Nearly three dozen of them, six gold and a bit of silver for each."

The mention of price per blossom, they each sport various looks of shock, surprise, wistfulness, and envy. "Well, damn. How'd you know they were that valuable?" Asks Garth, the first to recover his voice.

"Didn't know what they were, neither of my two Skills were Rated that high." He admits. "Which two?" Asks Pat.

"Appraisal and Lore: Demon Realm." He answers. "Neither were the ones I upped the Rating on." He admits.

"So, you did go with Appraisal, Barter, and Search like we suggested then?" Philip pipes in and he nods. "OK then, I hope you plan to make it up to us in some fashion in the future." Philip states and he merely smiles before glancing at the clock of the library.

Garth brings up the reason they were suppose to be visiting the library in the first place and thus, they reviewed the list of books they can pick from for a book report. He considers just what kind of book he would find interesting enough to read without forcing himself to. They leave their bags under their chairs as they went around the shelves to see the book covers and read the summary on the back.

_ [^ _ ^] _/

In the eight months since this Server, he'd learnt a lot of about Fox Demons along with learning that yes, Xin Xing's Fox Demon blood is notable in his appearance what with him having fuzzy ears, sharp canine looking teeth, and having the ability to manifest a fox tail. As for why he'd invested in learning about Fox Demons, it seems his Fox Demon blood is that of a sub-variant instead of that of a more common and jack of all trades type that is Common Fox Demon. The hint has to do with his grey coloring of hair, it signifies one of the two known mountain breed of Fox Demon which is, so creatively, called, Rock Fox Demon. Despite the element in the name, their Qi elemental is actually wind and their specialty is in illusions based upon sound, which covers music.

The second mountain Fox Demon is called Snow Fox Demon and they have white but instead of black marks they instead sport light blue, which notes them from the Ice Fox Demon, who have the typical black markings. Ice Fox Demons' primary elemental Qi is water with wind as a secondary while Snow Fox Demons' primary elemental Qi is wind with their secondary being water, their names do say what they have the easiest time creating when combining the two elements. Ice Fox Demons primarily live in the Northern Kingdom while Snow Fox Demons can be found where mountains are like his own, which means the two mountain breeds are often in conflict over said territory.

As for the other sub-variants of the Fox Demons are, Moss Fox Demon, Stone Fox Demon, Spiral Fox Demon, and Abyssal Fox Demon. The Moss Fox Demons are known to live in Jungles and sport dark green markings instead of black, the primary coat color being any. Stone Fox Demons are known for having grey coat without any black markings or lighter coat for their belly with them also just possessing the max of three tails and then their Qi nature being earth, which they use to turn their bodies into said element so that they can merge into earth and stone to travel through said stuff without a trace showing where they are within said material. Then there's Spiral Fox Demons come in orange with shades of yellow for markings, what's notable is the red spiral that's found either on their heads, chest, or lower back as for powers, they are also well known for having dual elemental nature, which is generally fire matched with some other one but it's not always. Finally, Abyssal Fox Demons sport total black coats with them possessing two different eye colors, they are known for either conjuring illusions of or having beyond the typical nine tails, and like their name suggests, they are commonly found in the Endless Abyss.

Letting out a sigh, Xing considers the Quest Board of the city. There's no real rating system to what's posted which means he's got to rely upon his own judgement. Thankfully, he's spent time not just studying up on Fox Demons but on learning other things that he thought would pay off.

There's a request for collecting five monsters, alive it seems. A living {Flesh Swimming Beetle} seems to be worth more then a dead one, strangely enough, but luckily, there's ways to encapsulate one using a particular Talisman and common tree sap. Having spent a lot of time and money on learning Demonic counterpoint of the general Cultivator Skills, he doesn't need to spend money on buying said Talisman as he can create his own. It's more of a question of being careful when it came to dealing with the frightfully dangerous and yet tiny bug as he didn't want one getting into his body, after all.

Given the ease of which said monster insect has with ignoring most organic material, Xing is in need of inorganic material for both footwear and what passes off as 'socks' of this particular game. It's a matter of finding a genuinely made without the maker cheating by having used something other then said material. He's hoping for boots, which means he could get away without having 'socks' made out of something similar, after all, it's rather expensive given that it's also a casual display of wealth by both powerful Demons and wealthy ones.

So ignoring that one, he continues reading. Most, upon skimming, are fetch or collecting requests. The few that weren't, well, seem to have them meeting with someone about a Quest. With a soft sigh, he selects the Quest concerning bringing back a mini statue from an old manor that belonged to a previous Eastern Duke, he's not sure which one given how restless said Kingdom is as there isn't an agreed to King or Emperor. The only given hint of what the statue is, has to do with it being tiger.

It's only when he checks through a book he owns about Directional Animals did he realize that tiger isn't a symbol of the east but the west direction. The symbol of a dragon is used for east, for the north is a turtle, and a bird for the south. Considering what he knows, the Western Kingdom hasn't had a structured governing body for nearly a thousand years. With the fall of the Pei Clan, which had been the main line descendants of the founder of the Kingdom, the name of whom he doesn't known but the Pei Clan had been a sub-variant of Tiger Demon, likely white in color given what he read about the Directional Animals, well, unless there's more to it then that?

Either way, Xing thinks that it'll be something interesting to do, after all, if this statue is still not found within this more then likely estate, it means that it's not been fully looted by many. It takes him nearly six weeks of travel to made it to into the Eastern Kingdom. He'd done a number of quick Quests along with being sure to go through the various self improvement Daily Quests. Of course, he log out and into throughout that time, done over three days with varying time played.

He'd been unsure if anyone else hadn't completed the Quest by the time he arrived within sight of the estate and he'd been unsure if he'd gotten the right place, so, he'd asked around among the locals that lived in a village near the estate. The history of the Copper Bell Mansion was simple, built by Duke Hua Ling, who was a plant Demon, who didn't care about the name, hence the seemingly silly name. As a plant Demon, the Duke didn't have a definite gender nor did they marry as that's not how the Duke's kind reproduces, didn't think of a different one other then the one the architect had put down as a project's name by the time it finish getting built.

The point of the Duke being a plant Demon is also why it got abandoned after... well, the final assassination attempt, it did succeeded but it also kind of didn't. Given the rampant vines that are trying to escape out of the property's barrier, the story goes that the Duke ended up reacting to the poison mist of the assassin by seemingly withering up. Then, as the assassin was waving to bring in whoever was waiting for a signal, the body exploded in new growth and it wasn't long before the whole manor gets covered by the Duke's new growth, roots digging in firmly the ground and in months, a great tree over takes the outside of the manor.

Various attempts had been made to cut into the manor and the plants surrounding the gigantic tree that had been the former Duke Hua Ling for various reasons only saw the tree giving off a glow that encouraged the various plants to mutant or evolve into more dangerous kinds. So, it became challenging to even get at the tree, let alone trying to get into the encapsulated manor. There isn't a lot of information about the former servants and he wonders if they managed to get out or if they died within the manor.

It makes sense that those servants that hadn't been at the manor at the time of the assassination lived pass what happened to the manor, it's the ones that had been in their respective rooms that causes him to wonder if they could have lingered after death, transforming into ghosts or their corpses becoming wandering dead, he knows from listening to his friends that it's something that happens in the Human Realm of the game. He hasn't encountered any restless dead in the Demon Realm but it could be just a matter of time and that time is now.

It was pretty late when he finishes with his information gathering and speaks with the only tavern about providing some entertainment for a meal and drink. Many seem to sit silently as he plays his {Blooming Ten Year Bamboo Flute}, it's hardly the first time he's done this kind of thing and Demons seem to be more incline to be friendly with him. For himself, he's come to find playing music as relaxing and de-stressing activity.

As the evening ends, a waitress brings him that free meal and drink along with praising his playing. Xing is sure to be polite while talking with her before she hurries away. Alone, he eats, sampling each of the dishes before taking a sip out of the drink, it burns a bit going down and it's then that he realizes it's liquor he'd been served.

Oh yea, drinking age being... Huh, is there even one in this game? Xing wonders. Still, he does his best to eat between sips, as he finishes, he downs the last of the liquor before heading to the room he paid for upon arriving in this town.

Getting ready for bed has him ordering a bath and being sure to take care of his long hair. Once he's managed it, he blows out the candle and gets into the bed. Upon waking, Xing bushes his hair and then changes his under robes and then begins to add the other layers for his outfit. Pulling out the basket he collects the layers of yesterday's outfit, it's not full yet so he has a bit before he'll need to do his laundry or to play others to do it for him, it depends if he's in just feeling lazy or is busy.

Then comes putting his hair in a work ponytail and going through his various knives, a war fan, and a staff. The staff was for trap checking, it's the ninth one he's owned and unlikely to be the last one, given the nature of the task he used it for. Next was going through his stock pile of Demonic Qi Tools and Talismans plus going through the book of Beginner Arrays, it's the Demon edition, of course. Once that's done, he double checks his supply of various papers, inks, and brushes.

As he can't ever get rid of that one Flaw, there isn't much point in carrying healing potions, balms, but then, he doesn't really need anti-poisons and the like in turn. Given how little pain he'd felt throughout various fights, he had to check the Perk list in search of an explanation and it seemed that he's had Pain Resistance since the beginning, which makes him really wonder if RES was a broken Stat. I'll figure out a way around that Qi Healing flaw one of these days. Xing promises himself.

Once everything it packed up into his Inventory, he heads down and orders breakfast. What he orders is whatever local specialty there is for congee, eating something light given what he's going to be doing today. Done, he pays and leaves to begin scouting about the barrier. He'll be seen leaving the area this morning before sneaking back, after all, he didn't know weather he's being paranoid about this Quest but it seemed like a good idea to stay cautious.

_ [^ _ ^] _/

"So, how's things as Xin Xing?" Pat asks as they take a break from doing their homework. They're in her parents' kitchen, grabbing some snacks and refilling their respective glasses with soda.

"Eh?" He hadn't expected her to bring it up, after all, it's not like he's playing in the same Realm. It's generally Garth, Pat, and Philip talking about shared adventures, gossiping, and making plans. He's pretty sure they have their own Group Chat for doing just that.

"Come on, Aaron, you hardly talk about your time on the Server." Pat continues and he... guesses that's right. "Unless..." There's something odd that flickers in her eyes.

"Unless?" He parrots back with a questioning tone. Confusion likely evident upon his face.

"Well, Demons... They are strong believers of Might makes Right." Pat replies and that doesn't really explain anything in his opinion as he's fairly sure that in the Human World of the game, it's pretty much the same, only they do it in a more cloak and dagger way then Demons.

"I'd say that Demons are more straight forward compared to Cultivators or Humans." He reasons out loud. "As for Xin Xing, things are going rather strange since I collected this tiger statue from a former Duke's estate."

"Tiger statue?" Pat inquires, gently encouraging him to continue to on about the topic. Humming as he takes downs a bit of his soda before he begins to elaborate upon the issue, "So, you know about Directional Animals in Chinese Mythology? Tiger, turtle, dragon, and bird?"

"Sounds familiar." Pat admits and he nods. "Tiger is west, turtle is north, dragon is east, and bird is south. It's also something Japan shares it as well." He explains.

"So, there was this miniature figurine of the White Tiger and it's a Relic of the Western Demon Kingdom." He continues as he gently swirls the contains of his glass as he tries to organize his thoughts concerning his particular snag for Xin Xing. "It was on a request board and I thought it would be nice to see another part of the Demon Realm, ok? So, I wasn't in a hurry, not worried about time as someone else could have already picked it as a Quest."

Pat states, "Ok. So, did someone?"

"No." He says as a sigh. "You see, the Eastern Duke who'd owned it, well, they were a plant Demon." He looks over at Pat to see if she knows that there could be plant Demons.

"Ok? How was that a problem?" Pat asks curiously as he takes a sip of his soda.

"So, they don't have any particular gender and don't really have body Heirs." He explains. "But, well, there was this assassin attempt on this Duke and went in both directions at the same time? The Duke wasn't able to continue on as a Duke but nobody could loot the estate due to how the Duke's body engulfed the manor, making into like a huge tree in the end."

"Then, as people tried to get into the mansion, they'd cut through the overgrown plants and in doing so, those plants began to either mutant or evolve into higher kinds." He continues as he recalls how thankful he was to have so many Resistances to so many things. "Many had become able to induce aphrodisiac reaction in various kinds of Demons along with classic poisons with various kinds delivery systems or acid sprayers."

"Well, at least you had plenty of anti-elixirs once you saw the estate?" Pat muses and he snorts before stating in a dry tone, "Ah, did I mention I started with a six in my Resistance? And that I started off with a rather robust list of Resistance Perks? Oh, and two Resistance Flaws."

"Poison being one of the Perks then?" Pat muses and he nods. "Yip, and one of my Flaws has to do with Qi Medicine Resistance." He admits, "With it, I hadn't seen much point in investing in healing stuff."

There's a look of sympathy from Pat. "Sounds rough. I can't imagine playing without that kind of hindrance."

"I'm looking into it." He admits as he thinks about the few Clans that sport a regenerative trait that's strong enough to regrow limbs. "Oh, did mention that I did some research about Fox Demons and found out that there are sub-variants? The kind of Fox Demon I'm descended from is call Rock Fox Demon? Seven Demonic breed total."

"Anything special about being one?" Pat asks and he replies, "Wind for Qi Nature and gray coloring." He doesn't share the tidbit about audio being the medium for illusions.

"So, did you get the statue?" Pat asks as he finishes drinking his soda. As he refills the glass, his thoughts return to the subject of said tiger statue. "Yea, I got in." He debates over sharing how he found his way into that manor or about what he encountered once he got in.

"I found the statuette that was made out of some kind of white steel and had once had painted black stripes." The metal's name ended up having the triple question mark in brackets so he's unsure of its name. "Which brought up the optional Quest to pursue the Kingship of the Western Demon Kingdom and when I declined it when it popped up, another optional Quest is a Kingmaker quest-line. They also show up daily upon waking up in the morning."

"And people are hunting you down for it?" Pat muses and he nods. "Yea but I also can't sell it as it's bound to me, it seems that picking it up with your own dry blood on a hand was a bad idea." Stated in a very dry tone as he glares at his left hand, it was the hand that had said dry blood.

"So, you're still soloing and now anyone looking to rule the Western Demon Kingdom has to go through you." Pat muses and he nods with a sigh, a hand running through his hair before rubbing behind his nose. "And do to this being a world changing item, if I die, I die permanently." He admits as his hand goes down and he looks down into his glass.

"The reason your not dead yet has to do with the lack of accepting the King path." Pat muses and muses, "Philip would be so jealous over such a situation, wishing it had been his Liang Ye in that position."

He hums in agreement. "Yea, Philip's gotten pretty power hungry ever since Liang Ye got that fragment of that mirror." The name of the mirror isn't one he knows off the top of his head. "He really wants to use that mirror to create his own pocket dimension." For what purpose, he doesn't really know but could only guess. Likely for the prestige of being the first player to have recreated such a Legendary item and having something like it. He muses.

"Well, it's not like Garth doesn't have his own plans concerning launching his Gongsun Shu into the spot light." Pat admits before looking at the clock display upon the microwave. "I think we should head back up, we still have a bit more to write."

Putting the lid back on the bottle, he puts it into the fridge while Pat finishes with her soda bottle, which he also puts into the fridge. Soon enough, they pick up whatever snacks they came down for. Moving to the side, he let Pat head up the stairs first. Walking back to the office/study that belongs to Pat's dad.

_ [^ _ ^] _/

Looking at the half-Demon, one Luo Binghe, Xing wonders for the first time if he shouldn't be thankful for that one troublesome Flaw as {Heavenly Demon's Blood Parasite} counts as a Qi Medicine technique. Thus the idea of the food being laced with the Heavenly Demon's blood doesn't bother him as much as it does the others gathered within the room. All having been summoned concerning the situation of the Western Demon Kingdom.

In game, it's been years since he came into possession of that statuette that is also a {Relic of Kingship}. Then again, the Server had been spend up to help progress the story of this Server's game and thus the two Realms of the game. The fact that he'd been solo playing for so long, it's still something of a surprise that his Xin Xing is still alive and whole compared to what's happened concerning the circumstances that happened concerning that mirror fragment that Philip's character had and the execution for Evil Cultivation that Garth's character had been found guilty of practicing with Pat's character getting handed a prison sentence for her ignorance about Garth's character's actions.

It would be half a year before whoever owns the Server allows those players who suffered perma-death of their character to create another one. If there were space for Human characters, those who'd played Demons got first choice to decide if they wanted to try being a Cultivator or pursuing some other career path besides that. Which saw Garth and Philip making Demons, Garth's Demon is named Nanguo Zhou and is of feline Demon descent and Philip's second character gets named Ye Wang and is descendant of a breed of Lizard Demon, which are generally of the Southern Demon Kingdom. As for Pat, she's just waiting out her sentence instead of going through with suicide so she can make a second character.

And so, as the tension continues to build as few of the various Demons refuse to accept the hospitality of their Host. Given the previous sneers and comments before the half-Demon entered into the room, it was fairly clear they mistrust Luo Binghe's intentions to try and rectify this matter. Many thinking that he'll just lay claim to the empty post himself or set up a figurehead of a King who'll answer to him.

While he's incline to agree with that sentiment, Xing just wanted to get this issue over with and be rid of the statuette. Being so paranoid, it might have done wonders for his incentive to learn the typical Art that is Illusions but with the Status of {Stressed} he ate more and didn't have very restful sleep at night. He's also fairly sure he'd have been driven to drink if he could get intoxicated from drinking liquor or turned to some other drugs. But since that wouldn't work for him, he's become rather dependent in musical pursuits to de-stress plus, learning new instruments helped him hide his identity as many know him as a Flute playing Fox Demon that sports gray hair.

There's been only a bit of small talk going on as he spends time sampling the various offered food and drinks. Waiting for things to get on track concerning the issue they were summoned for. The son of the King of the Northern Demon Kingdom arrives and seems to glide towards the man who defeated Mo Yu, whispers into Luo Binghe's ear a report of some kind. Once done, Mo Yu stands up straight and waits for a signal of either dismissal or to be given some order.

A slight gesture and Mo Yu leans back down, this time it's Luo Binghe who whispers instructions to Mo Yu. "As you command." The Ice Demon states before gliding out of the room.

"Gentlemen and Ladies, it's time for us to discuss the matter that brought us here." The half-Demon addresses the room with a seemingly charming smile. Given the way most react to the smile, it seems that Luo Binghe really was nice looking, if one likes men.

Many eyes flicker at him and he pulls the statuette out of his Inventory, getting up a bit as he places it a bit more to the center of the table. Settling back down, the various gazes are now on the statuette, which still sports faded and chipped painted stripes. The eyes are purple gemstones while he still doesn't know the definitive name of the metal it's made out of. As his gaze lands upon Luo Binghe, the other seems to be staring at him, the mark upon the forehead glows lazily along with eyes being the same red as that mark.

Then they break looking at one another and he leans a bit more into his chair. The half-Demon is rather intense after all, he wonders a bit about what kind of life he'd lived before ending up in the Endless Abyss. There's a lot of rumors about Luo Binghe's background, but there's likely some truth to be found in some of them. Given the ease of which the other uses the Demon sword that's named {Xin Mo} with confidence, there's history between Luo Binghe and Demon Saint Sha Hualing, and he's rather distasteful when it comes to dealing with Demons as he'd been a member of a Cultivator Sect.

He's not sure when various Demons piped in about their qualifications only that as he comes out of his musings over the rumors centering around Luo Binghe but it was growing in volume. Most claiming blood connection to the Pei Clan or about boasting their family/clan's accomplishments. It's not long before bids began to come forth and he never liked when that came up, as though money was all that's needed to make one a King.

Well, I guess it could have, if it weren't for the fact that it devolves into threats to just kill me and claim it before I ever thought about a price tag. Xing muses to himself. His eyes drift towards Luo Binghe instead of the statuette and wonders about the man's motives for taking the role of Kingmaker. His gaze changes to taking in the various paintings that decorate the room and then works on a particularly odd techinque so he can see the paintings or decorations behind him without turning around, it's a self targeted hybrid of Divination and an Illusion to do so. It's a tricky visual Illusion.

"This Lord is rather curious about Xin Xing's claim." He blinks before starting a bit as it seems he's just been dragged into the conversation. Blinking as he let's the Illusion go to stare at Luo Binghe, his mind rather blank and thus, he doesn't really have an answer to what seems to be an inquiry or an order.

"Pardon? Lord Luo Binghe?" He voices as he's not sure if he heard it correctly. Then his mind takes in the statement before stating as politely as possible, "This one isn't interested in the position nor does this one think this humble one's opinion should carry any weight upon this matter as this one is a mere wandering musician."

"It's been this Lord's understanding that this statuette is bound to one such as yourself." Luo Binghe replies. "Such relics, this Lord has heard, don't just bind themselves to someone at random. It this this Lord's understanding that if the applicant isn't suitable, they are drained of their Qi and Life."

Eh? Xing's gaze flickers to the metal statuette. There's an answer he could give, he's sure, but saying it's likely due to his RES likely would be breaking character. Which, he's been fairly good with, having only receive two separate warnings about it throughout his time playing on this Server. After all, he's very much a foreigner in regards to the target audience and the Culture that's within this game isn't one he's typically exposed to never mind live within. It's only due to very good translation programs that he's able to understand the language within this game.

"This one isn't sure if that is truly the case and thus, must bow to Lord Luo Binghe's superior knowledge upon this topic." It seems to be the only thing he could say in this situation. "This one does not feel as though the mantle that the statuette bestows is a right fit upon this one."

And why did it seem that his reply seem to bemuse the half-Demon? There's a slight up taking of the lips and there's something about the manner of which the Demon Lord, soon to be King of the Southern Demon Kingdom, says, "This one will take that into consideration."

As the various eyes shift from him, he wonders when the total of the Demon Realm will bow down to Luo Binghe as Emperor of the Realm. Likely some time after he claims the Southern Throne. Xing thinks to himself as the others, once more, being to sway Luo Binghe's regard in the matter of Kingship of the Western Kingdom.

For all that Demons have such a wide variety of traditions and polite manners, third person speaking continues to be regarded as proper and formal manners. It's the same in the Human Realm. He recalls the complaints of his RL friends.

Soon enough, the evening comes to an end and before leaving, Xing makes a showing of stowing away the statuette into his sleeve. He knows that if he didn't, about thirty minutes and it'll be in his Inventory, having vanished from where he left it. Once in his room, he begins preparations for security before he makes use of the wooden tub that's filled with water, a simple use of a Talisman and the water is rather hot, but by the time he's ready to enter it, it should cool down enough to be merely hot warm instead of just hot.

Stretching a bit before entering into the water, Xing manifests his twin tails before entering into the tub. It takes him a bit to clean his tails and his own hair, being sure to use the right items to ensure it remains healthy and nice looking. As he gets some under robes on, he begins preparing his own security measures concerning his stay within this room for the night.

He is sure to place the {Minor Scrying Mirror} on the inner door of the wardrobe before plastering only six {Temporary Space Expansion Talisman} within it. It'll take a bit before the space will be the right size for himself, so he continues work on the room, particularly with the bed. The Illusions that he has the most trouble with has to do with death scenes as he has to account for methods on top of how powerful the assassin doing it is. The more powerful, the harder to fool, particularly given they might be expecting an Illusion given it's known he's a Fox Demon, what's unknown to the majority at large is that he's a sub-variant on top of that.

Setting up the {Wind up Comb Music Box} between the bed and the wall, there's a simple Talisman warped around the casing. He sets up the trigger Talismans at the door and the window. At the hidden door that he found, he sets up a Barrier Array that he will leave up for the next few days they'll be discussing this matter. While Xing would love to check the ceiling for another hidden door, he isn't a Cultivator and he's yet to find an Array that can have something as small as a sword float in the air with someone on it.

The final trap has to do with the fake statuette that's on what passes as a night stand. There's obvious traps and hidden traps about the room. All of which are simple as he'll have to remove them come morning, before the servants assigned to this room arrives to do so.

And so, he enters into the wardrobe and unrolls his bedroll. With an Alarm Talisman upon his left wrist set to go off two hours before dawn. Xing does his best to just... fall asleep.

_ [^ _ ^] _/

It's the pounding of the door that wakes him, there's a servant standing there once he puts on something over his night robes. The servant informs him that his presence is required and then comments that he'll send someone over to help him dress. Blinking a bit blankly at the servant's back, Xing didn't have time to finally realize what that implies and as his face heats up, he shuts the door.

The room he spent the night in isn't the one he was led to. Practically a minute of being in that room, Mo Yu arrived into the room viva a portal, picked him up before stepping through another portal and left him in the room. And thus, whatever assassination attempt that was going to happen wasn't going to be targeting the correct room, nor would he be within the room for them to find. So, without worrying about needing to set up his own security, Xing takes a quick look to realize it's likely a servant's room, which likely means he's in the Servant Quarters.

Shaking his head, he resists the urge to yawn as he walks around. With a sigh, he considers what to wear viva going through his Inventory. While he would like to have a bath, as he didn't have one before going to bed, he unties his hair from it's sleeping style. As he begins to comb his hair, there's a quick knock on the door before someone enters, the servant is on the short side and might be a young teen at most, a preteen at the least plus being a maid given the cut of the uniform.

This young servant's ears are on the side of the heads, reminds him of a rodent's. Eyes are slits with their color being purple with the face seems to suggest a muzzle or snout. He notes that there isn't a notable tail, or if there is one, it might be a tiny thing that could be hidden under the cloths. The teeth he glimpses seems to be a mixture of rodent and smallish fangs.

Soon enough, the servant takes charge and takes over combing his hair. Once it's done, they move onto his robes and then on styling the hair, he gets asked for something better then a hair tie. It takes him a bit to pull out the collection he's been gifted throughout his time in the game. The servant tuts at the selection before sighing while picking out a rather well carved hair piece that's made out of {Jade Maple Wood} with a hair stick of {Thorn Abyssal Oak} with white gold inlay that goes throughout the hair stick.

The hair is in a style that's rather complicated, likely the most complicated he'd worn since he arrived in for this discussion. He's not sure why the servant gives him an expectant look as he puts away the hair accessories into his sleeve. "What?" He finally asks.

"Jewelry." He isn't sure what to make of that statement but, sadly, he does have pieces he's also been gifted. "What kind?" Xing asks with a bit of bafflement.

"Just... all of it. I'll pick out something." The servant states after sighing and rubbing her nose bridge. Giving him a good look at the tips of the fingers that has natural black 'nail' about the finger tip, the thumb doesn't have the same on it.

And so he does, necklaces, bracelets, rings, brooches, belt accessories, rings, and things that could clamp on his ears, leaving the actual earring in the Inventory. His ears are not pierced nor does he want to pierce them. The servant hums at the collection, some were wooden, others stone, and then there's a few made out of various metals, most of the metal used is either gold or silver.

Xing isn't that surprise that wood and gold pieces at considered with a great deal of intent. He feels like a doll as he begins trying on various selections that the servant picks out, even spinning when asked. He's fairly sure that this is taking far too long but she seems to be rather firm about making him presentable, which only causes him to wonder about what kind of act is going to be put on about whoever it was that was allowed to enter into the estate to 'assassinate' him.

It's a bit over an hour before he leaves the simple room he spent the night in. About his left wrist is a dark wooden bracelet with a clear gemstone, it's carved like a eight legged dragon, the name of the dragon escapes him. On his belt is an ornament sporting a black stone talisman with a tassel that's a neutral grey strings. Right wrist sports a golden linked bracelet that has tiny ruby gemstones on every second link. There isn't anything hanging from his neck nor about his throat.

While the servant clearly displeased at the lack of make up, she seems rather displeased that she couldn't enhance his natural features. It seems she be-mourns that she can't enhance his eye lashes. Still, he's handed off to a different and older servant, one that possesses a monkey while also sporting horns that wouldn't look out of place on a ram or goat, only they are a polished dark red. The eyes of his guide are reptilian gold and green.

He's lead out of the Servant Quarters and out into a courtyard before entering into the main manor. Xing gets something of a tour of more of the manor as he's lead back to the Guest Wing. He gets more then a few casual looks from guards and from the servants, he blames his Fox Demon heritage for giving him a very human appearance.

Xing is proven correct, that what's about to happen was going to be a pageant as he's right on time for the dramatic arc of the act. He listens with half an ear to Luo Binghe's antics and the reactions from the other guests. It doesn't some as much of a shock when one of the guests finally breaks his polite mask to lunge at Xing with a very thin sword, an example of the 'mythical' soft sword, that had been hidden under the wide cloth belt.

He moves to the side and is sure to break the wrist upon catching it, forcing the soft sword to fall to the ground. He stares into the other Demon's eyes, which are a silver grey. "Forgive this Lord for not reacting quickly enough in defense of honorable guest." It's not long before he lets go of the wrist as the other Demon is lifted into the air viva the neck, which has the hand of Luo Binghe about it.

"This one must apologize for being bring trouble into Lord Luo's estate." Xing says, it's said respectfully and politely. It's more for social graces then because he actually feels like that. Being sure to do the right bow directed at Luo Binghe.

Lines in a play. Xing muses to himself as Luo Binghe ignores the final pleads of the attacker is giving while slowly get choked out. Being more alert, he does his best to keep watching the crowd of watching guests, figuring that someone might try something while this was going on. All the world is a stage and we are mere actors playing out our parts.

It seems that none had the nerve to act out and as the body drops to the floor, Luo Binghe addresses the others while sporting some Demonic Qi slowly moving off of his body in the manner of fire. Threatening tone and body language, all designed to cow those around himself. And Xing notices lust flaring up ever so often in the eyes of those other Demons, it wasn't just in the women's eyes but a few of them men's own.

Even he finds it hard to not shiver at the sight and listening to that tone, Luo Binghe's Demonic Qi is heavy in the air, seemingly causes gravity to grow heavier and heavier until it's like he couldn't remain standing, that any more pressure and he'd be on his knees or flat on his butt. He truly doesn't wish to be on the receiving end of this Demon Lord's fury. He's only got two tails, after all, he's no match for this half-breed. He knows that Heavenly Demons have been known to unite the four Kingdoms of the Demon Realm, taking the position of Emperor with all bowing down to them, looking to carry their favor.

It's why it's so widely believed that Luo Binghe is looking to follow into his various ancestors' foot prints. There's been a few Heavenly Demons who died before doing so, with many become famous. Although he doubts that history recorded how it went down properly. Between being immune to most poisons, it's their regeneration that's the roadblock for killing them in a duel, never mind with armies. It's most likely through assassination that those few Heavenly Demons died to, poison or some other, likely decried unhanded, means.

And so, Luo Binghe pronounces his decision after reigning in his Demonic Qi and as they all recover from such an experience, he states, "This Lord has given it much thought and given the under handed manners that have been employed, decides to support Xin Xing's candidacy as the carrier of the {Bright Steel Tiger of the Western Rule}." What a mouthful. Xing thinks before it really registers what Luo Binghe had just done.

"What?" He states but it's drowned out by much louder protests who clearly forgot about what just happened just seconds ago. Hold on, since when did I throw my name into this? He mentally complains as he finds it rather hard to work his mouth plus it was dry, likely due to being open. His lips moved but nothing was said.

I don't want a kingdom to rule! I'm not playing this game to try and manage anything besides myself! This is suppose to be about me not doing empire building! Like, of any kind! Xing thinks as he face palms his mouth after closing it with a soft click of his teeth.

In what way have I shown myself to be a leader of men? Err... of Demons? He wonders to himself. Or power hungry. Or ambitious. Or... well, anything besides being a good musician and survivor?

But there's no way Luo Binghe is going to change his mind. Of that, Xing is sure. The man, the half-breed is known to be stubborn and is beginning to be rather ruthless when it comes to ensuring what he wants to happen to happen. Still, he's not fully sure when he's been guided out of that hall, doesn't really remember being told to follow either. And yet, he's in a rather spacious office that he's fairly sure is belonging to Luo Binghe.

It takes him a bit to calm himself down, his fingers twitching as though he was playing an instrument. Focusing on his breathing, his eyes being closed, he can pretend he's playing a calming tune. When the door opens, he listens for it to close before opening his eyes and looking over his shoulder before turning his whole body around to give a proper bow, "Lord Luo."

Once he's held it for the polite amount, he straightens and Luo Binghe moves to sit down behind the desk. The look is rather hard to read. That it's just the two of them, it causes a bit of unease and he waits for Luo Binghe to break the silence.

"This Luo Binghe recalls hearing Xin Xing play nearly a year ago." He's a bit surprise at the admission. He also has an idea of when, due to him only using his actual name during more populated celebrations.

" The Festival of Spice and Wine ?" It was held once a decade at Bone Mills' Ridge. Spicy food and various kinds of alcohol, it wasn't just rice wine like was typical to China and Japan, but fruits, grains, potatoes, and types of honey.

He'd played his signature flute, the one he bought on his second day of playing. Xing had played many tunes, even ended up singing once a night for the three nights of the festival. He muses, "Lord Luo must have visited briefly as this musician does not recall anyone mentioning Lord Luo's presence."

"This Lord did not want the attention that doing so would bring if this Lord had announced his intentions to participate in the festival." In other words, he didn't want people making plans to try and assassinate him or challenge him to a dual. Xing muses.

"This musician hopes that Lord Luo found his playing to his satisfaction." He states and Luo Binghe's lips quirk upwards. "This Lord found Xin Xing's playing to be very satisfying. And this Lord wishes for Xin Xing to play him a tune before we begin to discuss how to begin bringing the Western Kingdom to accept Xin Xing's ascension to Kingship over said Kingdom."

Xing politely bows before producing his {Blooming Ten Year Bamboo Flute}. And so, he plays something that'll take a bit to play in full. In doing so, he hopes to steel himself and to put off the discussion as much as he's able to.

Epilogue

He is nineteen when Proud Immortal Demon Way gets released. He'd been nearly fifteen when he signed up for the Server that would get recorded, the records were what is used to make said series. The end of the Server had been when he'd been seventeen and it would be some time before he'd been contacted concerning Xin Xing's casting role, as it were.

His parents got involved along with other parties due to... well, given how involved he'd become concerning Luo Binghe's rule, yea, his Xin Xing would be a center player when it came to the Demon Realm Arc and so he had to be contacted. Given he'd been a minor when he'd played as Xin Xing, yea, his parents had to get involved, although, it seems that both of his parents had been more aware of the sexual nature that could come up then he'd been, they figured it would be a safe way for him to experience such things and... well, given the minor... ah, harem? Of admirers he'd accumulated upon ascending to Kingship, never mind the random admirers he'd had before.

Yes, it does seem that he'd had admirers due to not just being a decent fighter and Talisman knowledge but, more due to his ability as a musician on top of it all. It seems that being one or the other was more common but being both? The lack of visitation to the Human World seems to cause him to be even more impressive? That he also learnt other instruments?

Not that he ever had a... roll in the hay? I think that's how dad put it. Nope, he'd stayed a virgin until the end of the Server.

It had taken some time to work out an agreement involving Xin Xing along with any need of him making appearance concerning the promotion of the game mod, whether his Character will be part of it as a NPC, and, then, any appearance of he himself or participating in any extra content concerning PIDW. Which is why he's attending the premiere online event that will see the first three episodes being released and them doing a bit of Q&A between breaks or pauses when one of three Hosts decide to do so. Given that the Server had been open for people throughout the world, those that could group up for the streaming premiere, they did.

Not that he'd be in company as there had only been another three from various parts of North, Central, and South America, besides himself being in Western USA, there's one was in one of the Territories of Canada, somewhere in Mexico, and the other in Chile. The Canadian is the Player of one Gongyi Xiao, who's a Cultivator and former Head Disciple of Huan Hua Palace, who ascended to Sect Leader near the end of the Server's timeline. The Player from Mexico's Character is Yang Yixuan, the only Disciple hand picked by the War God of Bai Zhan Peak. The Player from Chile's Character is one Jin Zhao, Head Disciple of An Ding Peak.

And so, as he sips from his glass of water, computer finishes with its updates thus it begins booting up, he's still got nearly fifty minutes before the pre-show part of the event begins. Which should take an hour and half. He's going to have to go over the settings and ensure that everything is up and running with a few techs that will also be in charge of arranging the streams from the Americas. After nearly twenty minutes, he's joined into a video chat with Jin Zhao, who he smiles a bit and greets by introducing himself, the thirty something year old does the same.

Minutes tick by and they chat lightly about anything, really. About fifteen minutes, the other two are brought into the chat, again, introductions are made. There's some light chatting for almost five minutes before they change chats. Quick intros are had, it's not long before the pre-show begins.

He can only hope that he doesn't embarrass himself.

(The pre-show premiere went over well! The next day, the rest of the series is release. Which is a lot of episodes.)

(When the fans wrote their own fan fiction, many pairing would spring up and, unsurprisingly, Xin Xing would be one of the fan favorites to be shipped with any cannon or author's OCs. It wouldn't be until his friend Pat bring up one of the more popular stories that Aaron would become aware of just how popular of a bottom Xin Xing is portrayed. It caused him much embarrassment and, later, teasing by many among his friend circle along with family.)

((The game mod would be release three years after the release of the PIDW due to many, many problems. Many of those who'd had Characters in that Server would be paid to continue playing those Characters. The reason should be its own story.))

Extra List of Character and Payer Info

Character = Player

Xin Xing = Aaron

Gongsun Shu(Dead), Nanguo Zhou = Garth

Yan Mei = Patty, Pat for short

Liang Ye(Dead), Ye Wang = Philip

Different World, Similar Lives: Naruto

I don't own Naruto! Set in a Magical Game Universe! No Chakra or Tailed Beasts!

Ruto studies the object that's hovering above the box he'd opened. He didn't know where it came from, the box had been to his left and nothing seems to hint where it came from. Upon opening the box, this ball of black had been resting within and then, it slowly began to change, the black transforming into a navy blue as red, white, and yellow dots begin to litter the surface, not all that different then a starry night sky.

It began to float as one point of yellow became the focus upon it, reminding Ruto of the sun. It's yet to do anything else and he's rather reluctant to touch it. Chewing on his lower lip in worry, he glances around a bit more but it's early morning and few people are walking the streets, going about their own business.

Finally, he's unable to fend off his curiosity and the itch to feel the orb that's just floating there, clearly something expensive and yet, isn't sure it why it's with him. Ruto isn't sure if it's the right course of action and yet, he does touch it. Then . . .

- + - O - + -

Standing in a space that's mostly white but there's soft glows of yellow that seem to be like mist about him. For some reason, Ruto doesn't feel . . . He just feels safe? Like nothing could hurt him here?

Then, a pair to people appear, a man sporting blond hair and blue eyes. The second is a woman with long red hair and gray blue eyes. They are wearing cloths he's seen visiting Warrior Mages wear and he swallows as he feels rather out of place, he's a street urchin after all, he's got no parents nor would his parents be in the same league as this pair.

"Naruto... Son, I can only hope you weren't given this particular Orb of Unity but if that is so, then it seems we both are dead and you have just turned eight years old." The man states and he flinches at the mention of Orb of Unity. "So, Happy Birthday son and I trust that you'll be able to request the next few days off from Novice School to deal with the ordeal you're about to undergo."

"And if they know what's good for them, they better allow it." The woman states there's a dark look that crosses her face. Although it's gone quickly as the woman smiles, "As you should known, as one of the last member of Uzumaki Clan, you've got a lot of expectations upon your shoulders and thus, this Orb of Unity is in the process of taking stock of what you known and what you need to know."

Uzumaki Clan? Ruto wonders. Clan suggests a Magical Legacy that stretches over two thousand years of age. While the term Family is used for those that have survived two hundred years.

His guts clench as he gets a rather bad feeling that something about this isn't what it should be. After all, how could he be a member of a Clan given his life so far? As he runs a hand through his hair, he is a bit startled by the fact his hair seems to be blond and is confused, typically, his hair is generally brown...

"We just want to tell you that no matter what you do in your life, that even though we were not around to see you grow up, that you know we love you, baby!" The woman says and the man nods in agreement.

What they talk about after that declaration of love isn't something Ruto could follow. The people they are talking of, particularly fondly, and of the places mentioned... He's never been and he's unsure if things are about to get better or worse, but he also was struggling with the idea that... that... this might be his actual parents.

Ruto doesn't want to believe it, doesn't want to let himself hope it so, but, what little he knows, you can not activate an Orb of any kind unless it was designed to allow you to do so. He's not sure what Unity means, the more common Orb that he's heard people purchasing from Mages are generally Orbs of Glory, which is used to pass along family stories of past members, history really. The other that they might buy is Orbs of Fortune, which are used to pass along family recipes and list of properties, maybe even secret cashes that previous members had created.

At least, that's the impression Ruto gets from what little he's heard. Given few are willing to answer questions of an unwanted orphan, or giving the correct information. Soon enough, he notices that red has been added to the yellow that's whirling about him in a wispy form.

Finally, the pair give their farewells, letting him know that the process will be starting soon. As they vanish, something pops up and the end part of the right keeps changing. Looking up and away from the sides, he notices that there is a starry sky above his head.

\- + - O - + -

As he wakens, Ruto... no, Naruto finds his head pounding and his whole body tingling. Groaning, as his vision swims and he begins to note the ringing in his ear. Hunger and thirst don't help him at this point, never mind exhaustion but Naruto isn't able to sleep. He's too tired to sleep.

As nobody have stumbled upon him, looking about, the spent orb is resting upon its place within the box. It's a dull white gray, all of its reserves spent in transferring not just Clan history but basic knowledge on various subjects that he would have learnt if he hadn't been abandoned on the streets. Just thinking about all of that knowledge makes his stomach turn and his head pound even more.

So, focusing on personal details, Naruto is now aware of his name, his parents' names, and the lineage of his mother's Clan. That he's not eight years old is rather interesting and recalling something, stating out loud, " Profile ."

Name: Naruto Uzumaki

Age: 8

Day of Birth: Oct. 10th

Class: Mage

Class Lv: 1

Out of Class Lv: 3

Overall Lv: 4

Job: N/A

STR: 8

DEX: 12

CON: 10

INT: 9

WIS: 10

CHA: 6

Academic Skills List

Magic Skills List

Physical Skills List

List of Equipment **-

Nothing bound

He manages to lift his hand and tap the up facing arrow for each of his Skills Lists. There's a lot of N/A among the Academic and Magic Skills but his Physical allows him to see his current Ranking in most. Those Skills he just absorbed are still needing time to settle within his brain.

As he lets out a sigh, his personal Profile vanishes as he lost interest. There's not much he can do, so Naruto merely waits for it to become bearable before getting up to start looking for food and heading for the well to grab some water to drink. The sun is rather high in the sky and with nothing better to do, he dozes, doing his best to think of nothing.

/ - o f - **

Naruto slips through the gates that allow entry into the Prestige Dungeon known as Vilk's Lair. He's here due to a Locate Object Spell that he'd used to locate a missing Clan Heirloom . One Izumi Uzumaki died within this Dungeon and it was going through The Archive of Province Faiasutomu (Goggle translate: Firestorm) that he even learnt about said cousin. It had taken months to get that information, after all, that cousin died over two hundred years thus he did have a lot to read through.

He's fifteen years old as of two months ago and Naruto has done his best to make the most of the years since he learnt the truth about himself. He wonders who it was that swapped him with some other child, not that it helps given that said swapped kid had been killed, making it 'official' that Naruto Uzumaki is dead. He'd learnt that little fact when he'd been nine and it left a very sour, bitter taste within himself.

There's plenty of throwing knives about his two bandoleer and belt along with a boot dagger, foot long dirk, and a Ritual Knife , which he uses to carve Spell Glyph Arrays into things or using it to cause him to bleed in order to achieve Boost Spell Effects by use of Blood and Sacrifice Magic . Upon his left wrist is a wood and bone bracelet that he Crafted and Enchanted himself, having taken ten months to create it to his satisfaction, it's purpose is to prevent scaring upon his body. The boots he's wearing were Enchanted by him during creation to muffled noise of the wearer. The belts keep the throwing knives held upon them clean. There's a copper and opal collar necklace that's Enchanted to disguise the voice of the wearer.

Upon his right is a metal arm guard that's made out of a dulled iron. Wearing a washed out white shirt's right side has the long sleeve cut by the elbow while the left goes all the way to the wrist for the sleeve. His hair is short and currently, due to a monthly spell, is black in color. There's a scarf covering the bottom of his face, it's a simple brown. The pants sport patches he sown up himself and are a darker brown with stains that won't wash out. The boots are soft leather that's been dyed dark blue, the leather coming from a Salamander Horned Rabbit, so they possess some Fire Resistance.

After waiting for his eyes to adjust to the low light that is the Dungeon Entrance, Naruto takes a deep breath and slowly lets it out after holding it for a time. Doing his best to calm his nerves down. He's spent the pass week observing the Guard Camp outside of this Prestige Dungeon, who's more to keep people from entering into this Chimera's Dungeon then guarding the Kingdom of Faiahato (Goggle translate: Fire Heart) from, what few Monsters that actually exist within said Dungeon, spill out of it.

Vilk is recorded to be a rather odd Chimera Monster and thus, the Prestige Dungeon that this Chimera had become the Dungeon's final Boss. Sighing after a period of time, Naruto casts Dark Vision upon himself as he stares between the two halls upon having finished Searching the Entrance of this Dungeon, wanting to be sure there isn't any hidden cashes that previous people had stored stuff away for whatever reasons they had. Picking the left, from the various accounts from previous people who entered this Dungeon, they always went right.

Given that none of them have ever encountered the Chimera Boss, it's a given that the left is where this Monster likely occupies. The right is a labyrinth that's filled with traps, both mechanical and magical, with pockets of rooms that sport Mob Spawn Pits that are generally spawning Monsters of Bats, Insects, Rodents, and Spiders types. The left hallway though? It's a got statues of varying kinds that are made out of various material, including metal and at the end of the hallway is a massive set of doors that are locked with a gear puzzle.

For all his careful Searching as he slowly walks down the hallway, Naruto doesn't find any traps of any sort. None of the statues that line the hallway seem hollow and a Ritual Casting of Detect Magic shows nothing on the statues as he walks for the duration of that Spell. So, his nerves still haven't settled as he comes up to the door sporting said gear puzzle.

And so, Naruto tests the wheel that should unlock the door but it doesn't move and the sound it makes after trying echos. Letting go of the metal wheel with a lick of his lips, he steps back as he looks high up the door. There's clear welded bars that act as ladders plus spots where one could shuffle about the surface of the door. He could guess which of the gears he needs to slide into place but also spies what's blocking it.

Stretching his shoulders before rotating his left arm while his right hand is on the shoulder. A quick turn of his head, he relaxes his arms and studies the path he needs to climb to get to the high point of the door. Naruto figures he'll start from the top and proceed downwards. Walking to the right, he begins climbing up the welded ladder.

- + - O - + -

With the final gear sliding into place, Naruto let's out a sigh before shuffling back towards the bar ladder. It's been two days since he worked on the puzzle that is the lock of this door. Taking breaks when he got too frustrated and snack breaks as he doesn't feel ready for a heavy meal. He even only got about five hours to sleep, although he did lay in the sleeping bag for an extra hour before getting out of it.

As he climbs down, Naruto internally debates the pros and cons of entering once he's on the ground. As his foot goes flat, he has come to the conclusion that he is better off taking a bit of a break along with taking care of his various knives and going over his Spell List, ensuring which are already charged up and waiting to be release. Taking a sniff, he also decides that a quick sponge bath was in order too.

With that, Naruto settles down near his camp and stripes off his throwing knives bandoleers. As he unbuttons his shirt, he blinks as the gears of the door begin to shift and the wheel is now spinning. As the various clamps unhook, he's unable to look away as it seems that his break wasn't going to happen. Just as the doors begin to explode outward, swinging towards him as it were, he's rushing to close his shirt along with grabbing his two bandoleers that he had dropped.

With the doors swung open, the chamber... room... whatever is dark for some minutes. Then, as he finishes adjusting the bandoleers and begins to button up his shirt, something sparks within the room. After a few more sparks, something catches and a row of flames seemingly rush forward on his left. Then it happens again on his right, flames dancing before a wall, casting the previous darkness that had claimed the space behind the doors once occupied.

As his eyes adjust and he glances at the sides, it's clear a wider hallway and the flames are on a stone oil tench. The walls sport carved surfaces and he can't see the end of this hallway. Letting out a sigh, he turns and packs up his campsite before he walks through the door way.

Walking down the hallway, he's cautious as Naruto isn't sure there aren't traps to be triggered here. The floor is more sandy then the previous hallway, thus triggers could be harder to spot. The carvings change a bit, they were crude and more shallow at parts but that changes. It's near the end where he's got a fork of sorts that the carvings sport statues that the flames project shadows onto the scenes behind them. The one who carved this clearly incorporating light into their art.

Looking away from the walls and studying the two doors. One sports dull red paint and a simple handle and is on the right with the more fancy door lacks a handle along with sporting antlers in something that could pass as a Coat of Arms from the lands west of the ocean. This door is made of metal, Naruto assumes it's iron? It's grey in color.

Letting out a sigh, he suspects that he needs the handle in order to get pass that particular door and he knows a bit about Engineering but not enough to Jerry-rigging an alternative way to unlock this door. Naruto rather not find out what could happen if he fails to do it successfully as well.

Which leaves , Naruto walks over to the right door, doing things the way Vilk wants them to go. The door gives easily and there's a slight stench, it's old scent of decay along with stale air.

The floor is seen easily, there's no sand nor dirt near this part of the area. About fifteen to eighteen feet from the door, he finds his first trap. Thus, Naruto is careful and manages to identify it as a Floor Spike Trap, there's about five rows of fake floor behind and in front of the trigger with 7 cm (cm is short for centimeter) between each whole and it seem that the spikes are between 10 to 11 cm thick, that's if there's a gap between the surface of the spike and the edge of the hole is either 2 or 3 mm (mm is short for millimeter). The trigger is a pressure plate that's about 12 cm long and 6 cm wide and more centered to the right then the left.

Triple checking to ensure there's not another pressure plate on the left, Naruto keeps to the left and stops at the final row of the whole of the front, checking for anything before him, after all, getting pass one trap and walking right into another one is just smart. It's not until he checks the wall to the left that he notices something and looking to the right, notices something else.

Huffing, Naruto looks about the floor before looking up at the ceiling. Crouching, he takes out his dirk and holds only slightly above the floor before slowly raising it up. As it enters the space, something comes swinging down from behind and goes forward. Holding his dirk there, some time later, it comes swinging back from the same direction from before after a certain amount of time. Once it does so for a third time, he pulls the dirk out of the space, it's about 30 cm above the floor as he estimates the size of the space.

And so, taking it slowly, testing things out in a cautious fashion, and ignoring what few skeletons he comes across, he arrives at the end of the hallway that does spot what he came here for. Given the way the skeletons he's seen had been settled, knows that the hard part is about to begin. No matter how he looks at it, he doesn't see how this final effect triggers, so, he Ritual Casts Detect Magic , which takes a good ten minutes, given he hopes that there's no timer that got set off upon his approach of the pedestal.

He sighs as he notices the spell on the pedestal and looks around the area before looking at the floor and then ceiling. So, Naruto pounders how to solve this particular trick. Studying the handle and then at the pedestal.

When his Spell ends, he waits before redoing it, which he hopes he'll have an idea to test out. "Well... what is it detecting when it comes to the handle? It doesn't have anything on it to signal to the pedestal of it's removal..."

After about two hours, he sits down and pulls out something to eat along with one of his water skins, this one has a weak beer. "The floor will flood due to the Enchantment upon it and once water gets to a certain point, the ceiling will activate a series of Lightning Spells." Naruto mutters out loud.

"So... how does it return to the pedestal?" He asks himself after finishing his pouch of grain and dried fruit mix along with having drunk a third of the beer within the water skin. "It's an overly light bit of metal either..."

Nodding to himself, Naruto puts the empty pouch into the Inventory along with capping the water skin and doing the same with it. With a huff, he begins to go through with Ritual Casting Detect Magic , once more. Ritual Casting a Spell means that he doesn't use up a Pre-Charged Spell Slot , it takes so long but it doesn't use up a lot of his MP like if he were to Willful Charge a Spell, which eats up a lot of MP and also causes a bit of a strain on him physically.

With it taking hold, he walks out of the room and studies the floor outside of where the pedestal is. There's a grid of a sort and it finally makes sense why it had only been mechanical traps to this point. Pleased with this particular discovery, he returns to looking at the handle, taking out one of his throwing daggers from his belt.

Poking the handle with it, moving it back and forth about the flat surface. It's not until his dagger touches the stone that the Enchantment acts up. As he pulls the dagger away, he watches as it almost goes off only it dies down upon noting that the handle was still on it. Giggling a bit giddily, he does it again and he slowly sobers up as he suddenly gets an idea of how to get around this.

Putting the dagger onto the surface, he watches as everything settles down. Then, Naruto grabs the handle and picks it up, he holds his breath as it almost goes off only for the presence of the dagger satisfy the Enchantment. His mood is light along with a wide grin upon his face and so, he retraces his steps through this trap filled hall.

As him being mildly drunk fades, Naruto face palms once he's back at the door over how he'd acted getting the handle. He hadn't even thought to swap out one of his Pre-Charged Spell Slots with either Haste or Jump . Looking at the handling in his other hand, he lowers the free hand from his face. "Right, so, that's why they say you should only drink after a completed heist." He mutters, it had been his first time downing a beer, which had been something he stole as nobody sells such drinks to anyone who's not sixteen years of age, well, at least in the Kingdom he's in has that as an age limit.

Walking out of the door, he moves to stand at the metal door. Looking between the handle and the spot where it's to go, he walks over and tries to insert it. It takes a bit of angling but it enters into the door. Turning it the opposite way then he put it in, the door clicks before he's able to pull it open.

The sound of something swinging begins as the door opens enough for him to walk through. Cocking his head, Naruto guesses that it's swinging axes or something like that. So, he walks slowly down the hallway until he feels a rush of air and a flash of something, it takes a bit before he confirms that it is an axe swinging back and forth a distance before him. As he times it, he manages to rush pass before stopping suddenly as there's another just coming down right after the first.

With a curse, he Willful Charges Haste and begin his journey forward. Stopping and going between the spots where the axes are swinging. As the Spell's duration ends, he's breathing a touch harder and checks his MP before looking at his Spell List, checking on Haste 's cool down. Thankfully, Naruto came to a halt in a stretch that was fairly spacious and so, he settles down for a quick nap.

- + - O - + -

Naruto wakes to the sound of something heavy swinging, slicing the air along with slight rush of air. As he struggles to continue to sleep, it's no good, and he generally begins to remember where he is. Letting out a yawn as he begins to stretch his arms and shoulders.

Then, it's another issue he has, which he sighs as he runs a hand through his hair. And so, he gets up and prepares to attend his issue. Naruto finishes and does a clean up with a few Willful Charges of various Spells before taking inventory of what he's wearing.

Taking out a water skin that has actual water within it, he gulps some of it down before capping it and putting it back into his Inventory. Feeling refresh and ready to continue on with transverse this portion of the Dungeon. Waiting for his MP to finish filling up, he pulls out a Note Book along with a bit of Charcoal and jots down his experience so far concerning this portion of the Dungeon.

Finishing up, he puts the two back into his Inventory and claps his hands to get the remains of the Charcoal from his hand. Whipping the hands together and then brushing his hand upon his pants a few times. Calling up his MP , he sighs before going back to his Inventory and looking for something to occupy his mind for the next few minutes.

There's a stolen book, which he knows will fetch him a good price... Once a year has passed since he stole it. It's a first edition and, well, pulling it out, studies the cover. The title is Changes in Clouds and Fate by Yami Ga Tsuka Suru (Goggle translate: Darkness Passes).

Opening the cover, there's a blank page, then the next has the title along with an image of some clouds plus a loom with cloth coming off of it. There's shadow upon the loom's portion where it's merely just threads and it's getting woven into cloth. Another couple pages and he finally gets to the Prologue of the story.

Before he knows it, he's just about to read the third chapter before recalling to check on his MP . Finding it full, Naruto closes the book and puts it back into his Inventory. Resolving to continue from the third chapter once he's done, he readies himself through some stretches and walks back near the way he came before Willful Charge Haste and continues on his racing way, dodging the swinging axes.

Coming to the end, once he crosses the threshold, the swinging axes slowly come to a stop, one at a time. Not that Naruto watches as he's a bit more baffled by the sight that's before him. It's hard for him to accept and yet, it's clear it happened as he glances around the room, he notices a slightly glowing Magical Door to the left side, not that far from where he's standing.

Feeling a surge of disappointment, Naruto walks over to the center of the room and the four skeletons laying there. The large one sports antlers and is the size of a bull. At the neck area, there's a rusty dirk while there's various swords and arrow heads about the spot. He's sure he could find other arrow heads about the room if he would only look.

Only Enchanted items survived the ravages of time, looking as good as they were when their owners had been alive. Picking up the skull that's feline like, save for the antlers, Naruto turns it this way and that before setting it back down, in a gentle manner.

With a huge sigh, he walks away from the skeletons and heading for the stairs that lead to the Storage and Vault of this Prestige Dungeon. Sure enough, there's two large rooms, one sports potions, food, and other consumables while the other sports Equipment of both, magical and mundane. Sadly, his Inventory isn't large enough to collect it all, so, he wanders through in search of what he came here for, which he finds. It's a Pendant of Ocean's Heart and after pricking his finger with said Ritual Dagger , the blood he dropped upon it gets absorbed, thus recognizing him as its new owner.

Smiling, he puts it on and checks his Equipment List and checks to ensure that there isn't any hidden surprises about the Clan Heirloom . Humming that someone had put a Curse on it, but the Curse expired not long after the previous wearer likely died. Smirking, Naruto Willful Charges a Minor Water Spell upon the palm of his left hand and is very pleased when the cost of MP wasn't anything major. Dispelling it, he closes his left hand and begins to study the various treasures about him.

The coins were the easiest to loot and didn't take up that much room, even though it's nearly ten billion coins, not all of which are gold or silver, but it money he didn't have until now. Next, he goes for the gems, preferring uncut over cut. Not all are loose but he nearly fills his Inventory with said treasure. Shaking his head, he looks for something special, after all, having seen the Magical Door , he suspects that if there's a magical item that would attune to said Magical Door , he could come back without needing to go through the various traps.

Sure enough, he finds a few of them, each ranging from various quality. Thus, he is rather spoiled for choice and after checking each over, Naruto settles on the Staff of Greater Portals . Sadly, what other anchor points it had been previously attuned for likely don't exist any more. Using his Ritual Dagger once more, he binds it to himself, so now he's the proud owner of a white golden staff that's mimicking a branch of a tree with clear amber gems all along the length while the top sports a mixture of flowers and leaves upon the top part. Each of the amber gems would sport a color as they would denote the number of magical anchors the staff was attuned too.

And so, he heads for the Storage to browse what it contained before heading for the Magical Door in order to attune his new staff. There's a few glass bottles of alcohol, which means it's from else where as the various countries here prefer clay jugs to store their liquor, some gigantic ones were inspired by gigantic wooden barrels that foreigners are said to keep in their basements, complete with taps at the bottom of the jars to pour out the liquid. Leaving them be, Naruto notices some preserved plates of meals, he hums while feeling very tempted to see if the food is as fresh as it looks, given that the spells preserving them might have a time based one.

Sighing, he resists and instead, finds a collection of one use Spell Scrolls. Spell Scrolls can be used by anyone as long as they can read the often short phrase that's written at the bottom of the scroll. Expensive, in the end, as the paper, ink, and brushes/quills need to be of a specially created to store MP to be used instead of taking the MP from the speaker. Sadly, the selection of Spells weren't ones he doesn't already know, being from a Clan means that Spells learnt from previous generations are passed down and if not for the Orb of Unity , he likely wouldn't even know he was a Mage in the first place due to someone placing a Curse on that Knowledge that targeted him and those that didn't know in the first place.

Same went for the Spell Books that were within the Vault . So, he studies the other one use items, the potions and Magical Tokens. He pockets a bag of Exploding Silver Pebbles and Random Hoof Animal Pills . Naruto is satisfied with what he's pick and walks out.

It takes a good four hours to attune his Staff of Greater Portals to this Prestige Dungeon's Magical Door . Given he's never had to do something like this before, he's just satisfied that it worked in the end. With that, he checks with of the amber gems is glowing before putting his staff into his Inventory. Not wanting to go back the way he came, he Searches the room and does find a hidden door that leads to what can only be called living quarters.

Poking around the other rooms, Naruto is very pleased at the sight of what appears to be a natural hot pool. Stripping everything off, he slowly enters into the pool, very pleased with the temperature of the pool along with getting clean after getting worked up over the various things he's encountered within this Dungeon. It's as he's laying in the pool that Naruto considers why the Dungeon hasn't pick a new Dungeon Boss or how it is that it's still around.

Digging through his Clan Knowledge, what little is known of the nature of Dungeons is that once the final Monster Boss is killed, Exit Gates would spawn before people, signalling that the Dungeon has been conquered. Then, what treasure and items wasn't claimed by the ones who killed the Monster Boss, it would linger in the area until a new Dungeon comes into existence and gets transferred to that one. That there isn't a living Monster inhabiting the Final Room...

Shaking those thoughts out, he finally gets out of the pool after his skin prudes up. Changing his attire but keeping the weapons out, Naruto heads back to the Final Room and... Well, he's fairly sure that the Ghost wasn't suppose to be there when he'd last been there. And yes, the transparent shape of what the Chimera Monster must have looked like when alive did sport something of a white outline but the glowing bright blue eyes is rather hair raising.

'So... You took the left Path here, huh?' The Ghost of Vilk muses while doing a great show of looking him up and down. The mouth not moving at all, yet he hears the slight echo within his mind, knowing instinctively that it belongs to the Ghost before him.

"Well, yea? I was kind of hoping not to run into anyone to get to you." Naruto admits in a frank voice, his not sure if he could deal with this Ghost if they got violent.

For a time, silence hangs between them and the Ghost finally turns from looking at him, looking down at the skeletons that are piled near the center. 'You picked up my skull. Then... put it down gently.' The tone is clearly bafflement and Naruto's a bit unnerved that this Ghost knew that tidbit of information. There's an underlying question hanging after that statement as well.

"So I did." He states at last after a bit. "I've never seen a tiger skull with antlers before."

The Ghost's head is suddenly looking at him, there didn't seem to be any motion from the head looking down to turning to look at him. The eyes are unblinking as he does his best to control himself. Eerie. Naruto can't help but think.

'You left their Equipment alone.' The Ghost of Vilk notes. The head cocking a bit as one of the almost human looking forelimbs hand like paws forms a fist while resting upon what passes as a chin.

"They didn't have anything I wanted." Naruto states in weak defense, which is true, what coins they had carried had ended up in the Vault while the magical items remained next to their previous owners. He really wants to ask, "How are you still lingering? Your not suppose to be a student of Necromancy Magic."

Yet, he suspect that it hardly matters. Whatever is causing this Dungeon to linger, it's clear that Vilk the Ghost is either the cause or another symptom of the lingering effect. Naruto wonders at how long it's been since the four died, near each other, after one another.

'So young.' The Ghost sees to mutter. 'So full of life.'

The words spread unease into his being and he tries not to flinch or start looking around like a cornered mouse. He may not feel confident about his odds of surviving a fight with this Ghost but he knew damn well that appearing like prey and acting like it would only cause this to go from maybe salvageable to dead very quickly. He knows that Undead Monsters are capable of consuming HP and MP while leaving the body unharmed, which they could then possess with ease, until it's falling part from rot at least. It wouldn't make them alive once more but give them a taste of what it once was to be alive again.

'So human.' Vilk the Ghost states with some disdain and the look that appears upon the feline face could be disguise, a feline version of it at least. 'And yet...' The Ghost suddenly appears a few feet before him and he couldn't stop himself from taking a step back, after all, even if the Ghost is floating 1 or 2 cm above the floor, if Vilk had still been alive, they would have towered over him, particularly when reared up on the back legs, that appear to be those of a canine. 'I. Am. Not. Done. With. Life!' Fangs are bared and the lizard or snake like tail is moving back and forth.

"Contract! We can... Homounculus!" He stammers out, his heart beating fast and pretty much saying the first few things that crossed his mind. But, well, Vilk hasn't advanced towards him but nor has the Ghost's muzzle close. "Resurrection with a Homonuculus body. It's a theory my Clan thought up but never..." He explains once he feels his throat loosen from panic that had tightened it. "Plus, with your bones... I could use them for the frame, it might speed the process of creation up by a lot."

Finally, the Ghost isn't threatening in pose but sporting a thinking one instead while its head seems to flicker from looking at him to back to where it's skeleton rests. It's not something his various ancestors invested a lot of time and resources in, but that doesn't mean that they hadn't mused upon Necromancy and what possibilities it could offer. He knows that one actually had, during a time of famine, would use bones of various farm animals to grow that kind of meat upon those bones while combining it with Alchemy. He had been a butcher and he made enough to pay off various loans that he accumulated or his parents.

Having both the bones plus the Ghost? Add in a Resurrection Spell? Good odds that Naruto could give Vilk a second chance at life. "Contract with clauses to ensure I would work on this project with you agreeing that I'm to be spared from harm during the project and, if I don't do anything stupid after completing it, after it's done and you're alive once more." He states.

With Pendant of Ocean's Heart , he'll be able to claim his rightful properties and fortune plus place in Mage Society. With that and once it's been sorted out, he's confident that he should have the resources needed to follow through with his part. Suddenly, he feels something cool being pressed at this throat but, finally, it passes and Vilk remarks, 'Let us discuss this in a more... private setting, shall we?'

And with that, the Ghost seems to vanish but there's a glow near the hidden door that he'd come through earlier. Praying to his ancestors for luck, he walks back to the door and enters it. Hoping that he's capable of coming out of this negotiations alive and mostly whole.

/ - o f - **

"Only three years." Vilk muses as the Chimera Monster flexes his right hand. "And you fulfilled your end, true to your agreed word at that."

Of course, given the merriment of side tracking over the course of the nearly four years of knowing Vilk that dealt with things that circulated over War between the various Kingdoms of this Continent and the private matter of finding out who it was that 'misplaced' him as a babe to trivial things like Quests concerning gathering materials, killing a certain number of Monsters, escort/body guarding... As for the creating the meat of the body, he really didn't do much once he had a clay cauldron that was big enough to hold the total skeleton plus what body weight it would get. Other then ensuring the right potions got poured in and cleaning out the spent liquid viva a built in tap every few months.

It was finding the right quality of Ritual Items for the Resurrection Ceremony that took almost three years in their own right. The body that came out ended up crimson in coloring, not that Vilk seems to mind, the eyes remain that bright blue that Vilk had as a Ghost though. The Prestige Dungeon still exists and given it's been four days since the Ceremony, no word had spread over it's vanishing, which means that Vilk still has a home to return to and to govern.

"When do you want me to take you home?" Naruto inquires. It had been something being haunted as it were by Vilk, who had been aggravating at times but helpful at others. He knows he'll miss having Vilk around, oddly enough, the former Ghost had grown on him. He suspects that he'd grown on the Chimera too.

For all that things have changed, some things ultimately hadn't. There's few people he can trust and plenty of people looking to step on/take advantage of him. He's still got a long ways to go to grow his influence to the point he feels he's got enough sway that few would confront him out in the open. He's not stupid enough to think he can keep anyone from ever not talking smack about him, even in private. Nope, having people force to be oh so polite and cautious around him in public will just have to do.

Vilk merely hums while lingering in the wooden tub that he'd bought some year ago for just this purpose. As he looks at the time, Vilk muses, "So... What are your plans concerning the Uchiha Clan? I mean, they seem rather determined to keep that lake and the surrounding lands instead of returning them to the Uzumaki Clan." To you. He hears at the end, but it was never said.

"Well... Did you know that there's this little organization cutely named Root? You wouldn't believe what kind of dirt this group's dug up on them~. Like, say, a coup against the current Royal family?" He remarks, he's fairly sure Vilk knows this little detail but then, it likely didn't really affect the Chimera in any meaningful way.

"Oh, yes." Vilk remarks. "That. Huh, so, how do you plan to use Root when its been destroyed?"

"Oh, but who really knows about that little massacre? It's not like that inner circle was big to begin with." Naruto remarks with a sly smile. "Those 'agents' are use to different handlers approaching them. What's so suspicious about another new Growth to answer to?"

For all that Vilk's head is that of a tiger, the barking laughter doesn't seem suited to the coming from the Chimera. "True. So very true~." The former Ghost remarks and he suspects that the Chimera would lean back save for the tail that's resting behind him, keeping him from leaning upon his back upon that portion of the tub.

"So, I'm still figuring things out on who to approach first and what kind of look along with name I should use." He can tell that Vilk is interested, it's on how the ears are positioned.

Ending It Here

Autumn Eyes: SVSSS

I don't own Kateyou Hitmat Reborn nor The Scum Villain's Self-Saving System.

_ X 0 - T - 0 X _

At seven years old, a slave boy wakes with a gasp with a hand going to the back of his head. Breathing heavily as distress floods throughout his tiny body, Xiao Jiu's thoughts are scrabbled up as it seems that something has happened to his other existence, Sawada Tsunayoshi, who's about to turn fourteen this coming October. There's nothing to feel out of place at the back of his head and his breathing slowly down as he begins to collect his emotions and thoughts.

Looking around the room, it's clear that it's still night, which is rather odd. To his left, there's Qi-ge, sleeping and to his right is the wall. The rags covering him don't do much to keep him warm. As he tries to calm down, Xiao Jiu finds it hard to fall back to sleep.

As he lays back down, the slave boy feels rather warm, as though he covered himself with a series of blankets. Xiao Jiu tries to make sense of what happened in his older existence for him to wake in his younger one. "That baby... He said something about Mafia?" He murmurs out loud in Japanese.

"I left for school..." He continues and finds that's when his memories began to temper off. "It felt like something... Then..."

Xiao Jiu shudders as he recalls the feeling of burning. Like he'd been becoming far too hot for his body. The sensation of his body suddenly being too small for him and then...

He swallows as he rolls to his side, facing Qi-ge. Seeking comfort from the older slave. Closing his eyes, Xiao Jiu can't help but feel as though his life has changed, for the better or worst, well, he doesn't known.

T S _ ^ _ S T

He huffs as he walks away from the town, away from his 'owners'. Xiao Jiu had spent a bit over a year trying to convince Qi-ge to come away with him but the other refused. Qi-ge wanted to protect the other street urchins/slaves and nothing he tried seem to sway the other.

It's not like Xiao Jiu didn't care but at the same time, he got a strong FEELING that things were going to be worst if they don't leave. That FEELING has gotten more intense these pass few days. And so, he's stealing away at nearly nine years of age from the town and whatever ruinous events that were waiting to occur.

It's going to be autumn soon, yet the nights are still rather warm. Few want to travel at night but he trusts his gut/instincts to keep him safe. It's how he's been able to save up the odd coin or bit of jewellery, keeping them in stashes along with trusting the urges to move the contents out of them when they crop up.

He's spent some time tricking some knowledge of written characters from various kids with families, focusing on those who's parents are tradesmen and merchants. I should pick a last name and maybe, pick a new first name. Xiao Jiu muses to himself as he reaches the tree line of the forest that surrounds the town. The expanse of fields served to give townsfolk warning of anything coming at the town, particularly from the woods or down the road that passes through the town.

As he wanders through the trees of the forest, Xiao Jiu notices that his sensor range seems to have shrunk then what it had been. He can only guess at the reason for why that is as his dark orange eyes, sunset eyes, keenly looks about the darkness of the forest. He's walking slow pace as he's heard many stories about the forest, depending on the family, the stories could be about Demons snatching up wandering kids to strange spirits.

There's little mention of humans being the ones who snatch up kids and he's fairly sure that it's what typically preys on the wandering kids who either take dares to enter into the forest or they get separated from their parents while being in the forest. As far in both of his lives, that of Sawada Tsunayoshi and Xiao Jiu, it wasn't supernatural beings that caused the hardships he'd faced in those lives. It's always been humans who'd been the cause of misery, kids taunting and beating on Tsunayoshi or other street urchins/slaves fighting him over food, coin, sleeping spots...

letting out a sigh, Xiao Jiu pushes such thoughts from his mind and taking a moment to close his eyes, trying to get a feel of the forest around him. Time seems to slow, slightly above him and to the south-east of where he is, he feels something falling slowly through the air. A kind of rodent that sported a tiny spine hidden in the bushy tail. To north-east is a kind of owl stalking a hopping lizard? It's shaped kind of like a rabbit but it's got none of the long ears, fur, or cotton tail that a rabbit should have but scales and two rows of tiny teeth with forelimbs sporting only two fingers with poison claws tucked at the chest.

There's various insects and other crawly things about him but the three mentioned are the largest living and moving beings he can sense. Then comes him noticing the plants, the sensation of a leave falling from a branch and the feeling of sap oozing out of a fresh cut to the trunk... Roots under his feet and the buried bones of animals and discarded fur and feathers.

Straight ahead of him, there's a rotten box that contains something interesting. And so, Xiao Jiu focuses on it, it's just a silver bell, the silk tassel dirtied up. Within the silver bell is a bead of white jade. There's a power to the bell, so it'll be worth it to dig it up, he decides.

And so, time begins to speed up. The rodent with the spine makes contact with a tree trunk. The owl's head moves as the lizard's back legs finally press off the ground. That leaf falls to the ground and the chirps/cries of the other living things fill the air.

Walking to the spot he knows the bell is, Xiao Jiu crouches down to the spot. He coats his hands in energy before beginning to dig within the dirt. Large clumps of dirt get pulled up with his left hand coming up and putting his right hand into the ground before it happens again.

By the time twenty minutes had passed, he has the hole dug and he's feeling around for the box. Smirking, he fills his muscles of his arm with energy before wrestling the box out of the ground. The wood gives way halfway up the hole and the clamp of dirt falls to the ground that holds the bell.

Snorting softly, he reaches for it, gently breaking some of the dirt off. It takes a bit before he feels the silk. Chuckling, he pulls the bell up viva the silk, there's still a lot of dirt clinging to the silk and the bell. He feels a bit tired and hungry but he ignores it for brushing the dirt from the silk, it's a bit dark so he can't get a good idea of the color of the tassel.

It's a belt ornament and he wonders if it was meant for a child or an adult. Putting the item into a pocket, he gets up off the ground. His legs feel stiff, the muscles had become rather cramped. Still, he pats the dirt off his robes before continuing on his way.

His range has increased a great deal from before. And so, he continues on his way, he hasn't felt a tug in his gut, just the FEELING of something heavy lifting from his shoulder the further he gets from town. It's a very nice feeling, even though he gets the sense of storm winds slowly surrounding himself, it's like he's got nothing holding him to the ground, that with a slight motion, he could be picked up from the ground and become a toy in the storm wind's 'hands'.

T S _ ^ _ S T

It's been about eleven years since he left Qi-ge and his 'owners' behind. It's spring and he's been going by Shen Qiao along with having a very strong foundation in Array and Talisman with his second and third studies being in supernatural plants and non-human/Demon beings. Even though he's been studying Cultivation, he's not yet settled on a way to create a Golden Core.

He's not sure why he gets odd, disjointed feels whenever he tried to pick one. And so, he's been focusing on finding plants and ways to ensure he's not losing any of his spiritual potential as he's grown older, which means he could begin losing out on creating a strong Golden Core. Thus is the reason he's traveled so far just to sell a few basketfuls of Antler Thorn Oracles, which make a very good Qi nourishing pastries or Qi stabilization pills.

Could they be grown as a crop by a Sect that specializes on farming such spiritual plants? Yea, but the wild growing kind is of better quality. In the wild, they grow very bushy and tall. The leaves are a rich navy blue with the thorns being soft brown slowly changing into a soft white in color by the sharp tip of the thorn. Although, the 'domesticated' type grows year round while the wild type show up for a year before going dormant for five years.

Walking into the shop he's been nudged to, the former slave boy notices a woman in white and green expensive robes. Ah yea, Qing Jing Peak. Shen Qiao muses upon sight of the Sect uniform. Must be an important member, perhaps a Hall Master?

The clerk seems displeased with him, then again, given he's wearing dull colour robes and of a simple design. He is the maker of majority of his wardrobe and so, they each have sown 'spells' upon them. Which would make many a noble clan would drool over the idea of hiring someone so capable getting hired to do a single set, never mind having a whole wardrobe worth of such robes.

His current robes are gray and black in color without any embroidery on display. His long hair is in a simple half ponytail and upon his belt, hangs that bell he dug up in that forest from a decade ago, although he did replace the purple silk tassel with an orange silk that compliments his sunset eyes. The bell will ring in alarm when he's close to some form of undead being, depending on how powerful said being is, the range of the bell possesses with weak having a short range and the strong having a wide one.

"This Master is still considering the matter." The woman Cultivator states when the clerk's attention switches, both in where the eyes are gazing and the look upon the face. The clerk sends a spiteful glare at Shen Qiao, but he didn't care all that much, merely waiting for the clerk to greet him.

"What is it." The clerk asks in a very oily voice, "that bring you here today?" Its like asking causes the clerk pain, like he cut him or caused some old injury.

Raising an eyebrow in reaction, his natural bitch resting face doesn't really show any of his amusement over this clerk's reaction. "How much are you willing to price a basket of wild grown Antler Thorn Oracles?" He inquires curiously.

The sneer upon the face makes it clear that the clerk doesn't know a thing about Antler Thorn Oracles. "We don't need more Antler Thorn Oracles." The clerk is clearly looking his nose down at the mere thought of buying from him. "We have plenty in our inventory." So take yourself out of here, we don't have any business to be had.

"Oh? How many baskets does young one managed to bring here?" Inquires the Qing Jing Cultivator.

Oh, so it's like that, huh? Shen Qiao muses to himself. "Well, this humble one doesn't want to speak of it." Then glances towards the clerk before continuing, "After all, it's clear that this one isn't welcome in this shop."

There's a bit more interest now in the woman's eyes, so, as he waits, her gaze sweeps over him, first to the bell upon his belt before a slight flicker of surprise as she seems to notice the 'spells' he's stitched in these layers. "This Master wonders just how humble one such as you could be."

"This humble one stitched these robes himself, I'm afraid." And there's a clear flare of anger from the clerk at someone so poor being within his presence. "Majority of my wardrobe are ones I cut and stitched together by myself. So, this simple Cultivator isn't worthy of such regard from such a noble Master as yourself."

"If you don't have any business here, get out!" The clerk snaps at him. "We have no need for such as yourself." By that, the clerk means, dirt poor wandering Cultivator.

"Well, if that is how Merchant Bing feels, then this Master shall heed such a declaration." The Master Cultivator says smoothly. The feel of panic raises as the woman heads for the door before a rush of anger and pride has the clerk start yelling at him as he gives way to allow her to exit first.

Ignoring the idiot clerk, he follows after the Cultivator. Once out of the shop, the woman inquires again, "How many baskets was that?"

"About thirty." He admits, one of the baskets wasn't full. The Cultivator hums before asking, gesturing at his robes, "Cut and sown by your own hand, huh?"

"Yes, that's right." Shen Qiao agrees. There's an odd feeling of Rightness that settles over him.

"Well, come to my Peak then. Perhaps you can teach a few of my disciples how to do it properly." She says. "And perhaps you'll pick up a few in turn."

Ah. He feels a bit strange as emotions swirl within him. "Am I getting recruited? Or am I just a visitor?"

As the woman begins to walk towards a carriage, she replies, "Only one way to find out." Shen Qiao follows after her once he feels a bit more settled emotionally.

"This one hopes he will not disappoint Peak Lord Su Xinghe." He says, what little he knows is that the current generation has Xing as their common character, which means Thriving. The door remains open and so, he joins her in the carriage.

And so, Shen Qiao feels like he's on his way home. It's an odd feeling as he's never felt such in the years since he left Qi-ge and their 'owers'.

T S _ ^ _ S T

"So... what's your name?" Peak Lord Su Xinghe inquires, it's been six months since he'd entered that carriage and sold those baskets of wild grown Antler Thorn Oracles to Cang Qiong Mountain Sect, particularly having to go to An Ding Peak to do so.

Blinking a few times before he realizes that he never did introduce himself to his current teacher, perhaps his Shizun. "This disciple prefers to be called Shen Qiao." He replies.

Other then a visit to Qian Cao Peak after a month upon Qing Jing Peak, mostly just to check up on any conflicts that might rise up from switching Cultivation paths, he's not spent a lot of time in Peak Lord Su Xinghe's company. After all, other then attending a few classes, meals, and dealing with certain body needs, Shen Qiao has pretty much taken to living in the library.

There's always something interesting to read within it and it's not like I don't have a sleeping bag on my person. He muses to himself. Rather curious as to what prompted her to inquire after him.

"There's going to be a cross Peak Tournament." The Peak Lord states and he inclines his head, guessing that she needs to know in order to put his name down as a member of her disciples. Then her eyes flicker to his right wrist and he offers it.

It's a strange feeling, having someone probe through his spirit veins and at the spot where he'll be creating his Golden Core. He's got bandages about that area to help him not accidently injury himself by pooling his energy within it along with his Qi. He knows he's got to be careful, that orange energy that's coursing through his being can be complimentary at times with or at odds with his Qi.

Given he'd once had a dual existence in his childhood, it could just mean that the orange energy is one that comes from a different world. Thus, it's just foreign to this world and thus to the way the world operates. His gaze goes back down to the painting that he's waiting to dry while Peak Lord Su Xinghe leaves the room.

His thoughts drift to the few attempts he'd had with his shijies in regards to sowing. In the end, it's hard to dumb down his explanations when the various shijies don't have the same ground work in Arrays and Talismans as him. So, a lot of what he tried to explain got mistranslated or just confused them. Which is why few of the disciples likely make use of such when creating art.

The imagery of a bamboo forest with leave gently getting blown by wind is a rare sight upon the Peak. He's cheated a bit by having created a wooden plaque that help ground the effects as he paints them then trusting his ability to hold it as he paints. It's tricky process but from previous tries and looking at old examples, likely worthwhile.

As the paint finishes drying, Shen Qiao rolls the page and puts it into the scroll case to protect it. Then picks up the wooden plaque and puts it into his sleeve's Qiankun Pocket. Carrying the case to the pill by the door, he sets it down, trusting that his modifications to the case will ensure that it won't open until two hours have passed.

It's the middle of dinner by the time his painting had finished drying and so, he doesn't bother for entering the Dinning Hall but the kitchen itself. There's a few An Ding disciples within it, collecting the dirty dishes, it's likely they are being punished and thus, there's none of the usual kitchen servants within the kitchen. So, with the five disciples from another Peak, he begins to take stock of what's within the kitchen, particularly what's going to spoil soon.

Taking out a ribbon, he pulls back his sleeves before he begins going through the process of cooking by chopping up vegetables and the little bit of meat scrapes that were left over from whatever the cooks created for the Hall Masters' suppers. He's got plenty of experience cooking for himself, although that's generally by camp fires or just open flames.

Having a kitchen is something he's getting use too and generally, it's been a quick learning experience but in the end, the kitchen of the Dinning Hall survived his early efforts. Few of the kitchen servants seem incline to report his antics or, perhaps, just decided it wasn't any of their business if a young 'master' wants to make their own meals. In which case, they likely thought him to be rather snooty as he either doesn't trust them to make something or he just doesn't like the idea of servants he didn't pick handling his food.

Sure, he could just explain that he didn't want them to bother making him something or setting aside something for him but he suspects that, by this point, he wouldn't be believed. Given the An Ding disciples had seen him, it's likely that some story will be made and spread. Depending on the incline of the disciple telling it, who knows what spin it'll have.

Glancing to the door that leads outside of the kitchen, he finds the Peak Lord standing there with a slight tilt of her head. Taking a second to study what he made, he guesses that he did make enough for two. So, as he arranges the dishes, he listens as the Peak Lord walks to a point that is a hidden closet, enters it and comes out with a jar of wine as he finishes with the tray.

No paying much mind to the hidden door, he waits for the Peak Lord to exit before following after. The house is made of bamboo. He knows that each Peak Lord either builds or orders the building of such a bamboo house while also personally destroying their Shizun's bamboo house. There's different building plans in the library, some were smaller then others and about two could be consider mansions.

The porch of the bamboo house is rather large and sports different wind charms that make soft noise as the wind blows to do so. The main room seems to serve as a dinning room with a kitchen to the right and a hallway to that goes beyond this room that can be found to the left corner of the room. And so, left most room that sports an actual door should be the bathroom, with about two tubs, one set up as a mini hot spring while the other serves as a typical bathtub. He knows the layout of this house from having looked through said blueprints.

Setting up the table for their dinner, he does his best to keep his eyes focus on his task. All around him, he knows that there's a number of decorations that might ensnare his gaze. Once Shen Qiao finishes setting up the table, the jar of wine gets set down, and so, he goes about pouring a cup of it as the Peak Lord begins to select portions from the various dishes.

Once he sets the jar down and put the cup where it should go, he bows politely. After a bit, Peak Lord Su Xinghe inclines her head. And so, he settles down at his place, he does his best to mind his manners as he takes a portion from the various dishes.

He wonders if she actually wanted supper or if she just took advantage of the opportunity before her. There's little in the way of conversation and when the Peak Lord finishes her cup, she waves at him before pouring herself more from the jar. As the various dishes hold nothing upon them, he suspects that the meal was acceptable, given what he'd used to make it, not that it ultimately shows on her face.

"Acceptable." She states and so, they go through the whole polite aftermath that is suppose to come about because of it. It comes to an end after about forty minutes and he's pretty much dismissed, he doesn't try to clean up, suspecting that a servant will either later tonight or in the morning, when bringing her morning tea.

Perhaps for the first time since he arrived, he actually headed for the male dormitory to get some sleep, of course, he does a quick pit stop before continuing. He vaguely remembers which room he'd been led to, all thought months ago. Shen Qiao doesn't notice anyone within this room, so, he enters it, noting that there's no belongings within.

A bit of quick dusting and he's getting ready for bed. Putting on a different set of 'spelled' bandages for bed, he does a bit of stretches before settling in. Soon enough, he's fast asleep.

T S _ ^ _ S T

Unlike the rest of the disciples upon the Peak, Shen Qiao is the only one without a sword. Then again, he's still working on forming his Golden Core. Thus, he's spent the last few weeks studying up on what rules there generally are concerning this inter Sect Tournament, to learn what he's able to wear and use.

He's only allowed a single 'spelled' layer of robes and there's a minimum of three types of Talismans that could be used. As for Spiritual Tools/Weapons, well, it's generally their sword but since he doesn't have one, he could bring in a Spiritual Tool. The loop hole on the Talismans has to do with the number.

So, in the end, he had created a hasty Spiritual Tool after debating between fan or bandage. In the end, he figured the bandage would be best. After all, being able to trip up or tie up his opponent could be of benefit. The length of it is rather long while also testing out a modified kind of 'spell' to allow him to alter the length, having to create something like a pocket for the bandage's extra length.

He'd registered his items with An Ding Peak a week ago and since no letter or disciple came over to talk to him about it, Shen Qiao assumes it's been approved. So, with the Spiritual Bandage about his upper body, the inner most robe sporting a slashing resistance 'spell', and about sixty of each of the three Talismans, which are Cursed Cloud, Flash Bang, and Voice Throwing.

So, following the other Disciples over the Rainbow Bridge, Shen Qiao does his best to settle himself. He's determined to win, he might not have been here for a year yet but he's not settling on trying his best.

C V P + (= | =) + P V C

Su Xinghe watches the fifth match of the day. It's something of a free for all unlike the previous matches. In the end, with so many disciples that were still vying for the position of successor that's on going with some Peaks, among which is her own. So, they changed things up a bit, in order to thin the numbers or else they'd be doing this for almost two weeks.

"So... you have your eye on any particular disciple, Shijie?" Inquires Yuan Xinghai, who's the current Peak Lord of Zui Xian Peak. Her Shidi has already pick his successor.

She gives a none committed answer, after all, for all that she had recently brought in a stray in the pass year to her Peak, she's rather unsure if he's got any plans to try for the post as her successor. Sadly, few seem to be able to follow along with Shen Qiao's lessons about stitching 'spells' into cloth, never mind anyone interested in learning what short cut he's using when it comes to his Qi Paintings. Never mind that it seems that there's been none of the usual antics that generally occur when new disciples are accepted, neither of the more established disciples have been needed to visit Qian Cao Peak nor had said stray.

Her gaze does sweep pass him in the area. The only one without a sword and the few that thought him easy prey had been taken down. "That Qing Jing brat isn't bad in hand to hand." Remarks another of her Shidi, the Peak Lord of Bai Zhan Peak, Xie Xingnie.

"Is he a guest disciple?" Asks Yuan Xinghai, who's likely overheard the comment. "Perhaps." Is all she admits, her eyes settling on him for a bit before taking in the number of her other disciples and their clear mind set that is rather embarrassing, given that Qing Jing Peak is often considered the Tactician of the Sect.

Su Xinghe finds it rather disappointing that none of them seem to think beyond their own safety and own fights. That it hadn't occurred to any of them to rally the other Qing Jing disciples to their banner and sweep through the mass of chaos. Soon enough, they fall before members of the other two Peaks that they've been paired with.

"Oh, ho! Is that legal?" The exclamation comes from Xie Xingnie and she's a bit surprise by the cloud of darkness near where she last saw Shen Qiao.

"It is, along with another surprise he might be using in that cloud." Remarks Ximen Xingling, the Peak Lord of An Ding Peak, in a bragging tone, as though Shen Qiao being a member of his own Peak. "I didn't think so, when he submitted the form but I had Shang Qinghua to read through the guide lines and it seems that Talismans are allowed, just three types."

That, she admits to herself, is what I've been hoping for, in my successor. Yet, Su Xinghe knows that it's unknown if he'll be able to form a powerful enough Golden Core, particularly given he'd kept from Cultivating a path in the proper way. Almost twenty years of age.

She knows that wishes won't change anything but it wasn't the first time she'd wished he'd come to the Sect at the proper age. Cang Qiong Mountain could have only benefitted from such a talent, perhaps might yet still. I'll just have to let things play out and trust that Shen Qiao will still be able to form a strong enough Golden Core. She decides as the cloud of darkness fades only for a Flash Bang Talisman to go off, or, well, in particular, a series of them, about three in total.

And so, the winners get announced, all three of them, with Shen Qiao being the first to be named. There's still a bit of tension in said

Cultivator's shoulders but, she likes to imagine, those sunset eyes glinting in pleasure over his victory.

As this is the last battle of the day, it's not long for the Peak Lords to rise up from their seats and begin to head back to their respective Peaks with those disciples able to follow after in their wake. As the group assembles, there's a few who glance or glare at the Shen-shidi, while said disciple doesn't seem to pay them much mind. There's a mere questioning look in his eyes and she doesn't pay it much mind, without another glance at Shen Qiao, she leads her disciples back to Qing Jing Peak.

C V P + (= | =) + P V C

Liu Qingge stares at the Qing Jing Disciple before him, there's no sword in the other's procession and he had witness that free for all that happened the first day. As the other had been allowed to use Talismans, at least two of them, Cursed Darkness and Flash Bang. He considers such cowardly but at the same time, the other had won without having a Spirit Sword.

"What's your name?" He demands and those sunset eyes seem to glow slightly, it's an odd coloring for eyes to be, particularly human eyes and yet, the Peak Lord of Qing Jing Peak didn't have a problem with someone with such a feature from studying at her Peak. He wonders just what kind of blood could cause such a color to be inherited.

"This Shen Qiao wondered if Head Disciple Liu had taken the time to listened to the announcement." Remarks the other, Shen Qiao, in a tone that's sporting a hint of amusement. He swears there's a hint of a smirk, too.

He snorts as his hand goes to the hilt of Cheng Luan, his irritation at this young master surging. Lazy. Liu Qingge decides. It's the only reason why he doesn't have a sword at his age.

"Cheap tricks won't work on me." He declares and the other tilts his head slightly to the left. "Oh? You consider the use of Talismans to be a mere trick?"

He gives a sharp nod before pulling Cheng Luan from its sheath while the Qing Jing disciple seems to glint, the orange in those eyes seem to surge a bit. The way the orange moves, it remains him of flickering flame, it's almost hypnotic, which he is why he growls, believing it's a trick to waylay him.

As he charges with Cheng Luan in hand but, by the time he's within range, something is tightening around his legs. With a pull, his legs are pulled together and he falls flat on his face, he manages to keep his sword from being under him. As Liu Qingge recovers his wits, he finds a white bandage about his legs, he tries to break out but it doesn't seem to work, the bandage seems to constrict a bit as he tries to force the bandage to shred itself.

What follows if a very embarrassing moment of his life along with the beginnings of... something undefined. As he looks around, he finds the end of the bandage snaking from Shen Qiao's left pants leg. "Cheater!" He declares.

"Not really." The other states in a calm voice while there's a slight bemuse smirk ghosting the lips. "As I don't possess a Spirit Sword, I can register this bandage as a Spiritual Tool. Same with how I was allowed to register those Talismans from before."

"After all, we do have a Peak who's disciples are expected to master the creation and use of." Shen Qiao adds as he feels something snake around his arms, he finds the end seemingly expanding in length with each loop, which is how his arms become bound with ease as he'd been a bit too stunned to react in a timely manner.

With Cheng Luan now upon the ground, he begins to struggle to get his arms free but the end of the bandage is beginning to snake about his upper body, going from his right shoulder and neck down to his left side before beginning to loop about his body. Many accusations and names escape his mouth without him giving it much thought.

"This Shen Qiao will enlighten Liu Qingge- shixiong about this humble one." There's a smile that reminds him of a cat that's caught its prey. "This Shen Qiao was a mere rogue Cultivator not that long ago. As in, about nine months ago is when this one was invited to join Qing Jing Peak by Peak Lord Su Xinghe."

He stills while there's a lot of whispering going on among those in the audience and he even hears his own Shizun inquire to his Shigu, his Shijie, Peak Lord Su Xinghe. Liu Qingge finds it hard to believe what he'd just been told and yet, what did Shen Qiao have to gain by lying about it? "Did Liu Qingge- shixiong not wonder why this Shen Qiao hadn't participated in the Immortal Conference that occurred recently? Or that he never met this Shen Qiao before this inter Sect Tournament?"

And so, he stares at Shen Qiao, his heart pounding as he feels his face heat up. He's familiar with embarrassment and so, he concludes that's what he's overwhelmed with. As he recovers himself enough to swallow, he begins to curse out the Qing Jing disciple while resuming to struggle against the bandage, which has warped him up about the waist now.

As his mouth gets covered and he's wiggling as he strains against the bandage, in the end, the match goes to Shen Qiao. Once that's been announced, the bandage is quick to loosen before returning to the owner, disappearing up that pant's leg. What's surprising and causing more embarrassing is that the other steps forward and picks him up viva the collar of his uniform, he bats the hands away.

After a few seconds, the other sighs before turning and walking out of the arena. Liu Qingge gazes heatedly at the other's back before pushing himself up off the ground. As he glowers around, he forms a Sword Seal and causes Cheng Luan to raise up from the ground. With his other hand, he sheaths his sword before stalking out of the arena.

Without any real thought, he heads back to his Peak and began to destroy the training dummies that are posted there. His mind reviewing the feel of the bandage about his body. Of how helpless he felt.

His face continues to burn from embarrassment.

C V P + (= | =) + P V C

Winning the inter Sect Tournament was fairly easy, given that Liu Qingge-shixiong had been the one everyone knew you had to beat. As he had eliminated said Head Disciple on his second match after the free for all of the first day, few seem to feel all that confident when facing against him in a fight. Particularly as said future Peak Lord had sulked off back to his Peak after their match.

There's plenty of acidic glares from various Qing Jing disciples, majority of which being the men but there's the odd woman to send such a look at him. The Bai Xhan Peak disciples were very vocal about his method of winning against their Shixiong. He gets some polite congratulations from members of other Peaks besides his own and Liu Qingge-shixiong's.

So, following behind his Shizun to her bamboo house, Shen Qiao considers what kind of conversation they'll about to have. They go through that the song and dance of polite conversation and of the steps that teacher and student are heavily focused on. So, when the lull happens, he's content to let it settle for a time, it's clear that his Shizun has her own thoughts to organize.

"You are having trouble forming a Golden Core." She finally states and he inclines his head. "It's not because I'm too old." He states, knowing she likely thought it was his age that was the cause, not when he'd been able to find various plants and consume them in order to ensure that his age wouldn't be a problem for nearly a century, if the books and those he'd become acquainted with during his eleven years of wandering around without any particular goal in mind are correct about the order of consumption that could help build upon such benefits.

"It's... my eyes weren't always like they are." Shen Qiao goes on to admit. "They were hazel green when I was younger, though I will admit that the brown did begin to alter to a more orange brown."

He holds up a hand and focuses on the energy that's flowing through his whole body, that doesn't keep to his spirit veins. Willing it to pool about the palm of his right hand. It's slow but the skin of his palm does begin to get tinted orange before it begins to spiral up out of his skin. There's clear intent on the way the orange energy would raise and fall, acting like a flame.

Then, he gets tired and the effect begins to fade away. Closing his palm, he offers his hand to her. Shen Qiao doesn't look at his Shizun. "It's an odd power and doesn't keep to my spirit veins. It doesn't really affect my Qi, it compliments it in ways, particularly when I will it to but it also gets into conflict with it on certain things. Not many but, forming a Golden Core seems to be an issue of conflict." Pooling and holding Qi in a particular area within my spirit veins is the ultimate issue.

Shen Qiao knows that it's this orange energy that also seems to be the source of how accurate his ability to sense danger and safety. It also seems to be what allows him to connect easily to his surroundings without needing to meditate for hours. Temporal effects of entering that state is generally like a snap shot of the world around him, everything seems to freeze while he's able to think easily as he observes the area. It's an odd, out of body experience as he's body doesn't move and yet, he seems to be able to wander the area with just a thought.

"Interesting." Peak Lord Su Xinghe after she checks his wrist, this time, the Qi isn't just probing through his spirit veins but throughout his bone, muscle, blood vessels, and skin. It's rather uncomfortable but is more focusing on keeping that energy from surging forward to expel his Shizun's Qi.

"This is why you are so focus on studying Arrays and Talismans." It's not a question, particularly since she had withdrawn her examination and he pulls his arm back to his body. "As you can't manipulate Qi internally into the beginnings of a Foundation."

"I will need your written accounts." He nods in agreement. "Of course, we will need to involve some of the other Peak Lords." Shen Qiao suspected they did.

"For now, continue doing as before as you likely know what works and what doesn't." Shizun states. "Be sure to bring such by curfew."

"Yes Shizun." He says as he gets up and gives her a bow before leaving to begin the task of going through his belongings for said accounts.

T S _ ^ _ S T

Shen Qingqiu stares down at the blank page. The book before him allows him to write or draw some that will show up on a different book. The holder of said other book is someone he'd encountered during his teen years, before he joined Cang Qiong Mountain Sect.

That the person is a Demon doesn't bother him, after all, Tianlang-Jun is the uncle of an associate of his, one Zhuzhi-Lang. He suspects that whatever issue that Huan Hua Palace had with the Heavenly Demon, it was more of a private issue and hadn't really involved the Sects. Thus, why he had Shang Qinghua gift a Qiankun Pouch to Zhuzhi-Lang, most of which should be used to help ensure that Tianlang-Jun's safety and health until which time the Seals holding the Demon under that mountain can be undone.

The book, well, he's written any number of stories, most of which involve lovers being betrayed by those they trusted. That they parted in death, often with empty vengeance having been enacted. Glancing towards the urn on his shelf, it contains the poisoned body of one Su Xiyan, who'd also been pregnant, the child she gave birth to hadn't been affected by the poison.

He doesn't know where the babe ended up, Shen Qingqiu had been more interested in questioning what lingered in the area about how Su Xinyan ended up in such a state and place. The answers... He closes his eyes, it's hard knowing but not being able to go through with the emotions such knowledge sparks.

So, he's been making use of his Shidi, Shang Qinghua's connections with the Northern Demons for various reasons but mostly, for picking up any happenings of Demons and Huan Hua Palace. It seems that the future Mobei-Jun is incline to sharing such knowledge, he assumes it's due to said Demon having a personal issue with said Sect as well.

On the human side, Shen Qingqiu has people gathering information about any dead Huan Hua Palace disciples. The number of dead disciples of the male gender during what should be Su Xiyan's teenage years and some of her adult ones is rather large. The fact that the Palace Master has picked up a young boy who shared some similarities with Su Xiyan doesn't sit well with him, not when he suspects that the man having lusted after said student.

Gently shaking his head, Shen Qingqiu regards what it is he wishes to set to the page before him. Autumn Eyes is the pen name he's using and he's, well, tried of just writing out short stories. He knows what it is he misses from his previous existence as Sawada Tsunayoshi, it's Manga and Anime.

Without thinking too much about it, Shen Qingqiu draws something of a self portrait before adding a leaf like make about the upper face. The image is rather cartoonish and he is sure to have the sword on the opposite side that he generally wears it along with having a fan in his off hand that he generally holds it. The head is a bit large for the body and yet, as he finishes, he writes the characters of the pen name to the right of the cartoonish self portrait.

Studying it for a bit, he decides to add some color. And so, by the time an hour has passed, there's a colourful self portrait of Autumn Eyes. The mask is a dull red with the robes being a rusty yellow with dark orange trim. The sword sheath is a dull brown with the fan's wood being a rich dark red with autumn leaves upon the open fan.

Doing it with a brush is rather trying. He recalls pencils, particular those coloured ones. As the paint dries, his mind is in the present but back in time, when he'd had another body, name, and life. It wasn't a good one, any attempts at TRYING all end up tiring him out and having more trouble with his balance for the next few days.

Sawada Tsunayoshi had a mother, looking back at her with a more mature mind set, Shen Qingqiu knows she wasn't all there. That she seemed to be off in her own world and he blames that absentee father back then. Now, he suspects that she just didn't have the strength to face reality of her life, that it was ultimately on his mother for living that kind of life, always waiting on that no good father as a life line. Putting her whole existence on the line for a man that clearly didn't want to have a family, not really.

Letting out a sigh and feeling rather tired, Shen Qingqiu closes the book. The paint is likely dry and so, he gets ready for bed. His emotions and mind trying to untangle themselves from that old pain and yearning. It had taken him a long time to accept that it's likely that Sawada Tsunayoshi died that day, that his hopes that the body just went into a coma or something was just a daydream.

C V P + (= | =) + P V C

It surprises Tianlang-Jun of what gets added to this strange book of his. Checking the next page but there's nothing, and so, he returns to the first page. The image is at first just black lines but then, color begins to bloom. By the time it all comes into focus, he's rather intrigued.

And so, he studies the silly looking individual that sports the characters for Autumn Eyes by the right corner of the page. The style is rather childish but, the more he studies it, the more it begins to appeal to his sensibilities! The little figure is clearly a Cultivator, the orange eyes reminds him of someone he knows his nephew is friends with.

The robes' colours do bring to mind autumn, which, is likely the point. Even the fan sports tiny leaves of brown, orange, and red upon it. The hair is in a half ponytail and sports a simple orange ribbon. There's a smile upon the face and the mask that looks to be made out of reddish leaves allows one to image the eyes crinkling up in emotion.

Letting out a sigh, bemoaning that he's stuck in this tiny cave, various Talismans softly glowing, keeping the earth and stone from collapsing into his space. There's another set of Talismans that are steadily working on dispelling the Seals upon him that keep him rooted to this spot. His nephew had commissioned this set of boxes that share the same pocket space, allowing for things to pass from one box to the other.

They finished the day before he received that letter. It's hard to believe. Tianlang-Jun muses. That only five years had passed since that day.

One box on his person and the other upon his nephew's, Zhuzhi-Lang. It's due to them that he'd been able to keep in contact with his nephew. The Talismans he'd had on his person had activated on their own, creating a space as the mountain descends upon him. At the chains of Seals that pierced his being.

And so, for the first year and half, he'd been unable to move from where he'd stood that fateful day. Then it changed, he'd been able to move his feet and sit down, finally. That he laid down and had a long, restful sleep. He'd let his nephew know of such a development.

Tianlang-Jun assumes that he'll be able to leave in about another five years or, perhaps, less. Still, there's been no new developments concerning his nephew's search for Autumn Eyes. He really wants to met said Cultivator, if only to convince him to sign the cover of this interesting book that had been gifted to them. Perhaps I can convince him to expand some of those stories?

Ah yes, he's read and re-read the various short stories that this book slowly possesses. The stories were ones that had gotten him thinking about what happened, what went wrong all those years ago. At first, he'd considered that Su Xiyan had betrayed him but as more stories got added, he began to wonder if she actually did, after all, she hadn't been there, had she?

And why should I believe everything that my enemy says? Tianlang-Jun reasoned to himself after a while. A-Zhi hasn't found any leads concerning Su Xiyan.

And so, walking over to where he put the box, he opens it and sticks a hand in, pulling out ink set along with paper and brush. Sitting down, he begins to make his ink from the ink stone, his mind going over what he'll write to his nephew.

C V P + (= T S _ ^ _ S T =) + P V C

As he settles down upon the cliff that overlooks the expanse of meadow below. Shen Qingqiu is just one of the three to arrive on time, his Shidis of Ku Xing Peak and Qian Cao Peak have arrived along side himself. They give each other slight nods as they pick their spots, waiting for those who wish to join the Sect to begin arriving from the stairs.

With the sun rising still some time off, there is various disciples milling around below, near the stair case. Most are likely eating something as they move to and fro. Most of those disciples are from An Ding Peak and he has his doubts about what last minute tasks they are here for. Not that he has much evidence nor was his Shidi here for him to inquire.

And so, as dawn approaches, Shen Qingqiu finds himself mentally going over what statements he's gotten from Shang Qinghua concerning the experimental Talismans that were meant to allow human crops to grow in the Demon realm or whatever plants that Demons wanted to domesticate into a farming crop. Most of said Talismans are used in the Northern Demon Kingdom, so, it's a bit hard to get a baseline given that he's had to modify most to allow plants to survive without any soil to anchor into along with altering the snow and ice around the roots to be more... firm.

Still, he's been able to get a number of ingredients that were plentiful in the Demon realm instead of money. It's the arrangement he'd set up with his Shidi, which Shang Qinghua is both happy about, given the amount of funds needed concerning various issues that maintains the Sect, but also a bit exasperating given some of the things he wants to acquire are not from the Northern Demon Kingdom, thus are troublesome to get.

And as another one of his Shidi arrives, it's dawn, which signals that the candidates should be gathered at the bottom of the stairs, ready for the test to begin. Most of the children trying to join should be around ten years of age, but there's been a few times teenagers had tried out. Generally, fifteen and sixteen being the uppermost age that one can be accepted into the Sect. His thoughts change from the previous thoughts into regarding something a touch more personal.

He knows Yue Qingyuan was once such teen candidate to be accepted, that Qi-ge had found his way to Cang Qiong Mountain Sect, so much so that he ended up as the succeeding disciple of Qiong Ding Peak and thus, the over all Sect Leader. It also seems that either Yue Qingyuan hasn't recognized him or the other had decided that his leaving meant their past is just that, the past. Shen Qingqiu hadn't felt incline to inquire all that much with his former fellow slave. He isn't sure if he wanted to try and re-spark that old friendship, particularly given that the other had, in the end, held little trust in him, despite having strove to prove himself trustworthy.

Yue Qingyuan does trust Shen Qingqiu and he doesn't want to lose that by bringing up memories of lost childhood. He wasn't ashamed of how he'd acted as a child, being a street urchin slave wasn't a kind existence in the end. That the adults around him at that time had no problem ignoring the situation is the reason why it had been allowed to happen. So, being kind in such a situation, it wasn't a virtue but a hindrance, something to be exploited.

Recalling the last time he'd tried to beg, to pled for Qi-ge to come with him in leaving... It brings up sour feelings and old anger. He might not know what events have occurred with his old friend, but knows it left its mark on his Sect Leader. In the manner? He doesn't know, just that there's a sorrow clinging to Yue Qingyuan like a leech and it's unlikely the other will ever fully be able to address it as well.

As children begin to show up near the stairs, his thoughts on the subject comes to an end. The first among the group of children are near the older spectrum. His Shimei, Qi Qingqi, arrives with Liu Qingge and Yue Qingyuan. There's a number of Peak Lords greeting the arrival of the Sect Leader and only return to watching the candidates upon getting their greeting returned.

Liu Qingge moves to sit by him, Shen Qingqiu can practically feel the scowl upon that face of his. The other Cultivator never seemed to recover from that defeat he'd experienced during their match in that inter Sect Tournament. They've sparred every few months after he got Xiu Ya, which occurred early in his third year within the Sect, about two months after they figured out a way to allow him to form his Golden Core. The 'container' they created to house that orange energy only lasted two months instead of their estimated six, thankfully, he'd been able to create it and fortify it within that time, he'd ended up in the Spirit Cave for a month with a slight fever.

He came out of said caves with his Golden Core proved that he had done it as they'd hoped, to ensure that the orange flame like energy couldn't purge it from his being. It's been a bit hard to add to it, but it seems that all those plants and methods in preserving his potential had paid off well. Thus, Shen Qingqiu went from the successor with the weakest Cultivation to the one with the strongest and he's been able to keep up, although the methods in order to do so have had to evolve to allow for said growth, but it's more then worth it.

"That one." His Shidi gestures with his head, causing Shen Qingqiu to realize that there's been a conversation going on around him without him realizing it, being too consumed with his own thoughts. As for the child that has just been gestured at, they seem to be either ten or eleven, then as he takes in the robes, decides to add a year or two, which is eleven or twelve.

"You plan to pick him?" Qi Qingqi inquires and the War God of Bai Zhan Peak replies with a grunt, "If he wants to come, he'll walk there under his own power."

He's incline to agree with his Shidi, it's a well established tradition of Bai Zhan Peak. That the child in question will find the Cultivation method of Bai Zhan Peak to be the best is something he suspect to be right. "Street urchin." He murmurs out loud.

"There's nothing wrong with that, Shidi." Yue Qingyuan gently rebuffs and he inclines his head. "This Lord knows, after all, this one traveled widely during his youth. So much so, one might wonder if this one hadn't had the same humble beginnings." His sunset eyes turning to regard their Sect Leader.

"Ah, then this one misunderstood Shidi's comment." The older man admits. "It's not like he'd be suited to Qing Jing." Comments Liu Qingge.

"This Lord agrees, that child would learn better under those with great focus on physical Cultivation then spiritual focus one." Shen Qingqiu agrees, although he does his best to ignore the tug, the pull that would return his focus to said child.

He's unsure why the energy is trying to draw him to the child, in the end, he resolves to check in on the child in the future. Shen Qingqiu doesn't doubt that the child will join the Sect as a disciple, it's just, which Peak will he try for? It might not be Bai Zhan Peak, but it wouldn't be that surprising if the child did end up there, after all, his Shidi is rather... famous .

And so, he studies the group, he knows Ning Yingying wishes for a younger disciple but already considered an alternative to that particular request. There's a few from wealthy families he could pick from but, well, given the way they glance off at the disciples from Bai Zhan Peak, it's clear where they plan to try for. Ming Fan had tried his first time to join but he'd failed, thus he'd accepted the boy as a favour to both the family and the boy himself.

Having gotten such an aspiration out of his system, the boy was more settled in joining his Peak. Far better then if he'd taken Ming Fan right away. Thus, he takes a moment to regard whether it would be worth it, to approach them when they fail. As sheltered children, it'll be a shock to their system about what life would be like if they success in passing through the testing of the Peak.

In the end, Shen Qingqiu doesn't feel any other incline to any of the children. And so, his thoughts began to turn into a different direction. Namely, what kind of pages he'll be adding to the book along with what kind of story he'll wanting to draw. In the end, he'd come to create a manga as he'd run out of interest in writing up short stories, he wanted to do something different and so, he in the end, created a manga. He often thinks of it as Little Cultivators World, although most of the 'stories' involve Cang Qiong Mountain but there's some that involve the other Sects, although he'll admit, when ever he does Huan Hua Palace, it... well, it's a bit dark but he'd done his best to make it comedic regardless of how dark the issue was being shown.

And so, the day ends, there's few Peak Lords remaining upon the cliff. Either they had new disciples to greet or they didn't find anyone they think is suitable. "Thank you for keeping me company, Liu Qingge. After all, there's a few who tried for your Peak." Shen Qingqiu says once he's incline to leave.

"You seem to have a lot on your mind." Remarks his Shidi and he inclines his head. "Yes, it seems that there's a lot of thoughts that kept me occupied this day."

They both had raised up from their respective seats. The remaining disciples will ensure that the remaining candidates will be safely taken down the stairs, back to their families. They both take out their respective swords and with a parting good bye, they head back to their respective Peaks.

T S _ ^ _ S T

Cartoonish version of Liu Qingge, termed Xiao Qingge, glares at the ground, the Immortal Conference came to an end. Approaching Xiao Qingge is Xiao Qingqiu. There's a fan that's slowly moving and upon spotting his Shidi glaring at the ground, is curious. A questioning mark appears over Xiao Qingqiu's head and he approaches.

"Xiao Qingge, what has the ground done to you?" Inquires Xiao Qingqiu upon approaching. Head tilted to the side in a questioning manner while the closed fan rests on his chin.

"The Endless Abyss opened up here." States Xiao Qingge with arms uncrossing and going to the hips. "Xiao Bing turned out to be a Demon!"

Xiao Qingqiu sighs, but Xiao Qingge doesn't pay it much mind. "So, I demanded to know why he joined the Sect and the Devilish Demon claimed he didn't know he had Demon blood!"

Image of a woman in Huan Hua Palace uniform appears over Xiao Qingqiu's head. Then a cartoonish image of Tianlang-Jun gets added. Then, an image of Xiao Bing joins the two with arrows pointing out which features came from the respective previous people with the word Mama and Papa.

"Yes, I believe it." Xiao Qingqiu admits as the image vanishes above his head. "Half-Demons are a thing, Shidi."

Xiao Qingge blinks and looks rather startled at the comment. "You knew he was a half-Demon?!" A finger is pointed at Xiao Qingqiu.

"You didn't notice? I mean, she was rather famous Cultivator. Her teacher was said to be rather fond of her?" Xiao Qingqiu remarks with another questioning mark above the head.

"..." Xiao Qingge takes many different thinking poses before a look of frustration crosses his face. "It doesn't matter! I got fed up with his lies and tried to cut off his lying head!"

Image of Xiao Bing falling down, the head and body separated. It goes away when Xiao Qingge admits, "I only managed to cut off one of his arms though! He fell down before I could finish the job."

There's a breeze that goes through the spot as Xiao Qingqiu considers this particular news. "So...? You regret cutting his arm off?" Inquires Xiao Qingqiu, head tilted slight to the other side from before in a questioning manner.

"What? No!" Xiao Qingge snaps, arms crossing over the chest once more. "I just want to glare at his body some more!"

"Xiao Bing's arm got cut off? His Demonic heritage is free?" Muses Xiao Qingqiu. "Welp, you might want to start praying now, Shidi."

"Eh? Why?!" Demands Xiao Qingge. "There's no chance he could survive without an arm!"

"Heavenly Demons' can regenerate limbs." Explains Xiao Qingqiu. "Xiao Bing is the son of Tianlang-Jun and Su Xiyan."

"Odds are good, he's not dead." Continues Xiao Qingqiu. "And if my information about the Endless Abyss is correct, there's a sword down there that we likely don't want to see welded."

Xiao Qingge looks interested in the sword. Image of different kinds of sword appear over his head. "What's it called?"

Xiao Qingqiu gets a scary appearance with the top of his face getting shaded. "Xin Mo." Gets whispered.

Xiao Qingge considers this before snorting like a boar. "What are the odds that half-breed will find such a sword?"

Xiao Qingqiu counters, "What were the odds that we'd house and teach the bastard son of Tainlang-Jun?"

Xiao Qingge considers this point. Then turns away from looking at Xiao Qingge. "Even if he does come back, I'll be sure to defeat that Devilish Demon!"

Xiao Qingqiu stares at Xiao Qingge's back before turning away and walking away. Thought statement above Xiao Qingqiu's head, Right... Like you'll be a match of a half-Demon who survived the Endless Abyss for a few years.

Letting out a sigh, Shen Qingqiu re-reads that manga section of that book he'd created to keep Tianlang-Jun entertained. While the scene he drew wasn't how that particular conversation went between Liu Qingge and himself, but some of it was what his Shidi shared with him. The fact that Luo Binghe's Seal broke and Liu Qingge did try to kill the young half-Demon, only managing to slice off an arm while the younger fell into the Endless Abyss.

All he did was grill the other about what changes Luo Binghe had undergone, in the end, the demonic mark upon the brow and crimson eyes were all that seemed to change. Thus, he finally realized just who's kid his Shizhi was.

A few dozen pages later, he re-reads the one that he'd draw concerning idea of how to confront the Old Palace Master. The image of his 'alter ego' causes a slight smile to grace his lips. He did a cartoon version of all three men who have Heavenly Demon blood, sitting down and allowing Autumn Eyes to explain a easier, simple plan that involved abduction of said man from his Sect. There's a lot of reasons why it would work, mostly because the Huan Hua Palace disciples were, on average, weakest out of the four famous Sects.

The next part that got added the month later has to do with which plants to use to ensure the truth comes out of the old pervert's mouth. Compulsion towards self truths being the most important ones he listed. Then he named titles of various books to ensure that such a scene could be seen and heard by so many people.

That the three did go through with his suggested plans did warm him to a point. Closing the book, he considers the request that Tianlang-Jun had and the one Luo Binghe had. Both were understandable but also troublesome.

Tianlang-Jun wants to know who Autumn Eyes is and to get an autograph upon a bit of fan art that the man had drawn up. Shen Qingqiu suspects there's more to that request then what the Demon has given. Yet, he is thinking about it if only to deal with the issue of his son's request, which also involves his Shidi's stubbornness.

Luo Binghe had came out of the Endless Abyss, although not without spending about two years within. It seems the heir of the Northern Kingdom had thought his idea concerning how to deal with his Uncle to be a good one. So, the heir search Endless Abyss randomly until he did find Luo Binghe. They struck a deal, once they got over a battle, which is understandable given the feral state that Shizhi had regressed into.

So, things went well for that heir and then Tianlang-Jun got wind about this son of his being in the Northern Kingdom. His eyes settle upon the urn as he can only guess what events occurred between the father, son, and nephew but in the end, Luo Binghe wanted a rematch with his Shidi and he suspects that a grudge is between the former teacher and student.

He understand why the two had their opinions about one another. The terms of no killing the defeated fighter but that doesn't cover crippling. He didn't want Liu Qingge crippled, for all that the other had no compulsion about causing what he believed to be a crippling blow. The difference has to do with Luo Binghe didn't end up crippled while Liu Qingge would be. He thinks to himself.

So, in the end, it's not much of a question of when he'll end up introducing himself to Tianlang-Jun and meeting Zhuzhi-Lang again. It's a matter of, will he be able to convince the elder Demon to help reattach Liu Qingge's arm? And what price would he have for such a grace ?

The urn didn't belong to him, Su Xiyan's body belongs to the man she loved enough to save his son. He hadn't burn the body, he'd done everything to preserve it but also needed to store it somewhere he can keep an eye on it. Thus, he created a Qiankun urn to hold the body of Tianlang-Jun's lover and Luo Binghe's birth mother.

Getting up, he walks over to where the urn rests. Picking it up, he considers things. It's not like he hadn't had plans to return it. He had commissioned an outfit just to do so.

Pulling out the Sending Stone, it's a permanent way of communication. Pooling a bit of Qi into it, he waits for the stone to turn a blue, for now, it's green. When it does, he's once more seated at his table with the urn upon the table before him. "Yes?" His Shidi's voice, the Peak Lord of An Ding Peak sports an echo quality.

"You still have that outfit commission stored away?" Shen Qingqiu asks. "The one with the leaf styled mask?"

"Oh, yea? You want me to deliver it?" Ask Shang Qinghua.

"No, taking it out of where you stored it and bring it to your house. I'll be arriving within the next two hours." He explains. "I also wish for you to make arrangements so that I might pay a visit to an old acquaintance of mine along with that uncle of his."

"Old... You mean..." There's clear dawning of realization, as though something finally clicks into place within his Shidi's head.

"Yes. I think you understand the reason for this visit." He muses and he hears Shang Qinghua sigh. "Right, I'll have it arranged within the time period." The other promises.

The stone returns to a green before he withdraws his Qi and it returns to its natural coloring. "It's time for a reunion with your lover, Su Xiyan."

C V P + (= | =) + P V C

Tianlang-Jun looks up as A-Zhi enters and the sight of the Cultivator's eyes, suddenly, he recalls that brat that he'd seen his nephew with. The one with eyes that seem to be like the sunset. That dark orange that no human should have and yet, that kid did.

He recalls that the brat couldn't Cultivate properly and thus, focused his efforts into Arrays and Talismans. Into knowing plants and beasts. Who'd stitched a snake doll for Zhuzhi-Lang as a gift when the other admitted he felt something going to be happening soon in his life. His eyes drift down to the sword and some how, he suspects that he knew what happened.

Shen... Huh, what were the odds? Tianlang-Jun muses with a slight shake of his head as he returns the polite greetings. The outfit does very much look like the one the other did draw for the character of Autumn Eyes, complete with leaf make and the sword sheath.

"Well, I never though I'd see you again, brat." He remarks with a grin and the grown brat sighs while Zhuzhi-Lang blinks. "Shen... Can't recall the other part but I'm sure my nephew remembers it better, eh?"

His nephew's eyes widen before the name comes out, " Shen Qiao." The grown brat chuckles slightly, a hand goes through his air. "You weren't suppose to guess so quickly." Remarks the brat while he could tell that his nephew was overjoyed to see this friend of his once more.

"Anyway, I believe you will do right by her." And urn comes out from one of the sleeves. "I used my chances to learnt what befell her instead of searching for her babe."

His heart almost stills at the thought of what the brat could mean by that. "She... You..." Words escape him.

"You were Sealed before he released her after drinking the poison." The brat explains, which clears up a few things about what the old pervert had said. "He wouldn't let her out of the cell until either she drank it or gave birth." And tossed the babe into the water of the prison.

His left hand moves down before balling into a fist. Yes, Tianlang-Jun can imagine why the old pervert blamed him for 'dirtying' her. And why she died of poison. The man, even under the combination of truth compulsion plants couldn't admit it to himself, couldn't confront the truth that his student died because of his own actions instead of Tianlang-Jun's. That's why the antidote failed to work.

Getting up and relaxing his fist, he picks up the urn and pulls it over. "Just unseal the lid and gently tilt it and the body will come out." Explains the grown brat and he wonders how good of a condition the body is in.

The short stories do make a lot more sense, the focus on those around the lovers being the cause of ruin for them... He'd hoped but hadn't really expected it to be so in their case. And so, silence settles and he wonders if there's a price to returning the body, after all, this brat could have changed in more ways then one.

"What do you want in exchange for you ensuring my foolish Shidi to not be crippled for life?" The brat asks and he blinks, snorts, then laughs, it's a mixture of disbelief and just plain humour. There's a slight sigh from his nephew while he tries to regain control over himself, some tears having exit out of his eyes during his fit of laughter.

Tianlang-Jun looks over to where his nephew is and remarks, "Well, I think I'll be a bit busy with other things, so I might miss out on that rematch." He had been incline to witnessed the match but now, well, he saw an opportunity to give his nephew a chance to reconnect with this grown brat before him.

"Uncle!" Exclaims Zhuzhi-Lang as the brat turns to regard his nephew. His nephew stills, there's a slight redness to his nephew's face and ears.

"Ok, that's... ok. Sure, I'll speak with Zhuzhi-Lang about it." The brat agrees with a slight nod and he gives his nephew a Look about this being his chance. His foolish nephew shakes his head in denial.

"So, where's this painting you want me to sign?" Ah yes, he recalls that part and is rather bemused that the other remembers it. Pulling it out from his own sleeve, he puts it down upon the desk.

It's an image he'd drawn trying to mimic the style that the picture story had been drawn in. It's a rather unique way to tell stories and he rather hopes to speak with the author about getting them punished so that others might be inspired to put their own spin on such a way to tell stories. The image is of himself and Su Xiyan, he'd painted the robes, with him in Huan Hua Palace women robes and Su Xiyan in his masculine robes and coloring.

There's a soft snort and bemusing smirk upon the brat's face. "Really? Just, really? You sure you don't want me to sign a different one?" He suspects he knows why the brat is questioning his choice but he's certain that he wants this one to get signed. It's the scene he wished had happened. It might yet happen. The beginnings of an idea forming.

On the right of the painting is Autumn Eyes signature and then on the left is Shen Qingqiu signature with another one but this one is a bit more familiarly done, Shen Qiao. It's a bit more messy compared to the other two, but that's fine. He knows just where to put this after ensuring it's been preserved in a frame, to ensure that the ink doesn't fade with time.

"Now then, why don't you two go out and re-familiarize yourselves with one another? It's been a few decades now, eh?" He suggests and his nephew flushes once again while the grown brat hums in thought.

"Unless Zhuzhi-Lang has other business? We could meet up later, just as long as we do so before the match." Suggests the grown brat.

Soon enough, the two leave his office and he smiles a bit. Tianlang-Jun feels a bit of satisfaction over the reunion. He knew his nephew had grown to like that brat with sunset eyes, even though he found himself put off by the brat. Not that it means that he disliked him, it was more that there's something a bit off with the brat and hearing how hard it was for the brat to Cultivate, he felt he was right.

He could only imagine how much trouble the brat had to go through just to Cultivate that Golden Core of his. In the end, the brat managed it and he's glad for his nephew's sake. He hadn't wanted the brat to die before his nephew got around to figuring out what he felt for the human. His gaze and hand goes to the urn, he can only imagine how well preserved the body was within the pocket space of the urn.

Either way, I'll be visiting the Mausoleum with this urn. Tianlang-Jun decides. Either he'll be able to revive his wife or she'll be entombed within. Both options were acceptable in his mind.

Ending it here

Peak Lords Return to the Skies: AoF

I don't own Age of Fire or Proud Immortal Demon Way(from The Scum Villain's Self Saving System).

As Shen Jiu wakes, it's to a hunger and the feeling of restriction. There's little time for him to consider the strangeness of waking never mind that it seems like he has two eyes. And so, jerking his head up with great force, something gives way and instinct grips him.

And so, a tiny gray body breaks out of an egg shell. Shen Jiu collapses upon the rock and breaths rapidly, there's a presence overhead of him. Blinking, the hatchling gray focuses on the huge green reptile while beginning to notice how different he ultimately is.

There's a pair of forelimbs, legs, and something new, that's behind those new legs of his. "A grey? I guess it's a matter of if he'll manage to win against his brothers." A voice comments to... herself.

Shen Jiu can't help but assume that the voice is feminine. It's the mention of winning and brothers that grabs his attention. Looking around himself, he notices that there's four other eggs upon this rock shelf with him.

Closing his jaws, he watches as egg toothed of his siblings break the shell. There's a certain instinct raising up within him, one that overtakes the urge to rub his snout upon anything around him. Angry hisses escape Shen Jiu's throat as he feels like he's trying to puff up.

Anger is familiar and something Shen Jiu knew what to do with it. And so, when one of his brothers break out of the shell, the scales being blue for this hatchling. Launching himself at the newly hatched rival, who bellows out a challenge, already readying himself for the coming fight with Shen Jiu.

Sadly, his tiny claws barely do anything to those blue scales while pain surges from when the Blue's claws. Managing to evade and break away from this Blue brother of his, Shen Jiu notices the lack of his scales and mentally curses at fate for such a development, many ills already settling in his heart once more.

He barely has time to recover before the Blue recovers enough to charge forward at Shen Jiu. As he moves to evade that charge and the following, clumsy movements, it's then that he notices that he's quicker then this Blue brother of his. Taking in the shelf, a plan begins to form within his mind.

And yet, the unexpected happens as it seems he forgot that there were other eggs hatching. A Red and Orange come at them, the Red brother at Shen Jiu while the Orange towards the Blue. He's sure there's a gasp of astonishment over this, the comment concerning the number of males that hatched seemed to surprise their... mother.

Shen Jiu feels the urge to sneer at this Red brother as he overestimates his charge and couldn't recover from Shen Jiu moving out of the path. He follows after, going for the snout of this Red brother of his. It takes a lot of effort but, in the end, the Red ends up off the shelf and the scent of blood causes him to wash away his recent accomplishment, remembering that he's still not the last male upon this shelf.

He notices a green hatchling but disregards them. Shen Jiu finds that the Blue had won, the Orange is dead and it seems like the Blue is trying to resist something, perhaps conflicting urges. The smell of blood, it stirs his own hunger and his eyes linger on the Orange's body a touch more then he'd like.

The cries of their Red brother from below the shelf seem rather distant. It's something that seems to be a stand off as the Blue and Shen Jiu stare at one another. For the moment, that overwhelming urge to fight one another seem to have peppered out and the more time passed, it seems that Blue brother didn't seem incline to continue to fight him.

Within Shen Jiu himself, there's a number of various things fluttering through his mind. The staring contest ends when the Blue seems to give into a particular urge and rubs the tiny egg tooth from his snout by their shared Orange brother's body. And Shen Jiu snorts, turning his head away, doing his best to sneer and give off the aura of I'm Above This.

Not that he doesn't know what that particular urge is, to rub off said egg tooth but he decided against it. There's a glare from the Blue, who growls out, "YOU!"

It startles him a bit as the Blue marches up to him. " Shen Qingqiu!" The Blue snaps out in a way that Shen Jiu knows but feels like it was rather odd at the same time.

And then, with this Blue brother before him, glaring at him, he flinches as a name almost escapes him. Before Shen Jiu realizes that the name called wasn't the right one for that Person to use. So, he inquires after musing over the coloring along with the tone, "Liu Qingge?"

And thus, he gets 'hugged' by this former Martial Brother of his from a past life, who is his blood and flesh brother in this new one. Some how, this turn of events seem to rather odd, particularly giving the sigh that comes from their new mother. Not that their... sister seems to pay it much heed, given she's started in on eating Orange brother.

[TT - TT]

Shen Jiu huffs as Liu Qingge seems to take this new stage in their lives a bit too of a melodramatic fashion. Oh, they have different names now, ones that fit in with this new life of theirs. Nithor is Liu Qingge's name while his is Niroth, when they are grown, according to their races' custom, NiThor will be how that name is spelt and his own will be NiRoth.

They had spent five years living with their parents and sister, Maier. They'd learn a lot, like that Red brother that he's manage to shove off the shelf is not consider worth their parent's time. Thus, that brother of theirs is nameless and ignored. Where that Red brother of theirs wandered off to after their parents brought up the matters of the Lavadome along with something called the Drakwatch and their counterpart, which are called Firemaidens.

An Empire of Dragons, Lavadome. Shen Jiu isn't sure if he should be glad that the race he'd been reincarnated into could and did found an Empire. He's a scaless gray drake, which came with advantages and disadvantages, which he'll have to balance during this new period of his life.

Their sister, Maier, seems to be wavering over whether she would join the Firemaidens for a time or if she'll pursue something else. Given Shen Jiu had encouraged her musical talents, he rather hopes she'll pursue perfecting it, learning what passes as musicians for a Dragon, or, to use another term for female Dragons, Dragonelle. He would have avoided joining this Drakwatch if not that it's one of the ways a drake could earn a post later in life.

He suspects that Liu Qingge will surge to the front of the pack when they join. Even now, the former War God of Bai Zhan, enjoys brawling. Of course, this brother of his calls it sparring but given he isn't overly interested in fighting with claws or fangs, never mind with flame.

It doesn't help that there's so much chaos that's been on going for years, particular after the death of FeHazathant, the first Tyr. The current Tyr of Lavadome is one SiHazathant, who's mates with Regalia. There's a lot of politics that's been ongoing, things that many don't particularly like. It makes him glad that his parents had manage to get their promotion, so they didn't have to nest in Lavadome, so there was distance between the explosive situation that's waiting to go off within the capital of Lavadome.

Snorting, he tries to shake his thoughts from the situation that's waiting for them at Lavadome. That old egg tooth of his had long since turned into something of a permanent fixture upon his snout.

Shen Jiu hasn't found it to hinder him all that much and only has the beginnings of an idea of how to make use of it, now that he can 'breath' fire.

Feeling Liu Qingge not behind him, he pauses to look over at said brother of his. Following this brother of his eye line, he notices that it's dawn. It takes him seconds to realize that it's been far too long since he witness such a sight, be it from being in the Water Prison or growing up in a cave, under the care of NiGaar and Rasha.

Walking back, he sits down next to the Blue and joins him in watching the coming dawn. While Liu Qingge isn't who he'd want by his side, he knows that having someone else in the same situation as himself from the very beginning... It was an uncountable stroke of fortune and luck.

[TT - TT]

He never thought that he'd end up returning to the world he previously came from. Given the way his Blue brother holds himself, Shen Jiu suspects that never did Liu Qingge. The sight of a certain Beast before them, well, it brought back old memories of when the Beast was first upon his Peak.

"Now then, which of you are my dear Shizun?" The Beast inquires, the demonic sword remains in hand. Acting as though the Beast is clueless, not with that sword.

"Liu Mingyan?" Liu Qingge inquires and it's then that he notices the number of others, hugging the walls of this hall. The veiled Cultivator jerks slightly at her name.

"I'm disappointed with you, A-Yan." Liu Qingge begins in on a lecture towards his former younger sister. He pays it only half a ear, having caught sight of one dear woman he raised up and that one that he'd meet in the hell hole of a Household.

Shen Jiu's feelings towards these two were ones that still cause him to pounder upon them far too much. Then again, I shouldn't have my previous life's memories in the first place. He muses as Liu Mingyan finds her voice in order to speak up.

"He killed you! Murdered you!" Is her only defence, the life line, really, now. The only thing that had to be true or else, everything she'd been a part of, what she allowed to happen, was about 'if only Shen Qingqiu wasn't scum, hadn't murdered my brother, then I wouldn't have done these things'.

"He Did Not!" Roars his Blue brother, he shrinks a bit at the tone and volume. His head turning to regard Liu Qingge. "He. Tried. To. Save. My. Life!" It's said in such a way as to brand each word in the air, an impossible task, sadly.

As his Blue brother does his best to reign in his various emotions, there's many a voice decrying such a statement, which doesn't surprise him all that much. Hypocrites. Is all Shen Jiu could think as he lazily takes in the room, his mind slowly working through various plans.

"Enough!" Bellows Liu Qingge, wings flaring as the other moves as though to stand between Shen Jiu and those around them. "How would any of you know the truth of it? None of you were in the caves with us!"

Those within the room flinch at the volume, Shen Jiu didn't see the point. These were, in the end, sheep. They followed the herd without much of a thought or interest in the truth. None of his fellow Peak Lords had cared, particularly given that a certain Peak Lord had the means to figure it out through their particular brand of skills and techniques.

That Mu Qingfang never did so, it was a clear statement that he felt confident in what had ultimately happened. Not even Yue Qingyuan believed him about the matter. None wanted to think that a Qi Deviation could ever touch the 'flawless' War God of Bai Zhan, never mind it would be the more likely option then Shen Qingqiu could best his more establish Martial Sibling.

As his Blue brother explains about his death, along with continuing to scold Liu Mingyan concerning HER life choices. Shen Jiu manages to tilt his head and take in the Array that help anchor them here. He does it as discretely as he could, given his size and how everyone is facing the pair of them.

There's plenty of people who voice their 'grievances' with him but Liu Qingge stands firm in his conviction. After all, he had haunted/attached to Shen Jiu back then. He's unsure of what else Liu Qingge had been privy too, but it's not like he can be overly angry over it. Not when it'd over and done with.

As he gets enough of a sight of this Array. It takes him a bit to muddle over what it means along with could it be used to their advantage? Shen Jiu might not be an expert on Arrays, but it also seems that Xin Mo might be the item that's holding it together, given it's rather shabbily created.

Turning to regard the Beast, the sword is indeed glowing more then it had before. And yet, it's clear that the Beast isn't paying that demonic sword any real attention. Xin Mo. Heart Demon. Shen Jiu muses, doing his best to recall what few bits of information he'd read and observed.

I'm his Heart Demon. Shen Jiu realizes when the Beast sends a Look that could mean so many things. No, I'm the source of it. It's the Beast that's been nurturing it and Xin Mo has only help enrich it.

And suddenly, he's tired upon such a realization dawns on him. It hardly matters, really. He had died in the Water Prison and yet, this Beast never would let it go. Let him go. Not until the Beast dies, likely viva that demonic sword in his procession. Even now, that obsession is blinding him, isn't it? To what he has, all he can see is what he can't have.

You learnt the wrong lessons from this old teacher, huh, Beast? He muses to himself. Having looked back upon his life, he knew what went wrong, the first, was swearing all of his loyalty to his Qi-ge without requesting that the other swear it back. It's clear that Yue Qingyuan... No, Qi-ge never had much trust in Shen Jiu.

He valued a promise made by a child when he should have put value on looking for a way to escape. That he'd placed far too much trust on a child who barely had the means to fulfill it. So many things rippled out from that particular promise made by that soft Qi-ge to that prickly Xiao Jiu.

Still, it's in the past, and I'm not a Cultivator. So, no Heart Demons plaguing me. No need for a Golden Core either. Not with a life that could natural reach a thousand years of age. Shen Jiu muses to himself, a slight smile.

The discussion around him, that had been going on and on. Something changing, feeling grass under his feet, he suspects things weren't going to last. The balance is changing, in which direction, well, Shen Jiu is sure that this likely won't be anything that really matters, in the end, in regards to Liu Qingge and himself.

The flow of events weren't easy to know what started it but how it ended... Xin Mo lodged in a certain Beast's heart. The Array flaring as the chamber had changed into that of a meadow before those people and chamber fade away, at least in Shen Jiu's view point.

"He's dead? Like that?" Liu Qingge inquires, turning to look at him.

"Xin Mo." He states simply. "It's never failed to kill its welder." Shen Jiu isn't sure how things will proceed for Ning Yingying but, in the end, all must face their Karma. Actions do have consequences, whether they are for the better or the worst, it's all about how one reacts and make due.

"Too clean." Liu Qingge grunts while he looks up at the sky. "Perhaps." He spreads his wings, readying himself for a flight in hopes of helping to clear his mind.

"Your too forgiving." Is all this brother of his grumbles and with a laugh, Shen Jiu launches himself into the air.

He's nearly a hundred years of age and things were going well for the two of them. Sure, they will part when they find a Dragonelle they fancy, might even have clutches with them. Life in this world is still new, it's fresh in a way that he doesn't recall it being when he'd been human.

In the sky, Shen Jiu, no, NiRoth flaps his wings. He has an easier time of it, compared to those with scales. He's body is so much lighter, even though it also means he's not as protected as those with scales. Advantages and Disadvantages.

The End

Author's Note **:

Yea, I wrote this within a single day. Funny thing, I found out that E. E. Knight actually began on writing a sequel series for his Age of Fire world. So, yea, I wanted to write something and given how Dragon Champion began... Well, why not? After all, I've read plenty of fan stories concerning Liu Qingge sticking with Shen Qinggiu|Shen Jiu after he'd died, so it's also something of a tribute to those too.

Divine Interfaces: RedwallGamerUniverse

I don't own either the Redwallish society setting nor the idea concerning gamer universes!

Name: Vert

Current Species: Mouse

Age: 16

Divine Profession: None

Chosen Profession: Mercenary

Faction Membership: Mercenary Guild

Level: 36

Divine Passive: Tactile Learning

Trained Passives List:

Observant

Level Headed

Tracker

Bandit Hunter

Ambidextrous

Scenery Awareness

Blind Fighter

He closes his Profile after his gaze lingers on Blind Fighter. It's a list where his oldest are listed first and his newer ones are at the bottom. Vert slightly shakes his head, it wasn't that he'd been sparring when he achieved that last one, it was just that all the black smoke made it hard to see during the eradication of one Prince Von Foxthrone, who's Transmigration ended up with him as a Pine Marten instead of this Kingdom's Royal Family's preferred Species, which is some variant of the Fox Species.

Not that Vert had any real investment in what was going on between the cousins. Really, he'd come to this Kingdom due to having gotten news about his family's killers having joined Prince Von Foxthrone's forces. Most of said forces having been recruited bandits, well, there's always the Mercenary Guild's standard bounties concerning infamous bandits.

He'd been 12 years old when he arrived and he'd been 13 when he killed C. Redcap. Unlike a few, particular infamous bandit leaders, the Rat hadn't been a member of the Mercenary Guild once upon a time. So, there's little solid information about C. Redcap, even that name C. Redcap wasn't the Rat's actual name but a kind of mocker that the Guild assigned to him based off of descriptions. The first C stands for Coast for where the first sighting of him and his group while Redcap means he enjoys smearing blood of the dead onto himself.

Letting out a soft sigh, his gaze shifts from the pew before him to look up at the Divine Relic that's near the alter at the front of the church. The name of this church escapes him and, honestly, this is his first visit to one since his family funeral. The Divine Relic is a sceptre that isn't overly decorated. It's wood it's seems to be made out of is almost smoky gray and about its surface are copper spikes. There's a faint glow of white and he's heard a few people exiting as he were entering that the white actually swirls about the surface of the Divine Relic.

He can't see it from his position but his attention is drawn when a group with a Fox enters the church. The guards seem to be four Shrews, a Ferret, Stout, and Hedgehog. The Fox sports a hooded cape but the sight of the Hedgehog means he has some idea of who this particular Fox is.

The nine are heading for a particular hallway. A pair of Shrews breaks off to stand guard at the entranceway of the hallway. These two sport spears like the others but their secondary weapons are light crossbows instead of swords or maces.

Vert averts his gaze, raising it up to the wall that's above that hallway entrance. There's a tapestry hanging there, a Badger in full body armour holding aloft a depiction of this church's Divine Relic above their head. He assumes that the Badger is an important person in regards to this church. There's white light symbolically radiating from said Relic.

The surrounding area is slowly changing, with it being more green where the Badger is standing while to the far left is fleeing troops, no singular uniform look to them, some look like Rats, Shrews, Voles, and other, common, Species known for being incline to aggression. To the opposite side of the tapestry, there's a village and the villagers are mostly Mice, Squirrels, Hedgehogs, and a Rabbit near the back of the group, this Rabbit looks to be richer then the others, at least, that's what the more colourful cloths suggest at least. All of this group are looking at the Badger holding the Relic up.

There's a bit of a sour feeling at the sight of the Mice in the tapestry. Vert knows that majority of his Species are rather... passive and timid. It's why depictions of Mice as the pitiable victims are rather typical in art and in stories. It's like how cowards are often depicted as Rabbits, due to their general nature of easily frightened and being notably skittish.

On the flipside, Rats are universally depicted as henchmen or general banditry. Foxes are typical for those who are considered clever thinkers but sly selfish people. Shrews were the typical angry drunkards while Ferrets are bloodthirsty, cold blooded murders.

Stereotyping by Species doesn't make a lot of sense, in Vert's opinion, given that when someone gets to the right age and Level, they can appeal to the local church for Transmigration into a different Species. It costs some Levels along with de-aging the person some years as well, but many think it worth it. It's a touch uncommon for parents to end up having kids that are a different Species but it happens. Like the two Princes that were cousins who underwent Transmigration in hopes of becoming Foxes, it just so happened that for whatever reason, Prince Von Foxthrone didn't become a Fox but a Pine Marten instead.

Before his family died, Vert had always pictured what it would be like to be something other then a Mouse. He'd admit, after they'd died, it did occur to him from time to time until he'd turn 14. By that point, he'd given up on such an idea, after all, he still didn't have a Divine Profession, as he never petitioned a church when he turned 10 to go through with such a ceremony, which is generally regarded as a major milestone in life.

He'd sworn to himself that the only way he'd enter a church ever again was either as a body or after avenging his family. Hence, Vert had avoided them for nearly a decade until today. Today is the day that he changed into something other then his leather and cloth padded armour, leaving behind his two swords, hand axe, and most of his hidden knives save for the one on his belt, which is out in the open.

He'd been 9 when he'd joined the Mercenary's Guild, he'd hope to pass himself off as a dwarf size Rat by keeping his head covered. It's only later did he realize that the Guild doesn't have an age limit and, well, while it's open for all Species to become members, certain Species never have. Vert's not sure if that's true, given how old the Guild ultimately was, but the application didn't request his Species, which might have to do with Transmigration allowing one to change it. It likely makes paperwork easier, not having to update all of the records when someone Transmigrate into another Species nor, perhaps, keeping track of the various Levels of their members.

Looking towards one of the stained glass windows, this one depicting a harvesting of a wheat field by Mice. Which reminds Vert that his family's occupation being migratory crop hands. They'd been rather poor, mostly getting paid by a small share of the crop they were helping to harvest then in money. It hadn't just been his parents who died but his grandparents, granduncles and their wives, uncles and their wives, cousins, second cousins, and those who'd been adopted into the family either as children or as adults.

They'd travelled between two Kingdoms, never settling down. Vert can't remember why that was, just that they had little in the way of money or material goods while foraging and hunting as they travelled. He can barely remember what his parents looked like, let alone recalling their voices or the faces of every member of his family. He'd been the only survivor, having hid high up in a tree, having defy his parents' grounding him to the tent.

To this day, he can't believe how he managed to remain high up in that tree and am very thankful that it had been a moonless summer night. It's likely due to the leaves of the tree that he hadn't a good view of the slaughter or else he might have given himself away. That night... he doesn't recall it, nor when dawn arrived and he finally climbed down.

Those that came across the site, well, he doesn't know for sure who they were. Only that it wasn't long before he'd been whisked away from the site and some days passed then the funeral. It was at the funeral that it finally settled the whole event for him, that he was alone in the world, that none of his family survived.

His eyes go to the next stain glass window as he does his best to blink rapidly to fight the tears that threaten to fall as he recalls that grief that spurred him into being angry at, well, everything and everyone. It wasn't long after that he'd collected what belongings he could and left. He hadn't a destination in mind, then.

Vert just wandered around, keeping away from villages and roads. Living off the land and polishing the hell out of his various knives.

He'd survive winter and when spring came... so did some clarity and he began to think, to plan for his future.

The stain glass sports a Hedgehog in a Brewery's basement. There's a wooden stain in the right paw while there's a ladle in the left. It's an image that suggests that the Hedgehog is taste testing the brew, either already had or about to. The large kegs behind the Hedgehog implies bounty and that it's next to the harvesting Mice, it could imply the two scenes are related in someway.

Doing his best to distract himself from his thoughts, his emotions, he gazes at the next one window, which is a bit away from the other two. This one sports Squirrels cutting up a large log, between the two is a large saw. It's in rather deep within the log that's getting cut. It's tilting more in one direction too, at one of the two in particular. About the scene is a forest in the background, suggesting that this is happening in a forest, at a make shift lumber yard.

The next stain glass window sports a Beaver carpenter in a workshop. There's an unfinished chair, with the Beaver fiddling with putting in a leg. There's the back while the chair is resting upside down upon the table, allowing the Beaver to put in the legs.

Thunk. Thump. "Shh!" A hard but very soft voice rings out.

Vert's ears twitch at the soft sound while forcing himself not to direct his head in said direction. The lack of weight upon his belt is suddenly very noticeable, but then, a hand had went to where he usually has his sword resting. Heartbeat speeds up as many thoughts flicker within his mind over the whys and what fors.

And so, he lowers his gaze from the stain glass window featuring the Beaver carpenter. Staring blankly at the wall, Vert turns his head to where the Divine Relic and presses his lips into a hard line as he wrestles with the thought of dashing up to it in order to weld it, after all, a sceptre is not that different then a mace. Trying to reason if it's worth trying to weld it, not knowing if it would even allow itself to be picked up by the likes of him.

Focusing on the sounds near where the guards are, Vert gets to his feet and does his best to walk in a general fashion up to where the Divine Relic is set up. He's seen others approach to pay their respects near it, typically standing before the alter that before the Divine Relic and where they approach from.

There's sound of wood groaning and he can imagine someone crouching upon one of the likely wood beam rafters that's above his head. There's no hanging candelabra above them, so there's no reason for such a sound to come from above. There's about six candelabra stands upon the dais that he's approaching with not all of the candles alight, only the center candle sports a flame to create some kind of atmosphere or setting upon the dais.

He is within dashing distance of the alter that is resting before the Divine Relic when he hears wood groan. Vert turns in that direction to witness a group of five dropping to the floor, their head covered up but there's other ways to tell what they are, most likely it was just to obscure who they are individually. Three are, unsurpringly, Rats while the remaining two are slim and long, which makes it harder to pin what they are, after all, there's a wide array to pick from with that kind of body, like a Marten, Stoat, and the like.

The Rats make it to the floor before the other two and are already darting forward while the posted guards are slow to react. Forcing himself to look away, he races up the steps leading up to the dais and over the, thankfully, mostly un decorated alter to wrap his hands about the hilt of the Divine Relic.

[Registering User]

[User: Vert the Mercenary]

[Assessing User: Vert the Mercenary Authority]

[Authority Unknown]

[Scanning User: Vert the Mercenary Profile for Profession Markers]

.

[User Vert the Mercenary lacks Profession Markers]

[ALERT! ALERT!]

[ALERT! Conflict Occurring within Save Zone!]

[ALERT! Assessing Situation!]

[ALERT! No Qualified User within reach!]

[Resolving Alert!]

.

[Resolution Decided]

[User: Vert the Mercenary attempting Access Authority]

[Is User: Vert the Mercenary seeking to Resolve Conflict? Y N]

Vert finds himself at a loss about the various messages that popped up fairly quickly the moment he tried to heft the Divine Relic. And now, it seems that he's getting asked if he's looking to solve the fight that's occurring within the Church. He glances towards said spot and...

Blinking a few times at the sight of everything being muted in color along with those assassins seemingly frozen along with the guards they are clearly planning to kill. Heart thumping loudly in his ears and yet, when he tries to let go, he can't so he can only twist his head this way and that to try to see if those others within the church are also in the same state as himself or if frozen like those fighting.

What little he can see, they are also frozen and also muted in color. Looking at the Divine Relic, that message hangs there, clearly waiting for Vert to pick one of the two options. "Yes." He states weakly before squaring his shoulders before stating more confidently, "Yes, I plan to do something about that fight."

It takes a bit but the Y glows and there's another rush of messages but he's given time to read them before they vanish. Most of it seems to be proceeding with Profession Assignment, which he is only beginning to suspect might be him getting a Divine Profession, most of it seems to be taking his whole being into consideration given the number of waiting messages that crop up.

[Profession Consideration is PALADIN]

[Registering Query concerning Implementation of PALADIN as User: Vert the Mercenary Profession]

As he left for a long time with no messages besides the typical waiting ones. Thus, Vert has plenty of time to consider what this means along with this unknown Profession that is called PALADIN. By the time anything has changed, Vert has come to the conclusion that he might be the first to be assigned said Profession and he's had plenty of time to go through various kinds of emotions but also notices that he's not feeling exhausted by how much time has passed while he's in this odd state.

And so, he's rather surprised by how quick things finalize before the issue concerning the time different fades, leaving him with a singular statement of reapplying the Safe Zone's Protections. The feel of the sceptre's weight as he hefts it. It's so surreal, to Vert, that he just stares at the Divine Relic as he turns it about.

There's a gasp and he recalls the situation and tightening his hands about the sceptre, hefts it up and bellows the following words without any real thought, "Sanctum Revival! Inititate Program!"

The head of the sceptre glows and then, the air around him ripples. Soon enough, the fighting ends as everything that the ripples touch glow a soft white or yellow. Noticing that someone is about to bleed out, he holds the Divine Relic with a single hand while gesturing with his now free hand. A more silver light flares from his hand and then the heavily wounded guard lights up a second after the silver light fades.

"It's a miracle!" Rings out when one of the Rats' long daggers bounces harmlessly from the neck of the other guard. None of the attacks do anything and yet, it's the same for the guards, nothing they do harms the assassins.

By the time the assassins give up and try to rush out of the church, they run smack dab into a barrier. It's a bit before the Head Priest arrives within the room. There's a bit of a look of interest at him hefting the Divine Relic but Vert had been a bit busy being a touch numb by everything that's happened and is currently happening.

And so, he offers the sceptre to the Head Priest, which is taken, although it looks like they find the Divine Relic a bit heavy. Which is rather interesting but Vert doesn't see the point in voicing his questions. Still, the Head Priest makes use of the sceptre, the assassins slump down, likely fast asleep.

He backs away as others climb onto the dais. It's becoming rather noisy and he does his best to ignore it. Bringing up his Profile, Paladin has now replaced None when it comes to his Divine Profession. There's something new added and it's clearly related to his shiny new Divine Profession.

As his Profile closes, he does his best to pay attention. Soaking in the feeling of not being the only being around that's capable of movement along with the lack of messages.

Ending it Here

Revenge of the Jiang Siblings: Mo Dao

I don't own Grandmaster of Demonic Cultivation nor D&D content.

Wei Ying leans upon the desk to get a better look at the metal. The characters are rather odd, there's this character with a tiny circle and then an incomplete circle looking part with a line in it. This character is rather eye catching, given it's between odd triangles, with long hanging ends. The coloring of the triangles are red with the compact circle character being a dark purple, at least, when he tilts his head to the side.

The two lines that comes before the first triangle are also in that same shade when Wei Ying looks at it in the right way. All of this is top center of the flat metal surface and he kind of... wants to touch the characters, lines, and triangles as it seems they are raised up too. The corners are also raised while it looks like leather occupies the sides and yet, it's got the impression of scales.

Closing his eyes and taking a few breathes to do his best to gain control over his urges, the nine year old feels his shoulders relax a touch after a few breathing exercise he'd been taught. Feeling the itch of curiosity loosen, the child opens his eyes and this time, looks at the strange painting that's both colourful and sports clearly non-humans in some battle scene with some huge gray with bluish tinted lizard sporting four pairs of limbs that sport rather thick claws and semi red spines upon the back.

The non-humans are wearing cloths that aren't robes. There's this one that's got tusks like a boar and dark skin that's got a bear chest while fighting with an oversize axe. The one next to this tusk being is clearly a woman... only she's short and is wearing odd metal armour while welding an other oversize item, this time a hammer. The hair is yellow brown and eyes sporting a lot of green.

Then there's the final two that sport almost human looks but something is clearly off. The taller one sports long pointed ears along with navy blue hair with purple eyes. The cloths don't have metal on them while there's a staff sporting some carved bird at the top. A glowing bright green upon the hand that's near the chest while the other holds the staff.

The final one is tiny compared to the three along with sporting a crossbow as a weapon. The hair is rather bright, it being a light blue and eyes being a purple blue color. The skin color being a light shade of gray and might, also, be a woman. At least, it kind of seems like the chest's clothing gives that suggestion?

It's rather odd, given that the tiny one might be the size of a young child or older toddler. Wei Ying isn't sure if he's guessing right, in either case, in regards to that tiny looking person. The other details of the image appears to be of some place deep underground, what with the pointed cones of stone that can be seen, one large one pointed downwards and two smaller ones pointing upwards.

There's a creak and he hears Jiang Cheng scold him from the other side of the slightly open door. "Hurry up! Bring it over here!" The Young Master of the Jiang Sect demands and yet, Wei Ying still has misgivings about following through with the demands of the other boy.

After all, Wei Ying is sure that this metal thing isn't something he should touch. Particularly as his curiosity is slowly growing and that urge to touch is making his fingers itch to feel the metal and the scale leather. "I don't think we should... I think that's what it wants." He replies in a hush tone as he gets down from where he'd been perched, to take a few steps back.

"It wants? It's not alive! None of the others reported noticing any Qi coming from it!" Scuffs Jiang Cheng, who fully opens the door and enters. Marching up to the desk while giving Wei Ying scratching looks, clearly thinking that Wei Ying is just being too cautious and playing at being a coward.

"Don't!" Wei Ying warns upon noticing how Jiang Cheng is about to grab the item, after moving about to get onto the chair to stand over the desk. "We should go!"

Wei Ying might not be living on the streets any more but that doesn't mean that the instincts homed during his years on them have left him. The metal item is far too enticing to be natural! "It's dangerous!" He states as he glances between the two.

There's a huffing sound from Jiang Cheng after the other boy studies the metal's surface. "How ugly!" The Young Master whines, finger tapping the surface. Then noticing him flinching each time the finger taps, the younger slaps his hand upon the top, causing Wei Ying to almost jump.

"Dangerous? How's this dangerous! It's not doing anything!" Jiang Cheng snaps, going so far to show the palm of his hand in Wei Ying's direction. "See?" A clear sneer upon his face.

When Wei Ying stays quiet, Jiang Cheng snorts and then looks at the metal once more before fingers brushing about the sides. As Wei Ying begins to inch towards the door, the Sect Heir picks the thing up, there's a bit of surprise upon Jiang Cheng's face at how easily he does so while Wei Ying pales at the action. Yet again, Wei Ying feels something is going on, he just can't put his finger on what until they arrive at Jiang Cheng's room.

"Too easy. It was too easy to take it." Wei Ying mutters to himself while Jiang Cheng tries to figure out how to open it.

"Scaredy Cat." Scoffs Jiang Cheng as his fingers get under one of those raised corners. They both jerk when it flips up with a thunk.

Once Jiang Cheng recovers, he's quick to do the same to each of the remaining corners, which then causes the top to begin rising up, revealing metal pushing it up. Soon enough, there's a floating almost desk. It's something that Wei Ying knows isn't normal, particularly given Jiang Cheng's reaction.

In the pass nearly three months of having been in Lotus Pier, Wei Ying is still getting a feel for his place within the Sect, never mind the Jiang Family and thus, he's gotten to be fair when it comes to reading Jiang Cheng's expressions. Moving away from the floating metal as best as he can, Wei Ying is getting the feeling of dread that's chilling him to the core.

Young Master Jiang approaches the floating almost desk and upon touching something, a voice sounds out, "Welcome to Adventures and Adversaries Second Edition! The latest and most advance version to date! We now have a difficulty setting and new win conditions! Including optional Skill Grinding Game System instead of having Levelling Game System!"

The voice sounds light hearted and upbeat and yet, it doesn't explain anything of what it's saying. It's clear Jiang Cheng has no clue anything as the voice continues to list things they didn't have a clue has to do with playing a game. And yet, it seems that Jiang Cheng seems eager to make use of this 'game'.

"I'll go fetch Shijie." Wei Ying says and bolts out of the still open door. It wasn't long for him to find her, as she's just leaving her room.

"Shijie! Shijie!" He states as he hurries towards her. Rushing through the bow, which Jiang Yanli nods at in acknowledgement.

"What's wrong A-Ying? Where's A-Cheng?" The eldest child of the Jiang couple inquires, the beginnings of worry upon her face.

"You know that metal thing that got brought back by Senior Li and the others?" Wei Ying asks and there's a slight look of confusion, which has him giving her the summery of the incident along with how skittish the group had been and how relieved they'd been when it had been turned over to Uncle Jiang, who had it at his desk but had to do other things, in particularly, Madam Yu had returned in a foul mood and an injured hand maiden.

And so, the pair of children head for Jiang Cheng's room. Jiang Cheng seems to be rather absorbed by the strange metal almost desk. When Jiang Yanli approaches, Jiang Cheng scowls and seem to want to cover something but stops upon seeing that it's his older sister. "Jiejie! You have to play with us!"

"Oh, and, Wei Ying, go... get some snacks from the kitchen." There's a particular look in Jiang Cheng's eyes upon regarding Wei Ying. It's clear that it's just something to get rid of him, and while Wei Ying is now on edge for another reason, he glances at Maiden Jiang.

"Go on, A-Ying." Jiang Yanli says. "I would like to speak with A-Cheng alone for a bit."

Nodding, Wei Ying does leave, not happy as there's a sense of doom in the future. As he manages to get out of the door, he closes it and stands there for a few seconds, trying to make sense of... well, everything. With a sharp command from Jiang Cheng, "Hurry up and go!"

And so, he does. While at the kitchen, Wei Ying finds a pair of servants chatting about overheard conversations going on with the returning group of Disciples. Fixing his face behind a bright smile and doing his best to cover his nerves, he engages the pair in conversation with intent to get the latest gossip with hopes of getting something that might help in regards to that 'game' that Jiang Cheng seems incline to play.

| X _ X |

Hawk is the name that's next to Name. Race is Aasimar with Background being Urchin. His Level is 1 and his age is 9. There's nothing next to Class.

Other then his Int and Str, all his Stats are 10, his Str is 8 while his Int is 18. There's not much more to find on this page, well, besides an image of what he looks like as Hawk, which is bright white hair and bright golden eyes while wearing worn cloths with a brown mouse poking out of a vest pocket. Looking up at the top, he notices the 'Tabs' and touches the next one, which is entitled Skills and the next one is Features.

Two Skill boxes coloured in are Sleight of Hand and Stealth is all that he finds under Skills 'Tab'. Under Features 'Tab', there's more to be found, like the Tool Proficiencies which have under it just two things, for now, Disguise Kit and Thieves' Tools. At another section of this page is Background Feature which has City Secrets written there and goes into details of what that means for him as Hawk. Sure, there's a lot of blank spots on this page as well, which are just waiting to be filled.

Looking up at the Background 'Tab', Wei Ying touches it and it's here that information concerning his Race is and to the side, taking up the larger portion of the page, is History, which is Hawk's life story and hints to personal involvement. All in all, it's not all that different then his own history, only there's a hint of not just one party looking for him? There's portions that note his Personality Traits, which is rather bemusing to read, although Rats have replace Dogs as what he fears, then again, there's mentions of stories concerning Wererats, an urban lycanthrope type that are generally evil and how some types of rats could spread that kind of Curse on their own.

As for that mouse he saw in that image of Hawk's pocket? It's name is Timid and his character nursed it after finding it injured. The mouse refused to leave and thus, Hawk got a pet, which means that Wei Ying has a pet to be mindful off, which is rather different then previous experience.

The final 'Tab' is Equipment but the one before it is Quest Line. There's little under Equipment and just few Copper Coins. Changing to another 'Tab', it's then that he finds that there's a Quest in progress, which entails just surviving a year before the Main Questlineline begins. It seems that this Quest is a 'Tutorial' of the game, to become familiar with how this world is and his new rules that govern him as Hawk.

As there's nothing more for him to do, he closes it and Wei Ying closes his eyes as he lets himself feel whatever for a bit before opening his eyes, resolve to get into the role of Hawk and to begin figuring out what he wants as a Class. He has time and this part of the game should be easiest part, well, he hopes so, then again, it's not like he's inexperienced with this kind of thing...

oxxxx[{::::::::::::::::::::::::::::::::

Jiang Cheng, well, Drake Holden, looks out at the courtyard with a smirk. The lack of that servant's son in this House is well worth it, in his opinion, particularly as the other boy hadn't been given time to make a Character for the game, which means that the servant is likely in his actual station in life, unlikely capable of pursuing the Main Questlineline, when the time comes. After all, a servant's place is in the servant quarters doing servant's work.

And when I win, my wish of having him out of my life will happen. Mother will be happier, with that mother of his out of existence too! Drake thinks with a dark spark of satisfaction.

He'd done everything to ensure his Character starts with every advantage he could get. Sure, there's some Hindrances to even out the Privileges, like, sadly, to be a member of the Imperial Family, he wouldn't be the first born, he wouldn't be the Heir, the Prince Apparent. Drake is third son, but he'd read up on things and found that he'd have an easier time leaving when the Main Questline begins as he won't have any duties or lessons keeping him at the Palace.

Jiang Cheng had been sure to have high Str, Dex, and Con while not caring all that much about Int, Wis, and Cha, which he has under 10. He'd picked Sorcerer for his Class, after all, that's the one where he's able to use magic without studying it. Jiang Cheng picked out his Spells, which aren't many as of yet, but it's only a matter of time before he Levels up.

Yawning, Prince Drake feels a touch sleepy and his eye lids are getting kind of heavy. He finishes the tea before allowing himself to fall asleep.

oxxxx[{::::::::::::::::::::::::::::::::

"Prince Drake is dead." Reports the assassin and Prince Justin smiles. "It seems he forgot to put on his mother's gift this morning nor did he seem to notice that I wasn't his usual man servant." The assassin includes, offering up said necklace.

"I see." Prince Justin remarks. "My elder brother will be devastated, I imagine. Particularly given that our Draconic Lineage had shown up in the younger Prince."

"Ah, I will have to think of what I want to wear for the funeral." The uncle of the now dead Drake Holden muses while admiring the pendant upon the golden chain. "I wonder which bastard brother will bring in to replace my poor, dead nephew?"

The assassin doesn't response, merely waiting for a clear dismissal. Which comes as Prince Justin pockets the necklace and stands up. Picking up the wine glass, Prince Justin walks over to stand before the large portrait of his brother that's above the fire place.

"Long live the king." Remarks Prince Justin.

[Death by Poison]

[Rebirth Conditions are Not Met]

[Reincarnation Conditions were Disabled]

[Player Cheng Jiang is in Limbo until Game Ends]

[A&AII would like to thank Player Cheng Jiang for playing!]

All Jiang Cheng could do is curse out the game while ignoring the highlighted portions of his Hindrances list, namely that Tutorial Quest had been skipped along with a rather long list of Enemies, the name of Prince Justin Holden, younger brother to King Vincent Holden is highlighted.

oxxxx[{::::::::::::::::::::::::::::::::

Jiang Yanli, or rather, Kimberly Summers brings up the Party Notice she'd had received nearly four years back. The one that informed her that her brother's Character had died. The fact that barely three hours into the game when it came up. The cause of death had been poison along with mention of it being caused by a NPC, Non-Player Character.

It had taken some time to learn what became of Drake Holden's body, in the vain hope that she could recover it in order to pay for Revival but, given he'd been a member of the Royal Family of the Kingdom of Stone Den. And so, her brother's Character's body is out of reach. Which means that it's on Jiang Yanli to win and hope that in doing so, Jiang Cheng will be alive at the end of it, after all, the game did understand that only Wei Ying was the one who was to die in a permanent manner... right?

The grief she felt as it sunk in that her little brother might be dead for good... Jiang Yanli had tried to talk her A-Cheng from enabling Permanent Death and had been sure that he'd changed it. It should have been Wei Ying who died. Jiang Yanli thinks darkly as she dismisses the Party Notice and then does her best to smooth out her expression.

While her brother had went for Royalty, Jiang Yanli hadn't spent so much time on doing anything concerning her Background, which was Noble, same as A-Cheng's. Although, unlike her A-Cheng, who stuck to Human as his Race, she'd gone for Half-Elf as Elves are noted to being beautiful but she hadn't wanted to be something totally non-human. She'd painstakingly describe her looks, Jiang Yanli hadn't wanted to look mediocre and given she had the chance to look... not mediocre, she took it.

Going so far as to pick something from the list of Privileges to ensure it. Jiang Yanli had been a touch more careful concerning the Hindrances compared to her A-Cheng, although she's not sure why Invoking Love at First Sight could be a valid Hindrance, in her opinion, it seems like a blessing. Either way, the first year had been... she'd enjoyed being an only child. Her parents were nice but also busy, leaving her to be raised by a nice nanny who was a Halfling older woman by the name of Lyre Coals.

As for Lord and Lady Summers, the social standing is an Earl, which isn't all that high up in the rankings but there are those holding lower positions under them. It had been a bit of an adjustment to have superiors who aren't her father but there's a certain freedom, when compared to what Jiang Yanli had been raised in, it's clear that, as Kimberly Summers, as long as she keeps to a certain standard, she'd be free to pursue whatever takes her fancy.

It's not an uncommon tradition for member of Nobility to spend a few years as an Adventurer. This tradition also allows for women to do so as well. And so, when the Tutorial Year passed, she'd been able to ask for permission to do so. Her Class, after all, is that of Wizard, which allows her to, as long as she's able, to modify Spells or create Magical Items, as long as she has both the time and money.

Jiang Yanli recalls when she'd been able to pick a School of Wizardry, well, Necromancy was among the choices for the simple reason she had been hoping to find a way to bring back her A-Cheng. But, in the end, she'd gone with Lorehold in hopes that the Ancient Companion would be of aid in her pursuit of both, the Main Questline and finding a way to bring A-Cheng back to her.

Regardless of School, it hadn't stopped her form learning spells from the School of Necromancy. Jiang Yanli had also been doing her best to work out a spell or find an item that will ensure she's able to locate her A-Cheng's soul. After that, well, there's methods she can use to store her A-Cheng's soul until she has a vessel ready to act as A-Cheng's new body.

Looking down at the table and then back up, Jiang Yanli returns to watching the Quest Board where she'd posted a lead concerning the Main Questline. It's her way of trying to find Wei Ying as A-Cheng hadn't given the boy a chance to make a Character, which means that the boy could have ended up as anything and with any Class. Without a name, let alone known which Race to keep an eye on, Jiang Yanli is having a hard time trying to find Wei Ying in order to fulfill her A-Cheng's wishes along with an option when it comes to ending the game early.

If either Party is wiped out, the game ends with the surviving Party winning. And given Jiang Yanli's lead in regards to the Main Questline requires her to enter into the Skeleton Grove... Well, she's not sure she can trust anyone not to betray her in the middle of it as it's a place that few have come out alive. Those that have come out Cursed or crippled, be it having lost a limb or one of their senses being gone. A blind man with working eyes... A woman unable to feel pain...

And so, when a Halfling approaching the Quest Board, Jiang Yanli takes a moment to study him. Black hair that's slightly wavy... The cloths are purple as well. And yet, she knows that a lot of people have black hair and favour purple cloths. It's when the Halfling picks her bait Quest does she allow herself to feel hope.

The Halfling's eyes are hazel green when he turns around and then heads for the counter to speak with the bar keep. It's a bit before a group enters into the Adventure's Traven and they are all wearing purple, just different shades and in different amounts. The Halfling waves and calls the group over, Jiang Yanli hears the name of this Party and she isn't sure if she should just cut her losses, given this Party has been famous about tackling difficult Quests.

Weed Heart is the Party's name and they take after their name sake a little too well, which is a very common plant about the continent. The Party numbers ten and the leader is a Ranger by the name Garth Flare, who's a Tiefling. The Second in Command is a human woman named Ellen Nightbane, who's a Druid. There's a white haired kid she spies next to the Ranger and it takes her a bit to muse at the sight of Garth's Ward. Although some wonder if he isn't the Tiefling's bastard son.

After all, Tieflings don't always breed true and given how old Garth is, to had hair going gray, it might be true. The Ward's name is a bird, which is rather bemusing given Rangers do have Animal Companions. In some ways, the white hair and yellow eyes do remind Jiang Yanli of many different animals, not all of them being birds.

And as Jiang Yanli's gaze switches from the unimportant boy to the Half-Orc with the group that have settled at a table. The Half-Orc is a newest Party recruit and is a rather odd one at that, given Rave Bloodmist and is a Wizard, of the War Magic School. On either side of the Half-Orc are the Tabaxi twins, one being a Rogue and the other being a Fighter. Both have black coats but different white markings and she doesn't know which is which besides that the Rogue's name is Coal and the Fighter's is Night.

It's then she recalls the Halfling is Cro Bernard and is the Party's Cleric, his Deity is Leira, who's the Goddess of Illusions. Cro's wife isn't with the Party at this moment but Vivian Hope is a well known Bard. Taking in the members of Weed Heart, the remaining three members aren't always around but they are Elves and are Monks, just of different paths. Butterfly of the Mercy Way, Monkey of the Drunken Master, and Owl of the Shadow Way. Those three have responsibilities towards their respective Monasteries along with being wanders.

So, Jiang Yanli considers how to approach Weed Heart. After all, she needs to figure out which of them had the potential of being Wei Ying.

| X _ X |

As she comes too, Jiang Yanli blinks before doing so once more. "How did you think you'd get out of the fall out concerning failing to turn in the Sapphire Orca?" A voice inquires, a young one and it isn't that surprising to find Hawk leaning at the door frame.

"General Young wasn't impressed, you know, when he heard about the killing of Lieutenant Hammer, you know." The Warlock continues on to explain, Jiang Yanli recalls Lieutenant Hammer, the Dwarf had look so similar to Wei Ying that... Well, it hadn't really mattered on top of the fact that he'd been a child of rural peasants, thus another similarity to who she'd been hunting for.

"Clover hadn't known your reasons while Ivan? You know, your travel partner for nearly eight months? He noted a... trend when it comes to those you seem incline to kill." Hawk adds after a bit of a pause. "Black hair, gray eyes, and of low birth."

"Nothing to say?" Hawk asks after a bit and Jiang Yanli doubts anything she'd say would help, particularly given it sounds like Ivan hadn't minded his own business as they'd had agreed upon when they first met. "Well, I suspect that they'll have some way to get to along with ensuring you'll be willing to speak while subject to the Zone of Truth."

She presses her lips together in displeasure, given how far she is from where her parents are... Jiang Yanli isn't as sure that she's got the social standing to be turned over to where she's from. But, what really matters is, the Ghost Fruit isn't in her possession and thus, her progress concerning the Main Questline now comes into question. She'll have a year, now, in order to get back on track or else, she fails.

Which means, once she's dealt with this fall out, Jiang Yanli will need to track down Weed Heart to learn what they did with the Ghost Fruit, while hoping they still had it, and then find information concerning the Gunn Brewery to turn that Ghost Fruit into Spectral Wine. That she currently lacks her equipment and is wearing simple garb that is rather cheap along with mostly meant to cover her up.

"You don't feel guilty, do you?" The golden eyed Warlock inquires. "Not a single bit, over the lives you've taken so unnecessarily?"

"I have my reasons." Jiang Yanli states as her gaze moves to settle at the Warlock. "I need to win."

The Warlock seems to look sad and away for a bit before resolution eclipses the sadness and returns to looking at her. "So, that's how it is? How fair is that?" The Warlock asks but she hardly cares about the opinions of this almost teen.

"I wonder, will they decide to have you executed? Will you be sorry then?" Jiang Yanli rolls her eyes, after all, this is all just a game, it's not real, in the end. Nothing matters besides winning. Her gaze is towards the barred window.

"Well, farewell then, Ms Summers." Hawk states, doing a bit of a bow. "I suspect that we'll never meet up again."

The door closes with the Warlock gone. There's nothing for her to think of nor are there other prisoners being held within the cell across from her. Even when it opens, it's the clicking of the keys that suggests it's a guard.

And then, there's a particular voice that sends a shiver of dread down her back. "Ever so beautiful and ever so cold, my dear." Reynard states.

Her head and gaze turn towards the Elf, who she knows is a Artificer on top of being a rich merchant. Red hair, leaf green eyes, and sporting somewhat tanned skin. Then again, that's likely from working at a forge. Reynard had been, still is, enamoured with her, having done his best to pick gifts that he had thought she'd like.

"I had told you, didn't I?" Reynard remarks once he's near the bars of her cell. "We would meet again and that you will accept my advances when said meeting happens?"

"You really should have picked other means to go about your... hobby but, well, you were young and oh so sure that nothing could track it back to you! Ah, how filled with youthful certainty young people are and so sure you'd encounter who it is you hunt without needing to put any... true... effort into it." Reynard continues on speaking.

"Your wrong." Jiang Yanli states, but her heart is thumping rather rapidly within her chest. The Elf hadn't changed much from the last time they met, which was nine, perhaps, ten months ago.

"I don't think so." Reynard states. "In the end, I doubt it matters. After all, your own conduct has alienated you and allowing people to tack whatever accusations upon you, namely being an agent of a rival kingdom or a part of a terrorist cell."

"You've worn out a lot of goodwill and left a lot of loose ends, in more then one manner." Reynard states. It's clear what emotion is within those green eyes and Jiang Yanli feels disgust and yet, a hint of terror, given how little ability she has to defend herself.

"So then? Shall we come to an arrangement?" Reynard asks in a light tone.

oxxxx[{::::::::::::::::::::::::::::::::

[Winning Conditions Met]

[Hawk played by Ying Wei Wins!]

[Congratulations!]

[Ultimate Prize consists of Ziyuan Yu, Yanli Jiang, and Cheng Jiang being Erased from Ying Wei's World]

[Would Ying Wei wish to sell everything and convert all money into currency of Ying Wei's culture?]

[Yes] [No]

All around him is a white area and Wei Ying feels numb as he can't help thinking over the Ultimate Prize that they'd been playing for. "They wanted... they wanted me gone? For my mom to... to..."

And then Wei Ying feels sick to his stomach along with realizing that neither of the siblings had come to care about him. Not like he had. It's not long for him to be overwhelmed by the emotions while tears trailing down his face. His nose getting stuffy.

It takes a fairly long time for his emotions to become exhausted. Wei Ying feels drained and rung out. And so, not really wanting to be reminded of this, picks [No].

[All equipment and money to be stored for any future use by Ying Wei?]

[Yes] [No]

Staring at the options, he sighs and picks [Yes], after all, Wei Ying just wanted to get out of this. And the next message was a simple farewell for now and things get so bright that he closes his eyes. Holding them closed until he hears something odd and then a bunch of clicks.

Opening his eyes, Wei Ying finds himself in a room and he looks around, it's bare and looks like nobody had ever lived within it. Looking down, he finds that he can read the language upon the metal box. Getting to his feet, Wei Ying takes a few minutes before deciding to take it back to Uncle... no, Sect Leader Jiang's office.

Once he's put it back, Wei Ying wanders a bit about the building, coming to stand by the Ancestral Hall. It takes a bit for him to realize something is different and he approaches a pair of plaques that he's sure weren't there from his previous visits here. On one of the plaques is the character Wei, the same Wei he has.

"Ah, A-Ying, come to pay your respects to your parents again?" As he's about to brush his fingers against the wood, Wei Ying holds still before turning to look over at Jiang Fengmian, who's approaching him. And Wei Ying isn't sure what is the source of the surge of emotions threatening to overtake him once more.

"Let's light up some incense together, shall we?" Wei Ying nods, unable to think he'd be able to speak. Already some tears are falling from his eyes.

A gentle head pat and within minutes, there's a pair of incense sticks burning in an incense pot. "It'll be supper soon, so be sure to be along soon, ok?" Uncle Jiang suggests and he nods his head once more.

Soon he's a lone in the Ancestral Hall and Wei Ying feels so... so guilty and in need of confessing, even if it's not what he'd wanted to happen. Still, telling his parent's plaques about the game, of his time as Hawk the Celestial Warlock, and of the 'prize' he'd won from winning the game. Even though he'd been about to finish the second last Quest concerning the Main Questline when something had happened that saw him winning without finishing the Main Questline.

Feeling a bit lighter, Wei Ying gets up and does his best to wipes his face. "I'll be back." He promises his parents' plaque.

And so, Wei Ying eats with the other Disciples, but so did Uncle Jiang. Looking around, there's a lot more older Disciples about, who Wei Ying hadn't known or encountered. There's no mention of Jiang Yanli nor Jiang Cheng, let alone mentions of Madam Yu or that Uncle Jiang is married.

After supper, he seeks out those that had brought Adventures and Adversaries II back. They seem to be having a meeting of their own. "Seniors... Jiang Cheng wanted to play that game." Wei Ying begins and eyes widen, it's clear they knew who that was.

He's hurried into the room and after a bit, Wei Ying gives a summary of the events that led up to the game starting along with mentioning how he'd been unable to create a Character upon returning from taking the tray of dishes back to the kitchen, once they'd been eaten while the two had created their Characters while snacking on such dishes. There's little he sees fit to share about his time as Hawk nor with Weed Heart besides having to need to find a way to get a Class, given he didn't start out with one and having formed a Party with Garth and the others.

There's some questions concerning the messages at the end, it seems that, besides asking about selling that stuff and converting it into proper currency, they didn't get any other messages. As Wei Ying becomes quite, the others talk among themselves over the very idea of playing the game once again and about who it was that picked that 'Ultimate Prize'.

In the end, it's clear that someone would need to examine the set up that the Jiang siblings had put in for that game session. As the discussion disperses, the others seem to remember that he's there and they are quick to assure Wei Ying of his lack of blame on this matter, that there's nothing for him to feel guilty of. That the siblings clearly hadn't thought about the what if Wei Ying would succeed in winning their game session.

Wei Ying is once more wiping tears from his face for what feels like a third time of the day. In the end, he gets sent off to bed as they work out how they'll try to check the game's settings. It's doubtful they'd be able to undo it without playing the game on settings similar to what were used.

x = Epilogue = x

Without Madam Yu, there isn't many musings concerning Wei Ying's parentage nor about Sect Leader Jiang cheating on her. Well, given that to the world at large, Sect Leader Jiang isn't married and thus doesn't have anyone in his life to cheat on. And so, Sect Leader Jiang is a rather popular bachelor, one that many feel hope will begin thinking of marriage now that Wei Ying, son of his Sworn Brother, is a part of his Sect.

Rumours circulate around the odds of Wei Ying getting adopted by Jiang Fengmian and becoming his Heir. A few muse over the idea that bringing Wei Ying is a trail run about bringing in a bastard son. The odd rumour is the one that goes so far as to suggest that Wei Ying is Jiang Fengmian's bastard son, it's not overly popular one, given that Wei Ying didn't get legitimized right away, thus ensuring that the Sect had an Heir should anything happens to Jiang Fengmian.

Given that Madam Yu never existed, those Disciples that had seceded from the Sect during the years of said marriage, well, no marriage meant they never did. The general mood of the Disciples are light and the local merchants generally lack gossip concerning the Main Family, given Jiang Fengmian is the only member of the Main branch. And when one speak of Madam Yu, it's the wife of Sect Leader Yu instead of the third sister of said Sect Leader.

As for Wei Ying and his feelings concerning the Jiang siblings, he recovered from complicated feels concerning the pair. After all, Wei Ying had thought that the pair had liked him, had begun to think of him as a brother, despite their mother's attempts to keep them from interacting much. But for Jiang Yanli, who'd been so kind to him, to be the one going around killing those that remind her of Wei Ying... Well, it didn't all that long for him to do so.

The group who brought A&A 2 to Jiang Sect, they continued on being Disciples of the Sect and had discovered what game settings the late Jiang Cheng had enable and as none felt overly incline to risk their lives to play the game to bring the three back. After all, none of them had cared much for Madam Yu and it's clear that Jiang Cheng was more like his mother then his father.

Given what kind of Character the gone boy had created, after all, didn't the kid know that Sorcerers need a high Charisma to be able to cast spells? Never mind when they gave the lists of Privileges and Hindrances a quick skim, which already had alarming insight to what it is that Jiang Cheng ultimately valued along with how short sighted the boy already is and the doubt that the kid could grow out of it.

None of them were surprised that he'd died so quickly within the game.

Looking at Jiang Yanli's Character, they did find a more well balanced Character but that she also used the Privileges and Hindrances... Then they read over her in game history did they sigh at the many failure to stick to finishing various Quests, well, aside from the Main Questline. Not that doing so was overly impressive, given the penalties of being unable to pursue it or out right failing to complete the linked Quests.

Before closing up the game, they did give their shidi's Character a look, knowing that the other had been at a disadvantage in not having been allowed to create a Character. Seeing what the other had to work with in both Stats and Skills, at least for a year in game and then, well, their respect for the younger boy increases given the many hardships he'd overcome with a good attitude, empathy, and solid reasoning.

They did change the settings, ensuring that the next group to accidently trigger the game won't have a chance to die right off the bat nor get erased. Which might be a good thing, given that Sect Leader Jiang had taken the game to a Discussion Conference and, well, things happened that caused the Wen Sect to intervene, who hadn't been in attendance, thus unaware of what it is they claimed ownership of.

All they know is that the game caused some kind of schism among the other Sects and, thus, might be of beneficial to study it for future use.

As for the Sects in question, well, they were a bit more concerned with the actions of Sect Leader Jin had taken while in the game. Even those Sect under the Jin banner weren't thrilled by the treachery that cost not just the defeated Sects but all of them to lose the game. None had been able to convert any of the money and belongs they'd worked for had been allowed out of the game in either into actual money or into what the equivalent is in their world.

None of the Cultivators in question were happy about not having access to the game but at the same time, they can't match the Wen Sect's numbers nor quality of their Cultivators. Many pray that the Wen Sect doesn't get the game to work while a few hope that they might alter the settings so they might be more lethal, perhaps some of them might end up dead.

Either way, the game ends up in a secure room, forgotten for years. Charging away from curious eyes, after all, that last game session had cause it to develop a massive world compared to the previous sessions. That a certain someone didn't have it generate the money he earned was one of the reasons why it had the minimum power to generate a game session for so many people.

That a certain Sect Leader had been a touch too greedy was a blessing. And so A&A II rests, it can already guess at how many Players it'll have to entertain during the next session.

How to Avoid a War: Mo Dao

I don't own Grandmaster of Demonic Cultivation nor D&D content.

Wei Wuxian almost groans at the sight of something from his childhood, the item that altered the world by erasing three members of the Jiang family; Yu Ziyuan, Jiang Cheng, and Jiang Yanli. Not that anyone beyond the group of Disciples that brought it back to the Sect and himself remember the trio. He dimly recalls that the Wen Sect had taken possession of the game, although given no news circulated after they had done so, Wei Wuxian had put the issue of it out of his mind. The duties of being the Head Disciple had come to roost upon his shoulder a few years after that Discussion Conference.

There's murmurs slowly erupting as Wen Chao is a touch busy flirting with his current bed warmer, seemingly ignoring the worry that's beginning to spread among the Disciples that were current guests of the Wen Sect. Not paying the others much mind, Wei Wuxian takes in the sight of the Wen Disciples but none of them seem apprehensive or on edge. This could mean a lot of things but it's clear that none of the Wens here are aware of what this game is capable of or just never experienced what Adventures and Adversaries 2 is capable of.

The murmurs become silent when Wen Chao finally decides to pay attention to them or had decided that the feeling within the room is suitable level for his enjoyment. "Who here recognizes this?" Demands the Second Young Master of the Wen Sect.

When none had moved nor answered, Wen Chao took things in his own hands. Going so far as to point at Wei Wuxian. "You, Wei Wuming! You're Sect Leader brought this to that Discussion Conference."

"Unbox it!" The Second Young Master Wen orders as the hand goes down. Wei Wuxian knows now isn't the right time to do anything, so he approaches and flip the corners before taking a step back as what happened when Jiang Cheng had been the one to open it happens once more, including the greeting.

"Welcome to Adventures and Adversaries Second Edition! The latest and most advance version to date! We now have a difficulty setting and new win conditions! Including optional Skill Grinding Game System instead of having Levelling Game System!" The floating mini desk, Wei Wuxian can see it clearly, that there's almost like a painting that's no dissimilar to what had been on the top of the lid.

The reactions of a few swords drawn while a certain bodyguard moves to stand between his charge and the floating metal. More then a few have backed away while Wei Wuxian considers what he knows concerning how to set up a session, all hear second hand from both his Seniors and Uncle Jiang. "Do you want me to set it up?" He ventures to inquire when nobody from the Wen Sect approaches the floating metal desk.

"Yes... Yes! But if it goes wrong, it's you who'll suffer!" Snaps Wen Chao and he inclines his head before slowly approaching the more flat part of the desk.

He switches the Generate Character off which causes Character Creation to sport 100% next to it. Wei Wuxian enables Character Creation within Game Loading and then asks, "Should it be Wen Sect verse the other Sects?"

"Of course! As if you'd have a chance to win." Scuffs Wen Chao before any of the others could, perhaps, advise a negative.

Changing the Vs Setting from Major Sect plus Subsidiaries Vs Major Sect plus Subsidiaries Vs Major Sect plus Subsidiaries Vs Major Sect plus Subsidiaries to Wen Sect Vs Other Sects. Wei Wuxian doesn't touch the Death Settings, which means that nobody dies permanently if they die within the game session.

"Any particular look to the World?" Wei Wuxian asks, that Setting is Default Random. "What nonsense are you speaking? Just, whatever!" Is the answer to that particular question.

"Understood." And so, Wei Wuxian selects Familiar Random. "Enable all Races?"

"Must you ask such stupid questions?" Sneers Wen Chao and Wei Wuxian can only guess that he's causing people to feel a bit, on edge, likely feeding people's paranoia as he enables that option.

Before finishing, he goes back to where Character Creation is and pick from a 'Menu' Group Session. "Done." Wei Wuxian states and looks toward the Second Young Master Wen. "Would you like to do the honours?" A slight upturn of his lips, tone sporting a touch of a challenge.

"Fine! Which is it?" Demands Wen Chao after some time passes without Wei Wuxian pressing anything.

"The big green one." Wei Wuxian states calmly, a bit surprised as the desk moving to face Wen Chao. He's hardly the only one as there's a collective gasp and Wen Chao freezing in his tracks for a few seconds before recovering and putting on a brave face.

"Just the green one? How drool." And with that, the button is pressed and the room is engulf in blackness that lasts a bit before Wei Wuxian is in a space with the others from the Indoctrination Camp.

"So... Is this a good time to admit that I've played this game before?" Wei Wuxian inquires to the group of wide eye and unnerved Disciples.

"Yes, I think so." Nie Huaisang pipes up after a bit of waiting for someone else to react to his admission. Many others nod in agreement although a few have collapse upon the ground.

"Where are we?" And other versions get voiced as something like a gear clock slowly ticks away. Wei Wuxian replies to the rampant questions, "I enabled Group Session for Character Creation, so, we can Create Characters together."

"Ah, ok, so... Races? Really?" Pipes in Jin Zixuan.

Wei Wuxian admits, "Races can add to your Class, like, a Wild Elf makes a better Druid then a Wizard... And you don't know what either of those are yet."

"Well, what did you have for your... Character?" Asks one of the Lans and he answers, "I didn't get a chance to pick but I ended up an Aasimar, which is someone that's born with a connection to Good Deities, I had Darkvision and could heal people without using up a Spell Slot."

"Ah... ok, so... What was the other thing?" Asks a young Master from a minor Sect.

"Ah, well, I didn't start with a Class but I became a Celestial Warlock after making a Pact with a Qilin after the year of Tutorial was up." Wei Wuxian hadn't touched the Tutorial option, which were already enabled nor did he do anything about the Selecting Win Conditions, which was Random Easy.

"It's like pretend? Your Character is a role in a play or story. You just get to decide things about them, like, Name, Age, Background, Gender, Race, Class, altering your History and Describing how you look." A few seem to be a bit curious about this, in particular Nie Huaisang looks rather eager.

"So, when it allows us, I could go first to show how it's done?" Wei Wuxian offers and none of the others seem incline to go first, so the few that make murmurs of agreement are easily heard. And so, for a bit, they wait around, although Wei Wuxian does answer any questions concerning his previous experience easily but also without mentioning the siblings, like, at all.

[Wen Party have completed their Character Creation Session!]

[Party Creation about to begin in: 20]

[Party Creation about to begin in: 19]

As it counts down, the group stirs with some even moving to stand up. Once the count down is gone, a familiar image appears hovering where it had hung; where the gear clock had been before as well. Wei Wuxian steps forward and does a commentary as he creates his Character.

And so, Wei Wuxian puts in Wangyu, Wang for Royal and Yu for Feather, as a name, being sure to turn to a certain Second Young Master Lan to give a wink before continuing on. The age he selects is 18 and puts in man, although that switches to male when he moves onto the next part. Seeing he's got nothing for Stats, he selects Rolling Stats and gets 16, having rolled two 6s, a 4 and a 2 on four six sided dice. His next roll is 14, the one after that is 10, after that comes 12, another roll is 15 and the final roll is 13.

Instead of putting them to which Stat, Wei Wuxian goes through the list of Classes. He takes his time, doing his best to read the description that pops up when he pauses on the Class for those who haven't move to stand behind him. In the end, he picks Bard and his reasoning for it and then begins to assigned which rolls to which, also being sure to explain what each governs as he puts the 16 into Cha and the 15 into Wis with his 14 going into Con, 13 going into Int, 12 into Dex, and the 10 into Str.

And then, Wei Wuxian begins to tackle Races, beginning in what order they are listed in, which is Aarakorcra, reading what's given, once more for those a bit further away, thus unable to see. As he comes to an end, he decides to be a bit whimsical and recalling what he'd gifted a certain Jade, picks Harengon.

He then applies the plus 2 to his Cha, it's now 18 and the plus 1 into his Int, its now 14. Wei Wuxian picks Medium for his size and then, to his surprise, an image appears of a common brown coated human rabbit in traveling robes. There's a bit of a startled noise from the crowd but he does some changes, namely, making the coat black and eyes a baby blue color that causes them to pop.

Then comes him picking his Background and he goes through them for the crowd before he picks Entertainer. Soon enough, the rest gets generated and he's given the option of picking Spells along with a number of other things. Which Wei Wuxian does his best to describe as he goes through them.

With his Wangyu complete, Wei Wuxian steps back, which causes the game to save the Character under his name, Player Ying Wei. The next person to make their Character is from the Lans, Su She, is the name that comes up before a blank Character Page appears. Su She ends up with a lot of 14s for his Stats and picks High Elf for Race with Noble for Background, the Class ends up being Wizard.

And soon that gets saved, with Su She stepping away to allow someone else to make their Character. Not everyone feels brave enough to forgo Human as their Race but their Party does round out with many trying out various Classes, well, save for Rogue at this point. Members of the same Sect also had a tendency towards a narrow number of Classes as well, like how many of the Nie picking Barbarian for their Class with one in four or five picking Ranger instead; although Nie Huaisang is the truly odd one of his Sect for picking Druid on top of Wild Elf for his Race, although for Background, it's the same as the rest of the Nie, Outlander.

The Jin have yet to create Characters yet and neither has Lan Wangji. In the end, what seems like a stand off between the two ends with Lan Wangji approaching the spot. The Lans tended to pick either Monk or a magic user Class but a wide array of Backgrounds along with Human, if not Human, then Half human Race or Elf.

Wei Wuxian can't help but feel a bit more energized about seeing what Lan Wangji will make. Zhan Lan appears before a blank page and instead of picking a Name at the beginning, he rolls. First roll is... a 9. 15 is the second, followed by the following, 13, 13, 15, and ending with another 9.

Without any real haste, Lan Wangji puts one of the 15s into Cha and the other into Str. Then he puts the two 9s into Dex and Wis, which leaves the 13s for Int and Con. Then comes Class and it's a surprise to see Lan Wangji pick Paladin, making him their third one for the Party.

This time, it's Gender and it's not that surprising to see man become male with Age being 19. Background is the next to get picked, Sage gets selected. There's a pause now, that lasts for a bit but in the end, Race is the one that seems to get attention next and he's a bit surprised to see Harengon getting picked, size picked is medium, which makes it so he's not only member of that Race within the Party with changes go looks being next, soon enough, there's a white coat along with bright amber yellow eyes.

Name is that's picked is a mere Wu Ming, Wei Wuxian is rather curious as to why Lan Wangji picked that for a name while the final touches get added, like picking two other languages due to Sage Background along with increasing Con by 2 and then Wis by 1. As Lan Wangji steps back after finishing with his Character, it now leaves the Jin as the only ones who need to make Characters.

With a scowl, Jin Zixuan marches over and like everyone, they see his birth name appear in that strange manner before that blank page. Like Lan Wangji, Young Master Jin begins with something else, this time Gender, which is male with the second to be done is Race. Leonin gets picked, although it almost looked like Dragonborn was a close choice. Wei Wuxian could only guess at why Leonin had been picked but it's likely that the Jin will follow their Young Master's lead for Race if not for Class. There's number by the Stats that the Leonin grant, an image of appears, and this leads to dice getting rolled.

13, 9, 8, 14, 6, and 14. Then an option to reroll the 8 and the 6 comes up, which has happened before. Jin Zixuan does so and get 10, which replaces the listed 6 and 13, the 8 fades away before getting replaced. It's Class that Jin Zixuan goes through, picking Artificer. With that picked, the rolls get assigned to the Stats, with one of the 14s going into Int and the other going into Con. One of the 13s goes into Wis and the other into Con. Str gets the 9 with Dex getting the 10.

Age is 20 with Background being Far Traveler. And so on and so forth. The Name that gets chosen is Lung, the Lung that stands for Dragon. With the name getting inputted, Jin Zixuan is done and takes a few steps back after reviewing what he'd created. With that, the rest of the Jin Sect Disciples do end up picking Leonin or Far Traveler, in order to have something similar with their Young Master. It's here that they get a few picking Rogue for their Class, each of them setting a hard face while looking at the crowd, almost challenging them to comment on their choice.

And so, they end up with five Jin Rogues but they did get another three Clerics, although Mask, God of Thieves did get picked as the Deity for two of them, with the third picking Wuakeen, Goddess of Trade. The rest had mostly gone with Fighter or Ranger, Archery being their Fighting Styles throughout those two Classes.

The other Deities that had been selected among the others who had decided on being Clerics are Azuth, God of Wizards; Deneir, God of Writing; Helm, God of Protection; Lathander, God of Birth and Renewal, and Try, God of Justice. They now had thirteen Clerics, four Druids, three Paladins, and seven Bards, which includes counting himself. So, they have healing magic covered fairly well along with having sixteen Divine casters.

It takes a bit before the game realizes there wasn't any new people approaching. And the collection of Players Characters vanish before that gear clock appears once more. Then a message appears.

[Registration of Characters Complete!]

[Game will begin in: 5:00]

[Game will begin in: 4:59]

And the count down goes down in a rather strange manner but everyone is getting the last of their nervous chatter over and done. The surrounds change slowly as they reach 2:00 on the count down, becoming brighter, like stars coming into existences around them. When they get to 0:30, it seems like they are suddenly floating and then, comes 0:10 they begin to fall before white overtakes their vision.

oxxxx[{::::::::::::::::::::::::::::::::::/

Yu Ying rolls his eyes at hearing the giggle and the wood scrapping upon wood. Picking up his pace, he heads down the stairs of the inn. There's still a number of things for him to do before turning in. As he arrives at the tavern portion of the inn, various members of his Party are in various groups while a few of them are having an early supper as they'll be replacing those on watch.

It hardly matter that they are in a village, not when there's the quick way of ending the game by assassinating the other Party instead of advancing down the Main Questline. They haven't seen much evidence of the other Party but, with their numbers, they could have split up many times over in order to hunt them down. And our other healer in this is That Woman.

Without a wide array of Classes within their Party, which is what drove Yu Ying to pick Paladin, and recently, decided upon Oath of Devotion. Many of the Party are rather resentful about following Wen Chao's order concerning how they should make their Characters. They might quiet down when he's around during the early days but now?

There's a few languages besides Common and its various dialects, thus, someone among the Party decided to learn a language that neither Wang Lingjiao or himself knew, given they were the only ones that weren't Human. Yu Ying is a Goliath and Wang Lingjiao is a High Elf. It's hard to pin point when the rest of the Party had decided to follow suit with the instigator but it's clear that they've gone on to learn, on the sly.

So far, it seems that Dwarf is favoured but there's another, more... guttural language that seem to be heard in low tones. Yu Ying isn't fully confident of naming the language, given it's animalistic tone, it might be some beastfolk language, perhaps snake or lizard? Given the odd lisp that sounds similar to Lizardfolk accent he'd heard back when they were at that farming village that was a mix population of beastfolk.

The primary butcher shop of that village had been owned by a pair of Lizardfolk, they seemed to be brothers. The pair had sported moss green scales with different splashes of cream white on their throats and chest. The pair were the ones who'd been willing to sell anything to them by the time they were given a Completion Notice when it came to learning how to the Money System, along with the Reputation System, works, thus they ended up with a lot of weaponry made out of bone and a lot of meat when they left the village and it's surrounding land.

That was nearly six months ago and it seemed to set a tone of sorts, at least, until he managed to talk Wen Chao into letting Wen Bolin, who picked Ranger, going on to Beast Master Conclave. His animal companion is a Leopard that he has her named Xiurong and he's a bit glad that their Party number had increased, even if by one and it's a simple beast. It had taken some weeks after the third village but, Wen Chao finally did give in and they were finally able to earn money along with being able to buy better stuff.

Sadly, it only ensured that Wen Chao would begin to enjoy other activities, which still put pressure on their funds as the Second Young Master Wen takes that Woman out and about. Never mind the sly purchases to be sent to certain women, who caught his eye. Women that clearly weren't interested nor seemed interested in him. Wasted funds.

Thankfully, the rest of the Party were more then willing to work with him to ensure that those gifts of regard didn't get to said women but pocketed to be sold at some point, be it at the next village over, to the rare wandering merchant, or to whatever Adventurers they encounter who might like the item enough to purchase it.

Taking a look over the stable, where Wen Bolin should be with his Xiurong. The other Party Ranger, one Wing Lei, who picked Hunter Conclave. As they only have the two Rangers, the rest of the Party are made up of Fighters, although they had done their best not to pick the same Archetype but it's also how they now have other people capable of using magic, an example of which is Eldritch Knight.

Finding Wen Bolin at the stable along with two others, who picked Cavalier for their Archetype. As they don't have the funds for mounts nor do they feel confident about splitting up to go off in search of wild horses or some beast to tame to be their mounts. Conversations decline until they stop at the sight of him.

"Anything new information?" Yu Ying asks those gathered within the stable. It's more then likely that they don't but they also suspect that's not really why he's outside.

"Ah, there does sound like there's a pair of Harengon making names for themselves." It's hardly new news about sightings of a pair of Harengon, one is white and the other is black in color. One is on his way of becoming a famous Bard and the other is making waves for being a Paladin, given that Harengon are said to be immigrants from another world; a world said to be as cruel as it is beautiful.

He sighs, can only guess what new song has been making its way through the various taverns and bars. While he has accepted that there is good odds that among the other Sects, some have likely decided to pick other Races, given having spied some Harengon and some of the other Races, Yu Ying doubts that any of them would pick any of the beast looking Races, not when there's Elves, Gnomes, Halflings, or half breeds like Half-Elf and Half-Orc.

They've encountered plenty of other Adventurers during their time within this game, some having existed before they arrived within this world and during their time here, have seen new ones step up and form up their own Adventuring groups. They do pay a bit more attention to those of a more human cast to their features along with those that showed up around the time they did. It's costly, paying for news upon particular members who are also Adventuring around but it's a way to keep tabs on those they suspect are members of the other Sects. It helps that there's Adventuring Halls in most of the medium size villages and in all cities.

Mentally sighing, Yu Ying begins asking about who's on what rotation for Quest hunting and looking for information concerning the Main Quest. It's not that he doesn't know, it's just, it keeps him from listening to the pair going at it. He's temped, oh so tempted, to pick up some hobby, like reading or wood craving while the pair have decided to engage in such activities in their, often, shared room.

oxxxx[{::::::::::::::::::::::::::::::::::::/

"So... We won?" A certain Wild Elf Druid inquires at the count down. "Seems so." Remarks Jin Zixuan, who's finished getting something out of his teeth viva using one of his claws.

"I wonder what caused the Party wipe?" Murmurs a certain black furred Harengon from the lap of a certain white furred Harengon's lap, who's sitting upon a pillow and with a arm behind the Bard's back. It kind of brings back memories of what happened when he was a child, only he did know how the final member ended up.

"Well, a win is a win." Jin Zixuan states and those within the room can't find it within themselves to care, after all, they had just finish dealing with some kind of Possessed City and its puppets pretending to be inhabits. Creepy that builders thought it a good idea to build the entire city with a bone from that dead Storm Giant.

It wasn't in line with the Main Quest but it was a way to fill up their coffers due to needing to partake in gambling to advance said Main Quest, which involved bankrupting the Gambling Hall's current owner to spend time figuring out the next hint by studying the building itself, which did, finally, involve needing to set the whole building on fire and watching some kind of recorded scrying scene play out over the burning building. They didn't get a lot for the burnt wreckage of a Gambling Hall but they did get out of it without dealing with time in cells, what with paying off various officials and locals to look the other way about the whole burning building and all.

"Well, think about it like this, we get to keep everything we have in our respective bags." Someone points out. "Oh yea! We won. We! Won!" And thus, cheers erupt and there's some hugging along with a bit of a friendly back slaps among other antics.

Wangyu smiles in a good nature fashion, all the while not bothering to move from Wu Ming's lap. "It's been... What, eight years?" He muses softly to the Paladin.

"Seven years, nine months, and three days." Wu Ming gently corrects with a slight humorous note to his tone. "Going to miss this." Gently mutters his white furred counter part.

"Which? Being cute as a bunny?" He inquires. "Or having a fiancée that's as cute as a bunny?" Reminds himself once more to get Lan Zhan a pair of rabbits, hopefully one that's white and one that's black.

There's a positive hum from his, Wangyu's fiancée, no clarification about which of the two he agrees with or that he just prefers both to be the same. "Going to have to wait before we take those three bows now." He states with a sigh, which causes Wu Ming to tighten his hold upon him, causing him to curl up a bit from how he's sitting upon the Paladin's lap.

As they go through with a final kiss, the world around them alters. By the time they pull back, they are standing yet hugging. Both human, back to being Wei Wuxian and Lan Wangji, one the Head Disciple and the other, the Second Young Master.

As their respective arms move from the other's body, someone is reading a message out loud. Yea, Wei Wuxian kind of remembers something like this coming up from that one time. Which had come into play upon arriving into the game world as Wangyu, given he had been given his previous Character's belongings with a minor reminder of what he'd selected from back then.

Soon enough, they turn to regard the main message and study their fellow Cultivators. It's been just about eight years since they had started the game, thus it's kind of something to get use too, them looking human, never mind they themselves being human once more. It's not long after He Su finishes reading the message, mini options appear before each of them, inquiring if they would like to liquidate everything into their native currency.

He doesn't accept that and when it asks if he would like to exchange the coins into native currency, he selects yes. Wei Wuxian then accepts the offered Bag of Holding and wears it. Looking around, it seems he drew a lot of attention at his choice. It's not long before people either follow his example or they get a pouch that's likely larger on the inside then outside to fit all of the correct coins from having sold their various weapons, armour, and other such items.

With the last one making their selection, they are shifted back to that previous hall. Wei Wuxian notices that the game has returned to its previous, resting state. It's then that they notice that the Wen Disciples are down for the count. Feeling a bit more bold after staring at the prone figures for a bit, he approaches and nudges one of them. They don't seem to wake, so, he crouches down and checks their pulse.

"They are alive." Wei Wuxian reports to the crowd within the hall. As he gets up from his crouch, one of the Nie check one of the doors while a Yao Disciple wanders over to the other. "Nobody seem posted here."

"Well! What say you that we do the noble thing and take this group to the Healing Wing?" Wei Wuxian addresses the crowd with a bemuse smile.

"It wouldn't be right, given how kind our hosts have been." Remarks Nie Huaisang in agreement, likely realizing that this could cause a lot of trouble... for Wen Chao and the other Wen Disciples.

And so, volunteers volunteer themselves and collect one of the various Wens. It takes a bit of time to ask a servant where they need to go for the Healer Wing, but they get it, along with the fact that they drew a lot of attention as they go in that direction. Soon enough, the various Wens are settled within the care of Healers and they head back to their respective rooms, after all, there's plenty of people who would like to go through their Bag of Holding to ensure their belongs were fine.

Wei Wuxian wonders if anyone touched the game but didn't see the point in checking. After all, things are going to be rather interesting either way, given he suspects that each Bag of Holding is attuned and might not be able to be open by anyone save their owner.

oxxxx[{::::::::::::::::::::::::::::::::::/

"Report." Wen Zhuliu tries to figure out where to begin, but doubts it matters a whole lot, given how irritated Sect Leader Wen is. "It seems that enough time passed for that strange game to have strength enough to begin another game." He begins and then speaks what little he remembers of the events involving how the game got set up by the Jiang Head Disciple Wei.

There's no motion from his Sect Leader to halt when he brought up Character Creation and the orders given by his second son, Wen Chao, when it came to making Characters. Reporting who selected what and any name changes, if any, that occurred. Whenever a particular order given by Second Young Master Wen comes up, there's a slight narrowing of eyes and a feeling of pressure, which he kind of slows down his report until his Sect Leader returns to normal looks, thus he does his best to speed through said results.

Soon enough, he finishes that Trial Year within the game. Which brings him to trying to explain what he recalls concerning the end of that year's message. Which brought up a bunch of information that focuses on why the Main Quest was so important along with the win conditions, namely, finishing the Main Quest before their opponents or by their opponents either all dying or being unable to continue on following their Main Quest after a year in game.

Wen Zhuliu isn't sure if he really needs to cover Second Young Master's reaction to that information, particularly when the beginning of starting their Main Quest involved them needing a Written Invite to one of the Kingdoms' Palaces to meet with the local Emperor. Of Wen Chao's confidence in regards to him being able to just ordering for such from one of the Imperial Guards. He recalls the fit Wen Chao had upon learning that he couldn't demand such upon them arriving at one of the Capital Cities, which involved them needing to leave that Kingdom as quickly as possible, less they end up getting arrested and executed due to Wen Chao's attitude and arrogant demands.

There's a hiss from his Sect Leader concerning Second Young Master Wen's behaviour towards how to achieve such a thing. There's a clear closing and holding of his eyes as he continues and that pressure returns. And yet, Wen Zhuliu continues on reporting how they got around to evading any hunting party along with how he'd advised Second Young Master that, perhaps, he should take the time to sight see through this new Kingdom of Yi Tien; the Tien for Celestial and the Yi for Plum.

"The name of the previous Kingdom?" Inquires his Sect Leader. "Kingdom of Hong Jin; the Hong for Red and Jin for Gold." He reports.

"I'll want you all to write up your actions and will read them later." Sect Leader Wen states and he feels a bit of relief, after all, they had been within that world for nearly eight years. "How did you all come out of the game unconcious?"

Wen Zhuliu swallows as he recalls his last moments as his Character, Yu Ying. "There was this... female Devil." He's unable to find the right word to use for Succubus . "Second Young Master became... enchanted with her and she used him to fuel some kind of Summoning Array viva some... Dual Cultivation method."

"How did she get near him?" Asks his Sect Leader. "Ah, it seems that she had the ability to assume different appearances. I suspect she killed Second Young Master's bed servant and impersonate her." Wen Zhuliu states, in honestly, none of them suspected such a switch until they witnessed it occurring after the Summoning.

"And her change in behaviour didn't alert any of you to such a switch?" Sect Leader asks and Wen Zhuliu can't honestly say that it had been any worsening of behaviour from the woman, in fact, it had been the opposite for the pass month. Her behaviour had seemed improved in certain regards, never mind that they've all just gotten to the point of ignoring the pair's behaviour for the most part.

"There wasn't all that much difference between the two in behaviour." Wen Zhuliu explains simply and he can tell that there's this odd look of incredibility at that thought. That this maid's behaviour could be so bad that none noticed something inhuman pretending to be her. "Second Young Master favoured her greatly." Letting his Sect Leader figure out if he means that she became spoiled by such treatment throughout their time within the game or if being the only woman at his son's side gave her a sense of entitlement above her station.

"You lost." Wen Zhuliu assumes that they did indeed lost. "My youngest has proven himself incapable of as an Heir." His Sect Leader states and he doubts he's expected to speak up in defence of the Second Young Master, never mind that he's just not wanting to do so. Spending so many years shadowing the spoiled Young Master and trying to keep the man from ruining their finances and credibility, he just couldn't find it within himself to make any excuses on the Second Young Master's behalf.

"You'll be Wen Xu's bodyguard once you have finished with writing up your experiences." States his Sect Leader. "I'll be ensuring that my youngest is as safe as possible along with sufficiently entertained."

"After all, if all he wishes is to bed women, then I expect that something productive comes from such endeavours." Muses his Sect Leader and he tries not to snort at the fact that Wen Chao has been put out to stud, that his own father no longer holds any hope for him to grow into a better person; that the only saving grace this son can do is producing grandchildren, who will hopefully, prove better then their father.

And so, he's dismissed.

oxxxx[{::::::::::::::::::::::::::::::::::/

As they are given back their swords, Wei Wuxian wonders what became of Wen Chao. Walking out of the gate after Jin Zixuan and his Disciples, he glances towards Nie Huaisang before looking towards Lan Zhan. He misses the other already but knows that it's rather unbelievable for them to act like they had within the game.

As far as those outside of the game knows, Wei Wuxian and Lan Zhan had only known each other during that year of study at the Cloud Recesses. That he's doing his best to be Lan Zhan's friend but the other remains rather frosty in regards to his attempts at extending a hand of friendship to the other. It would come out of nowhere, them deciding to marry one another.

In the game, they were Wangyu and Wu Ming. Out here, they are Wei Wuxian and Lan Wangji. It'll be sometime to lay the ground work of their engagement. And so, he looks over at the other Sects and then at his fellow Jiang Disciples.

Turning back to the gates, he begins leading his Sect back to Lotus Pier. He's not sure what had changed within the Wen Sect, just that something had shifted. Be it the game now having power and thus,

Wen Ruohan wanted to examine it, to test it, and, maybe, figure out how to exploit it.

Given how much the game generated, perhaps it will be a while before it can be activated once more. And thus, it'll take them some years to make the most out of it. Time that can be used planning and preparing for the worse.

It's not that surprising that they don't want them around. After all, they did find out that yes, the Bags of Holding they got from the game weren't transferable, same goes for the items within. Only in their respective owners hands will such items come alive and could be used. Given that belongings always return to the Bag of Holding by the end of the evening... Nor could they part the Bag of Holding from the owner for long before it returns.

They can't find the means to destroy such bags either. So, there's a bit of distrust about what items they are in possession of. It seems the Wen Sect has decided to remove the current wild cards from their sphere, to allow them ensure that they couldn't cause the game to spend its charge on a game just to use up some of its power.

Either way, there's no point in worrying overly about the Wens having Adventures and Adversaries in their procession. Given it's got limits and thus there will be chances in the future to figure out how to deal with either getting the game away from them or seeing if it'll be the thing that causes the Wen Sect to fall into disarray due to greed or ambition among its membership.

This is an End

Hoofin' It: MDZS

I don't own Grandmaster of Demonic Cultivation.

- o { x [T] x } o -

"So... Deer huh?" Muses Bai Ming at Wei Wuxian as the newly altered Cultivator joins them after being released from the Healing Hall. "Guess so." Replies the thirteen year old to the seventeen year old.

"Well, at least it's not a goat or sheep." Which is known for being common for those of farming families. "Or even that of a boar!" Comments Li Wing to Bai Ming's left as Wei Wuxian settles to the right of the seventeen year old.

"Shh!" Hushes Cong Jun, who then looks about the room, half expecting sighting a certain Young Master. "Oh hush yourself, Junjun!" Li Wing counters. "Young Master Jiang isn't going to be showing up anytime soon, not when his transformation is still occurring."

"Not like anyone here is like our Wei Wuxian, huh? Only needing three days to finish!" Continues Li Wing, who gives the thirteen year old a playful grin. "Wasn't your father the one with the body of a deer? While your mother was that of a horse?"

"So I've been told." Wei Wuxian states as the younger shifts his weight, trying to get comfortable with his new body. "I wouldn't have minded something as common as a horse." Admits the younger Cultivator.

"Makes you wonder if horse would have been... Ah, it doesn't matter, right? It's not like Maiden Jiang seems interested in progressing her Cultivation to this point." Bai Ming muses after swallowing but before putting another portion into his mouth.

Other then Wei Wuxian, who's body is that of a Tibetan red deer, the two of the three do have the body of horse while Bai Ming's lower half is cow, or as most call it, an ox. Which Bai Ming is still rather self conscious of, given that a dark coated ox is considered a feature of the Nie Sect in the way that a yellow dun horse body is a feature of the Jiang Sect's family or yak for the Wen Sect. For all that the Jiang Sect is willing to recruit Disciples from anywhere, when someone ends up with a body similar enough to one of the other Sects, they do get gather pointed looks and musing about what relations, if any, their parents or grandparents had to lead to such a result.

"I'd say sheep for her." Comments Li Wing a bit more softly while sneaking glances towards Wei Wuxian. After all, for some reason, the younger Cultivator is overly fond of Maiden Jiang and is quick to defend her honour.

Wei Wuxian doesn't seem to have heard, being a touch busy finding himself eating the newly arrived meal, which is fit for someone who just finish having gone through the transformation. "Maybe, but she's kind of similar with Sect Leader Jiang, so maybe not." Finally has Cong Jun joining their conversation.

"It hardly matters, you know?" Comments Li Wing. "Maiden Jiang isn't interested in much in the end. Not even the typical Arts that a good Gentry Lady is suppose to be proficient in."

And she's to be the future Madam Jin? Bai Ming can't see how that will work out for either Maiden Jiang or for the Jin Sect as a whole. "The workings of the Gentry isn't for us to understand." He states in hopes of ending that particular topic as he, too, doesn't want to accidently set off Wei Wuxian.

"So... Did you get a glimpse of our Young Master?" Inquires Li Wing to Wei Wuxian as the other's appetite slows down and it's clear that the other's focus isn't on his food. This seems to cause the younger to realize that they were still at the table.

"Ah, more heard but, well..." Wei Wuxian trails off and it seems that he's not comfortable about sharing anything about what's going on with Jiang Cheng's transformation, soon to be Jiang Wanyin once he's done with it and can leave the Healing Hall. "It's not confirmed but... the initial tests suggest the hooves will be split."

"Boar!" Crows Li Wing and Bai Ming can't say he'd be surprised if that's the animal that their Young Master ends up sporting. Cong Jun sighs just as someone comes around to switch out some of Wei Wuxian's empty plates and bowls.

"Well, Madam Yu's mother also had boar for a body." Admits Wei Wuxian and they nod, the Yu Sect is rather new, not even having been around for a century yet, so, there's not any real animal associated with the Sect. The former Sect Leader Yu had an exotic body of a Tian Shan ibex while the founder simply possessed the body of a horse. The current Sect Leader, Madam Yu's brother, the animal being a takin. As of yet, Sect Leader Yu isn't married as of yet, so the current heir apparent is a cousin of his, Yu Guiren, who's animal body being a long-tailed goral.

"Well, with patience, we'll see who's right and who isn't." Bai Ming states and his fellow older Cultivators snort while Wei Wuxian pipes in, "Well, I'm sure there's going to be some sore pockets when it comes about."

"Which brings up my winnings, right Li- shixiong?" The younger member of the table inquires in a very sweet tone and even Bai Ming was a bit puzzled over what kind of bet did Li Wing allow Wei Wuxian to place. "I believe you gave me a one in three for deer and since the bet was a tael of silver... Well, I expect my tael by dinner today, ok?"

Snorting as Li Wing's muttering, Bai Ming shakes his head while Cong Jun asks, "Well, other then deer and horse, what was the third?"

"Anything but!" Chimes in Wei Wuxian and all Bai Ming could thing, Of course.

Jiang Yunru isn't sure what to make of her distant cousins, the Young Master Jiang, Jiang Wanyin, and Maiden Jiang, Jiang Yanli. She's been part of the Yunmeng Jiang Sect for two months now and while she's come to understand that when her Cultivation progresses for far, she'd end up having her legs replaced with the body of an animal and that means she'd be out from under her parents deciding who she'll marry. Which was a plus in her books, given that her father had been trying to set up something with someone who'll be in their thirties by the time she'd be mature enough to be married off, on top of the fact that the man is suppose to have two concubines along with a wife already.

Which is why she doesn't get why neither of the pair seem to be putting any real effort into Cultivating? After all, Young Master Jiang ended up being a disgrace, what with only getting his legs changed but not being powerful enough to get an actual boar body. Just a set of hairy legs with split hooves but bare thighs and no tail. Which is a similar state that the Second Young Master Wen is in plus some cousin of Young Master Jin. Which, according to records, means that they need to put more effort into their Cultivation to overcome this disgrace, which there are records of people being able to do so.

After all, Wei Wuxian is well read and has been more then happy to help out Jiang Yunru and the other new Disciples. So, of course Jiang Yunru trusts his opinion, particularly given that the other spent plenty of time in the library coming up with training that should help her cousin in progressing in correcting his Cultivation and gaining a proper body of an animal, although bets seem to remain on boar being her cousin's animal, which is the animal that his mother, who'd title should be Madam Jiang but is going by Madam Yu, for, some reason that nobody is willing to talk about.

As Jiang Yunru comes to the end of the forms, Wei Wuxian gives her a nod of approval before moving to help Ning Kang with his stance. As she begins again, Jiang Yunru notices her other cousin, Maiden Jiang pass the training field with a servant carrying a bundle. Jiang Yunru isn't sure why Maiden Jiang isn't taking her Cultivation training serious, particularly given she's to be Madam Jin upon marrying Young Master Jin, who is a Cultivator himself and has the body of an argali.

And there's a basic lesson that she'd been taught, that most get taught Jiang Yunru is sure, is that Cultivators don't marry mortals. Given that lack of transformation, that should mean that her cousin, Maiden Jiang, is a mortal. For all that she'd been born to a Immortal Gentry family and thus, should she really be marrying Young Master Jin?

"A-Ru." A gentle voice calls out, bringing her back to where she is and what she should be doing. "Sorry, shixiong."

"It's fine." Wei Wuxian says with a sigh and it's then that she notices that she's hardly the only one who'd been watching Maiden Jiang. "I guess now is as good a time for a break." There's plenty of cheers of approval over that suggestion.

As Jiang Yunru begins to walk to sit upon one of the benches, she watches as Wei Wuxian, her shixiong, begin to approach where Maiden Jiang is, the tail only twitching once during the walk. Most of the Disciples do end up with horse bodies, she herself is hoping for a dun horse body to prove that she is indeed a descendant of the Founder of the Yunmeng Jiang Sect! That she isn't wasting her time trying to be a Cultivation, that she is a Cultivator.

"I think I'm going to end up a sheep." Jiang Yunru hears Ning Kang say in a dispassionate way. "Well, given my great uncle was a Cultivator and his animal was a kiang! So, who knows, I might end up with a donkey or a wild ass for mine! After all, family does count for something, right?" Cai Xueman pipes in.

"Shouldn't you want something more... graceful?" Asks An Chi while Ning Kang nods in agreement. "Like a deer? Like Wei-shixiong's animal?"

"I'd just be happy with anything, you know? Just as long as I'm proper ." Pipes up their fifth, Liu Duyi and that does cause them all to become rather silent as they know that it's a touchy subject, given the state of her infamous cousin, Young Master Jiang.

"Three improper in a single generation." Cai Xueman mutters softly and what's unsaid is fairly clear. Given how ominous the number four has.

"How sure are we that there isn't a fourth?" Wonders Liu Duyi and they all seem to send him looks of disapproval at the same time. "What? I'm just saying that given how disgraceful it is, there might be a fourth, just not among the Great Sects." He states in his own defence and, well, Jiang Yunru wonders if she isn't the only one to feel a shiver go down her spine.

"Well, word is that doesn't the Young Master Nie have weak Cultivation? Like Maiden Jiang?" An Chi states and continues, "Well, given how Sect Leader Nie is, maybe it won't be long before Young Master Nie tries but ends up improper due to it and that would make it five, then."

The dread does clear up a bit at that though. Sure, it would be bad for such to happen but it would, at least, ward off the effects of four improper Cultivators existing at once. "Your Jiang character is the same as the Sect's Jiang, right?" Pipes in Cai Xueman, looking at her.

Jiang Yunru blinks before nodding. "Yea, I'm actually a distant cousin to the current Sect Leader." It goes without saying to include Sect Leader's kids also being related to her or her to them. "A younger brother of a previous Sect Leader got married to a Rogue Cultivator and none of their kids were interested in Cultivating. They were my great-grandparents and my parents wanted me tested to see if I could Cultivate."

That her father had hoped Jiang Yunru did have the talent was for her alone to know, well, likely for now. But the looks she got from the other four clearly sport their surprise to learn such a thing. "So, you're hoping for the typical horse for yourself?" Asks An Chi and she nods.

"It'll be strange if there isn't a Jiang with that dun horse body in the Sect, you know?" Jiang Yunru says and the others blink. "I mean, Night Hunting is dangerous and, well, Sect Leader does go out on them during his touring of his territory. So, you never know if something might come up, I mean, that's what I got considering Wei-shixiong's mother is supposedly famous and yet, she died on one."

"Oh really? How so?" Asks Ning Kang.

"Her master was the famous Immortal, Baoshan Sanren! And Wei-shixiong's mother's name even shared a character as her master, Cangse Sanren." Jiang Yunru had been curious about why the Madam of the Sect was so incised over this particular dead Cultivator, never mind the relationship between Sect Leader Jiang and this dead woman.

"And his father? He was a member of the Sect before leaving and marrying Cangse Sanren." Jiang Yunru continues to share information about Wei Wuxian's parents. "His name is Wei Changze and he'd been a good friend of Sect Leader Jiang, back when they were young, even getting to study at the Cloud Recesses with him!"

"So... his mother was a deer?" Asks Liu Duyi and she shakes her head, "Nope, she'd been a horse."

"So, Wei Changze was the deer?" Asks Ning Kang and Jiang Yunru nods her head. "Yip! Got a look at a picture back when I was getting tested and his deer wasn't that of a Tibetan red deer but a Sichuan deer. I could tell due to the almost black coat that the painting had."

"Of course, Sect Leader Jiang hides the painting." Jiang Yunru continues on to explain about why they likely hadn't seen it. "Actually, you might need to keep silent about the pair as it might set off the Mistress of Lotus Pier, due to her still comparing herself to Cangse Sanren, even though she's been dead for so many years now."

"What, really?" Cai Xueman exclaims before any of the others could recover from this bit of information. "Yea, really. And given she's due to return, well, there's likely going to be a scene signalling her presence."

"And if you don't believe me, then you can ask our shixiongs and shijies or just the servants." Jiang Yunru suggests and it's clear that the thought of some Madam of a Great Sect could act so was rather hard for them to believe, but then, they joined the Sect a few days after the suppose to be Madam Jiang left to go out Night Hunting with her handmaidens.

"Also, while you haven't seen Young Master Jiang as of yet. Just so you know, he's suppose to take after his mother in both looks and personality." Jiang Yunru adds and would be happy never needing to interact with her cousin at all.

Not long after, Wei Wuxian approaches them and tells them that their break is over. They get up off the benches and walk back to the middle of the training yard. As they finish their warm ups and begin to do the same, they hear the beginnings of a yelling scene near the gates.

"Madam Yu is back." Wei Wuxian mutters and its clear to her that he isn't happy about this. Jiang Yunru might not have the Cultivation to hear the yelling clearly like their shixiong's mood is going down and there's even a wince at one point.

"Ah, should we stop? Training?" Asks Ning Kang.

Jiang Yunru is sure that there's a slight flinch before Wei Wuxian pulls himself together. "That should be for the best." Their elder says, it's clear that the tone is fake and Jiang Yunru feels bad for him.

"We'll see you tomorrow?" She asks and Wei Wuxian gets a sober look as he merely waves them off. Jiang Yunru isn't the only one unhappy about the lack of assurance but there isn't much they could do.

"He'll be here tomorrow for training, right?" Asks Cai Xueman.

o | X [i] X | o

Sadly, it wasn't Wei Wuxian who was waiting for them at the training ground the next afternoon and while Bai Ming wasn't a bad teacher, he wasn't able to answer their inquiring concerning their previous instructor. It wouldn't be long before they would learn about the 'punishment' that their shixiong was ordered to undergo due to the lack of progress concerning Young Master Jiang's Cultivation.

It wouldn't be until three weeks later before Wei Wuxian returns to overseeing their training. Although he did look pale and wane, it wasn't long before that fades. It's their first experience with the Sect's Madam and they never met her face to face, which Jiang Yunru is happy about.

By the time they were here for a year, they had also encountered Young Master Jiang and it takes the others sometime to recall what she'd informed them about this mother and son pair but they seem to vow that they'd do what they could to never come face to face with the Madam of the Sect.

"Who's that?" Shang Xiulan inquires to her aunt, Lan Dongmei, nodding towards the Cultivator with the deer body. "Oh, him? That's the Head Disciple of the Yunmeng Jiang Sect, Wei Wuxian." Her aunt says and she feels her tail flicker rapidly behind her as she recalls the various stories she'd heard about the Jiang Cultivator.

"That's him? How come he isn't third on the list?" Shang Xiulan asks as she tries to calm herself down, although her tail is a tell, given her animal is that of a common muntjac.

Her aunt chuckles and her horse tail swishes in almost rhythm with the soft laughter. "Oh, well, don't you know? The Lanling Jin Sect are rather known for their wealth." Remarks her aunt and she stomps a back hind hoof in a bit of annoyance.

"Should he even be listed? Given he's engaged to the daughter of Sect Leader Jiang?" For the life of her, Shang Xiulan can't recall anything overly positive about said Maiden Jiang. "And does it really count? She never underwent the transformation due to her lack of Cultivation." Even if one ignores what has become of Young Master Jiang, at least he tried to press for the transformation then not try at all.

"Ah." Her aunt then shrugs her shoulders. "I doubt that it'll go through, I've heard that many matchmakers are rather ominous about the match and for that very reason. They are ill matched, in body, mind, and spirit."

"Then why hasn't it been called off?" Inquires her younger sister, who's not yet eleven and Shang Xiulan had forgotten her, given she's standing near her instead of sitting upon her back. "A-Yin, it's likely politics and you know how frustrating that is, right?" Shang Xiulan says to her little sister.

"Ack, politics. How come that isn't outlawed?" Shang Suyin whines and both aunt and niece chuckle at the youngest's statement.

"You'd need to do politics just to do that." Shang Xiulan explains to her sister. "And yes, that's stupid but not everything can ever be simple."

Shang Xiulan looks away and then about but the Jiang's Head Disciple is already gone. Letting out a soft sigh, the topic changes to her sharing what rumours she'd heard while helping their aunt collect what plants and seeds can be found around Cloud Recesses for this season. It's as Shang Xiulan escorts her sister back to her dorms when Shang Suyin comes to a bit of a stop.

"Ah, just curious but, the Jiang Sect is the one with that Young Master?" Shang Xiulan winces a bit at how bluntly asked that comes across, particularly given how they might be caught gossiping. "Well, it's true that Young Master Jiang couldn't transform correctly."

"So, he's in attendance for the lectures this year?" Her sister asks and Shang Xiulan gives a bit of a nod of yes. "Then... does that mean... he's attending classes? That anyone can see him?"

"Yes, the only way for one to correct such an appearance is to sort out their Cultivation." Shang Xiulan explains. "It's hoped that a change in scenery will help Young Master Jiang break through his current troubles." Which is unlikely given what little I've heard about him from Nie Huaisang's complaints when we were meeting up for book meetings.

"Anyway, you know the rule." Shang Xiulan reminds her sister, who gives her a bit of a blank look. "Which one? The one on the wall or the one among family?"

"Both." And her sister huffs but nods in understanding. Shang Xiulan is sure to glance around as they continue on, glad that they hadn't gotten caught.

"So, how did it go, Shixiong?" Inquires Bai Ming to Head Disciple Wei as the younger arrives at the inn. There's a clear look of despair for a second before the look is covered up.

"Nothing new besides getting to meet the famous Wen Qing." The other comes over to join them at the table, after being sure to check the various tables. "It turns out that little Wen I found was her younger brother!"

It's not long before his table mates go through the usual routine while Bai Ming considers the whole issue that's been on going for these past few years since the issue of Young Master Jiang's incomplete transformation. In his humble opinion, it wasn't fair to hold his shidi turned shixiong accountable for what's lacking with Young Master Jiang's Cultivation base, that he couldn't complete his transformation.

It's not like Maiden Jiang ever pressed forward in her own training. Then again, she likely would end up in the same state as Young Master Jiang at best, dead at the worst. Bai Ming thinks to himself as he drinks from his cup while there's a lively discussion going on among his fellow Disciples.

Within Bai Ming's own mind, there's this thought that, perhaps, it's a sign from the Heavens themselves that Jiang Wanyin shouldn't inherit Yunmeng Jiang Sect. There's been word of some changes to the other two Cultivators with the same problem, that Second Young Master Wen's feet had finally gotten split hooves and the tail is no longer naked. Same goes for that cousin of Young Master Jin, only it was more that a coat of fur had finally sprouted to cover the legs with the legs beginning to look more proper in appearance, no hooves as of yet but compared to the lack of changes going on with Young Master Jiang, the two are clearly trying to fix their Cultivation.

The Wens have Wen Qing while the Jins have money to spend in finding aids. Bai Ming reminds himself. Sect Leader Jiang is leaving it up to Wei-shixiong to help while Madam Yu is busy snapping at both for lack of advancement and if not for her absence from Lotus Pier, I'd worry for Wei-shixiong's life as I suspect that it wouldn't take much before Madam Yu finds some reason to execute him.

Looking down into his cup, Bai Ming feels a touch helpless over how things are going with his shidi turned shixiong. Feeling a nudge in his side, he blinks rapidly as he comes out of his thoughts to turn in that direction. "So?"

"So what?" Bai Ming asks curiously, it's clear he's been hundreds of Li away mentally, for all that his body is presence at the table. "What kind of woman are you looking for to marry?" Li Wing asks with a swish thud of his tail across the floor.

"Now, why would I do a silly thing like that?" Bai Ming states in a casual tone. "When I know for a fact that you lock will nit pick at it or find something to mock over this or that." He downs the remains of his cup while they good naturally try to persuade him into letting them know.

While Bai Ming might feel like going along with it, he glances at Head Disciple Wei and he just feels exhausted, drained. "Anyway, perhaps that's enough for the night? We should get some sleep, given there's still activities happening tomorrow." He states and the others grumble but they do finish off their drinks.

They each contribute to the paying of the meal before they head off to their rooms. Bai Ming pats his shidi turned shixiong on a shoulder in a comforting manner. "Just because Sect Leader and the Madam are set to hold you responsible, doesn't mean that you are." He informs his shixiong.

"Thanks, shidi." Wei Wuxian states with a slightly weak smile. "Night."

"Night, shixiong." Bai Ming returns, giving that shoulder a slight squeeze in comfort before heading on to his own room. And thus, he gets ready for bed and puts the situation surrounding Young Master Jiang and Wei-Shixiong out of his thoughts, sleep claiming him a bit after he gets himself situated upon the mattress.

That the Madam of the Sect is cursing everyone and everything, well, with the exception of herself since she woke near dawn. The woman not one bit happy about how Lotus Pier got taken. Then again, is she ever satisfied? Jiang Yunru wonders as she tries to get comfortable, regardless of her bindings.

Jiang Yunru still recalls how Madam Yu screamed at them to go in for killing the invading Wens instead of hindering and knocking out, which is traditional warfare when Sects get into fights with one another. It hardly seemed to matter to Madam Yu, as Heaven's Punishment kept striking her as she attempts to kill her opponents, same went for her handmaidens to some extent. Given the nature of said phenomenon, it was only a matter of time before she fell, from exhaustion or by someone taking advantage of her increasing unstable sense of balance.

Not that she saw how Wen Zhuliu got in close to Madam Yu, him with his livid musk deer body allowing him to dart in to land a solid blow, temporarily shorting out Madam Yu's Golden Core, which on top of Heaven's Punishment, knocked her out cold. She dimly recalls her Wei-Shixiong shouting for them all to surrender; to put down their weapons. What little she can recall has most to do with bright flashes and thunder instead of the fighting itself.

Not that Jiang Yunru herself had needed such an order, given how she'd been given quite the blow to her head and hadn't been in much of a condition to resist getting bound up near the beginning and was only just starting to recover from the ringing in her ears and her vision swimming about. She kind of recalls hearing him repeating himself a lot. Of shouts from the Wens for the handmaidens of Madam Yu to stand down.

As a young Wen Cultivator attended to her is when Sect Leader Jiang arrive with his group of Disciples. The whole incident was fairly short, although her older relative did demand to know the hows and whys of the Wens' actions. Not that it mattered. Jiang Yunru muses to herself. Not when the Lans of Gusu Lan did nothing to warrent getting their Sect burnt.

With everyone securely bound, the Wens were left overnight out in the open as there were too many of them to move, never mind that there wasn't any holding buildings within Lotus Pier. So, other then simple blankets being put on them, the Wens left them be, and Jiang Yunru had a hard time getting comfortable enough to get a good night's rest.

And now that it's dawn, she and the others can't help but stare at the appearance of the Jiang siblings just approaching from the still open gates of Lotus Pier. And Jiang Yunru just feels so... empty and defeated at the very sight of the pair. What was the point then, of sending them off if they'd just, you know, just walk back the Lotus Pier near dawn of the next day? Jiang Yunru doubts she's the only one who's feeling a wide array of emotions at the sight of the pair of dumbasses.

"Mother! Father!" Jiang Wanyin cries out and rushes towards the now silent Madam Yu, who's likely silent by sheer dumbfoundedness of what's going on before her. "Those damn Wen-dogs!"

"This can't be happening." Mutters one of her shidi. "It is, sadly." Murmurs one of her shimei.

"Jiang Cheng!" Cries out Jiang Yanli once she's next to her younger brother. "We need to go!" There's tugging on Jiang Wanyin's sleeve but the other shakes off his older sister's hands.

"Look around for something to cut the bindings!" Snaps Jiang Wanyin, glaring at said older sister. "Don't worry, we'll get you out of this!"

As Jiang Yanli begins to wander around, begging for one of the Disciples to tell her where to find a knife or sword, there's cries of, "Intruders! Intruders!"

"Run you brats! Get out of here!" Madam Yu finally recovers and snaps at the two. "I ordered you two to head for Mieshan Yu! What are you two doing back here?" Her shouts louder at the pair.

"But... We're here to get you out of here!" Jiang explains and Jiang Yunru glances toward the nearest building as a group of four Wen Disciples come charging out, with lassos already preparing to be sent to tie them up.

It's rather comedic scene that plays out as the pair do try to run but the Wens are faster and they have the advantage of having something ranged. The group of four spilt into pairs to pursue one of the two siblings. A scream comes from Jiang Yanli as the rope gets around her upper body and she's unbalanced, landing on the ground while Madam Yu sprouts out meaningless threats at the Wens.

As for Jiang Wanyin, it's near the same time, with an uplifted leg getting snatched while the second manages to land over the head. There's clear thrashing from both Sect Leader Jiang and Madam Yu along with worried cries of "Jiang Cheng!"

The pair are carried back into the building by the four Wens. It's a given what's going to happen to the pair, well, at least to her. Jiang Yunru doesn't participate in the various conversations going on. Those that weren't near to see what happened getting told of what just transpired.

All the while, Madam Yu is causing a scene, attempting to wiggle hop towards the building while cursing out not just the Wens but Sect Leader Jiang and Wei-Shixiong for being useless, when Wei-Shixiong wasn't any where close to the scene with Sect Leader Jiang being a bit far from where Madam Yu had been when the pair arrived.

The Wens are more active now and a few come to check on them. It's not long before Madam Yu to direct her ire at one of them in particular. Thus earning a beating from the Wens, who then drag her back to near where she'd been last night. Some of that group heads for the walls and the rest into the building.

And it's half a shi chen of waiting before a simple breakfast occurs with them all getting a cup of Congee that they drink directly from the serving Wen's hands. It's not much but it does help with the beginnings of a gnawing hunger. Jiang Yunru suspects that they were all rather sore and would love to be able to get unbound.

The Wen in charge of the invasion shows up, the look of the uniform shows his ranking within the Qishan Wen Sect, which is rather high, which isn't that surprising. "The intruding Jiang have met with Wen Zhuliu." The Wen states near where Madam Yu is, the voice is clear as many of done their best to be quiet.

"Currently, Jiang Wanyin is experiencing his body reverting back to that of a mortal while Jiang Yanli is out cold for now." The Wen explains with a clear smirk upon his face, given there's likely some Wen Cultivators that likely got some serious injuries due to Madam Yu and her handmaidens, it's understandable why he's getting enjoyment from Madam Yu's reaction to the news.

"The pair are now condemned to mortal-dom and shall never be able to regain their former level of Cultivation." And Jiang Yunru finds this news to be of some interest as she wonders if he's telling the truth or not. "Well, it hardly matters, given there's a proper Jiang Cultivator among your Sect, well, other then yourself."

Jiang Yunru does her best to not react when various gazes land upon her. She keeps her head held high, after all, it's true. She managed to get the dun horse body that is suppose to set someone related to the founder of the Yunmeng Jiang Sect apart from other members.

Did it cause her to be targeted by Madam Yu? Yes, but Wei-Shixiong always did his best to attract Madam Yu's attention from her. It's how Jiang Yunru began her studies of Medicine, to tend to the injuries her Shixiong got on her behalf. And yet, she still feels proud of all her efforts paying off in the body she got, that there's still proper Jiangs in the next generation asides from her cousins.

"Best remember that we have your children, Madam Jiang ." The Wen continues as he looks down at Madam Yu. "If you wish for them to continue receiving care, you best control your temper and consider your words far more carefully."

With that hidden threat, the Wen Disciple begins to walk away. A bit later, one by one, the Wens help one of her martial family get up and attend to personal needs before being brought back, although not all of them getting tied up once they are brought back. When it's her turn, Jiang Yunru is glad for various reasons, on in particular has to do with Madam Yu glaring at her and making snide remarks.

"Does she ever stop?" Asks on the Wen Disciples keeping her company as she finishes up redressing herself. It takes Jiang Yunru a few seconds to realise that the Wen Disciple is talking about Madam Yu.

"Ah, no. You'd either need that Silent Spell I've heard that the Lans are in possession of or gagged to keep her from speaking." Jiang Yunru admits, was it disrespectful to state that? Yes but as she's the target at this point, Jiang Yunru would love for Madam Yu to stop. "That's if you want her wide awake."

"How tiring." The other Disciple states with a dry tone as they leave the room. The pair sport a goat and a horse respectfully. "Well, either way, she's scheduled to be taken last. Particularly after her two servants of hers get to go before her." The first speaker remarks and Jiang Yunru hums in understanding.

"I doubt you'll try anything but, well..." The first Wen, the goat body, shrugs and Jiang Yunru does understand. "It's fine, I'm just surprised that you're not retying us all up once we are escorted back out."

The two seem to get what she meant and as she exits out of the building, she's back at the spot and Jiang Yunru doesn't make things difficult for the pair as they tie her up. One of her shimei get selected and then it's a shidi, it goes on and on with Wei Wuxian being the first notable person of importance getting pick before those older Cultivators are escorted off to deal with such things.

Sect Leader is fourth last and then one of the handmaidens gets selected as third last. It's been a rather long day but everyone can sense the tension that's beginning to become more and more pronounce as Madam Yu struggles with her temper. It's clear that news has spread about what's about to occur.

And yet, there's nothing Madam Yu can do besides explode with verbal venom the moment that it's clear that it's the other maid who's going to be allowed to deal with body functions before the Madam of the Jiang Sect. "This is intolerable! I am the Mistress of Lotus Pier! I have waited long enough and yet you still refuse to give me my due?! You think my maids are more important then I?!"

The woman tries to stand, even bound up as her legs are along with her arms. The tail of Madam Yu's boar body is wagging with the woman's fury. "Third Lady..." Her Sect Leader tries to soothe the situation only for the woman to turn on him with a sharp head turn plus some look that Jiang Yunru images as being loathing.

Jiang Yunru just doesn't get how it was that her cousin of a Sect Leader could let this woman run rampant over not just the Disciples of the Sect but also with himself. She doesn't bother to pay the scene and words any real mind, her head turned towards the building, she thinks there might have been someone standing near the door but there isn't one now. Feeling second hand embarrassment and shame at the actions of Jiang Fengmian and his wife, namely Madam Yu, as was clear that Madam Yu's temper and pride was taken into consideration when deciding to go through with this minor power play.

Thus, a clear showing at the lack of control Madam Yu has, particularly given that the Wens could easily decide to bring out either of her cousins and do plenty of things, like cut their hair or whip them to death as neither of the two are proper Cultivators. Thus, killing them wouldn't cause Heaven's Punishment to be invoke in anyway. One would think she would have considered the current situation concerning my cousins, her children. Jiang Yunru thinks as that Wen from this morning arrives with Jiang Wanyin, who's unconscious and without wearing his Jiang Sect robes, it's just the inner robes covering his whole body, in particular it's the sight of her cousin's mortal legs that really hit home the fact that, her cousin no longer possesses a Golden Core.

There's a howl of outrage and even more struggling going on from Madam Yu. Jiang Yunru watches as the three approach near the spot where Madam Yu is. There's a gesture and it's not long before Madam Yu gets a few blows before one of those who were about to take the second handmaid surges forth with something, that something turns out to be a gag. This gag gets shoved over the head before fitted upon Madam Yu, this gag is rather special as it is one that covers her lower mouth as well as a bit of her nose.

Something seems to flare upon the cloth gag and Jiang Yunru muses that it's the Wen Sect's answer to the Lan infamous Silent Spell. The way Madam Yu tries to get the gag off while her legs kick about. "My Lady!" Her Sect Leader shouts out and tries to get close but the original Wens prevent it, moving to ensure he doesn't wiggle in that direct any more.

"It seems that it's true. You don't really have the right skills to be a proper Madam of a Great Sect." Remarks the important Wen Cultivator after making a hand sign, which seems to cause the cloth of the gag to dim.

Madam Yu's legs stop kicking about along with her trying to get the gag off. "There's so many rumours going on about you, Madam Yu and we now know how much truth there is concerning your treatment of your husband's Head Disciple." The Wen continues to speak and Jiang Yunru isn't the only one who likely flinched or looked down in shame at the mention of Wei-Shixiong's treatment.

"Whipping a Disciple with a Spiritual Tool is a rather extreme punishment after all." The Wen remarks and continues easily, after a bit. "The use of which, among majority of the Sect, tend to be for severe crimes, namely betrayal, before expulsion from the Sect."

"How shameless is the Jiang Sect? How can a Sect Leader allow their Head Disciple to be whipped so with such a Spiritual Tool that is Zidian without following through with expulsion from the Sect?" Jiang Yunru tries to shift her weight as she feels guilt over those times she'd seen that happen.

"How thick faced Sect Leader Jiang is to continue to allow that same Disciple to continue being named Head Disciple when never given the respect and protection such a post entitles that Disciple to!" The Wen makes a motion with a hand and her cousin gets put down but the pair keep their hands upon the shoulders, keep Jiang Wanyin's upper body up.

"It seems that Jiang Sect seems to think Head Disciple equals whipping boy!" The Wen glances towards her Sect Leader. "Well! The Wen Sect are of the opinion that the Jiang Sect have it backwards, whipping the successful and proper while rewarding the incompetency and improper is far too much!"

"For ever whip mark upon Wei Wuxian's body, we're going to give former Heir, Jiang Wanyin, two strikes." The Wen declares. "And given that Zidian was used, a Disciple Whip shall be used as a stand in."

And the Wen does a rear turn while a Wen Cultivator sporting a common ram's body seemingly appears behind the pair holding Jiang Wanyin, in his possession is one of the few Discipline Whips belonging to the Jiang Sect. As the important Wen along with the Wens who'd been about to take the second handmaiden away begin to head for the building. Those were the ones that were going a touch slower, almost expecting to be given orders to continue about their previous business.

"No... You can't... You'll kill him!" Sect Leader Jiang states and everyone knows that even with a Golden Core, the Discipline Whip injuries are troublesome to heal properly.

"Your wife should have thought out her actions before she resumed her previous course of behaviour." The Wen with the common ram's body sums up while the Wen Leader continues on without seemingly hearing anything. The Wen tests out the whip's balance a few times while her cousin slumps in defeat.

Jiang Yunru doesn't look away as the whipping begins. There's a few of her shijie and shimei who whimper or cry out after a blow. From her shixiong and shidi, there's a few who bow their heads down that she sees out of the corner of her eyes. Yet Jiang Yunru finds that her ability to feel seems to have escaped her and so, she just watches as the under robes of her cousin become bloody rags and blood begins to drip to the ground, slowly becoming a puddle.

Wei Wuxian isn't sure how he ended up getting put under Wen Qing's command as since the day Jiang Wanyin was whipped to death, he'd found it hard to care about his situation and surroundings. He had known the Wens had been interested in his back but hadn't realised why they'd pay his whip marks any mind until Wen Bingwen's announcement. The punishment of his shidi and the Heir of Jiang Sect coming to pass simply due to Madam Yu's inability to control her anger and pride.

"It's not your fault, Young Master Wei." Wen Qionglin, Wen Qing's younger brother, pipes in from across from him. While his gaze is upon the open book before him, his attention wasn't upon the contents anymore.

"I know! I know..." Wei Wuxian had a debt to the Jiang family and he couldn't do anything to prevent what happened. He knows it's Madam Yu's own inability to control herself that caused Jiang Wanyin to die, but it doesn't feel like it, given that the number of whips given had to deal with the number upon his own back.

"I know it here." Wei Wuxian taps his temple before adding, "But not here." He holds his hand over where his heart is.

It's been two months since the fall of Jiang Sect and there's an engagement going on between Jiang Yunru and Wen Qionglin, as Jiang Yunru's horse body shows her clear relation to the founder of the Jiang Sect along with her blood relation to Uncle Jiang, who also has the classical look of the Jiang family. As Jiang Yanli no longer possesses the capacity to Cultivate, thus, the only woman left with clear blood connections to the founder is his shimei. Thus Jiang Yunru is the only one who could be used to join the Jiang Sect and the Wen Sect together.

For a few weeks, Wei Wuxian had been suspicious of Wen Qionglin's nature but once he's been reassured, well, he'd felt adrift as he isn't incline to give his all to the Wen Sect. Yet, he can't really bring himself to think of himself as a member of the Jiang Sect given the responses of Madam Yu but also Jiang Yanli. While Uncle Jiang doesn't blame him over anything that had happened, that wasn't the same for the remaining Jiangs.

Jiang Yanli held it as his fault for not having the Sect fight longer or for not escaping to help them in getting them to safety. Then she held it against him for allowing the Wens to see his whipped back. It hurts, the kind shijie thinking that if they hadn't seen his back, they wouldn't have gotten the idea of whipping Jiang Cheng, never mind to death due to doubling the number they saw upon his back. It's a massive emotional blow and he's surprised he's still alive from having his beloved shijie hating and blaming him for what Wen Bingwen did to punish Madam Yu.

As for Madam Yu, well, it's clear that she's just doing what she always did. It's worse this time as there's no coming back from having Jiang Cheng dying viva Discipline Whips. That the shidi he grew up with and though he'd be serving as his second in command for a time was dead.

Wei Wuxian had been held responsible for Jiang Cheng for so long that he doesn't know what to do with himself without Jiang Cheng around. It's like a huge part of his life is just... gone and there's this empty space that's just there. He knows that he couldn't Cultivate for Jiang Cheng, that every Cultivator is responsible for their own progression or lack of progress. Yet, Madam Yu and to some extent, he's sure, Uncle Jiang and shijie, did and that weighed upon him, thus he couldn't help but feel responsible.

I'm such a mess... Wei Wuxian admits to himself as he tries to work out his emotions and thoughts. "Young Master Wei should learn to forgive himself for not already being a god." Wen Qionglin stammers out in a firm sounding tone.

"Eh?" He isn't sure what to make of that statement and it must have shown. "Young Master Wei can only be held accountable for his own actions." Continues the Wen sitting across from him. "As Young Master Wei isn't a god, his power is limited to that of his own Cultivation on top of that."

The fierce look upon Wen Qionglin's face also sports a hint of earnest and for Wei Wuxian, it finally comes to him that, in the end, truly, the past is the past. And that, while he can't fully get over what has happened nor how his relations with the Jiang family seem to be gone, it doesn't mean that he has stopped being alive. It just means that his life has been altered, not unlike when he'd been kicked out of the inn and told that his parents were most likely dead.

Life isn't going to stop because of a little hardship nor emotional distress. What he had with the Jiang family... It wasn't perfect, likely wasn't right, but it had been all he had up to that point. Now, Wei Wuxian is again at a loss but he isn't a child nor is he powerless.

"I think..." He pauses before stating a bit more firmly, "I will be fine."

"I just need a bit of time to allow myself to mourn properly what needs to be mourned but, in the end, things will get better." Wei Wuxian states, it's acknowledging that he does have something to be sad about but also a promise that he won't loose sight of the fact that, he's got a future. It might not be the one he thought he'd be living but it's one nonetheless.

Wen Qionglin studies him before nodding. And Wei Wuxian feels like he's able to breath a bit more easily, that some weight or tension isn't in him. It takes him a bit to focus on pushing the matters to the side, it's hard, admittedly but he manages to and begins to read the book that's before him. "One day at a time." He states, it's something that he'd say to Jiang Cheng, back when he'd been doing his best to lighten his shidi's mood over the lack of any major progress or a backslide.

One day at a time. Wei Wuxian promises himself.

Author's Note:

Well, this is something that I got inspired reading this story about Steve Rogues and James 'Bucky' Barnes getting involved in some magical ritual that created a world where the Super Soldier Serum caused them to take on the likeness of centaurs and them dealing with results, including whether or not they want to go back to how things once were or embrace what has happened to them.

And so, given that Golden Cores are something that's as unseen as the Super Soldier Serum, I thought, what if they are permanently altered by having Cultivated one? Oh sure, there's plenty of stories concerning Cultivators being Shifters or capable of transformation, be it whole or partially. Plus, I kind of wanted to ensure that they really couldn't afford to be gender bias over who should Cultivate, so, for them to get around to having kids, there would be a need for a heck of a lot more women Cultivating then is generally shown or expected in this particular setting.

Also, the older the Sect, the more likely the family feature breeds true, as seen with the Yu Sect in the first portion of the story along with why both the Jiang and Jin family still have family members that don't inherit the animal body, it's why Jiang Wanyin is suppose to have a boar body but if Jiang Yanli had taken her Cultivation seriously, she might have gotten a blue dun.

Sect List of General Animal:

Jiang family notable feature being dun horse body centaurs.

Characters within the story sporting Jiang Family are: Jiang Fengmian and Jiang Yunru

Wen Mao and thus the Wen family feature is yak.

Nie family feature is dark furred cattle, generally regarded as having an ox body.

Bai Ming is five degrees cousin to both Nie Mingjue and Nie Huaisang viva a great, great grandmother having been a daughter of a Nie Sect Leader/sister of a Nie Sect Leader.

Lan family feature is Goitered Gazelle.

Jin family feature is a Mainland Serow.

Jin Zixuan sports argali instead of the standard Jin Family feature.

The Legacy of the Cursed Springs: Ranma

I don't own Ranma 1/2

/Start

Date: January 9th, 2025

Time: 4:30 AM

Country of Origin: Canada

City Location: Saskatoon, SK

Video Title: Must be Seen to be BELIVED

As the teacher presses a button upon the remote, the biggest historic turning point plays out for the class. "Hello world! I'm Doctor Benoit and I know what I'm about to show should be regarded as impossible by our current social norms along with our current understanding of the world at large." A man sporting dark brown hair with a skunk stripe that's sporting a crimson colour to it instead of the usual white.

Hazel green eyes closes for a bit longer, almost as if the almost thirty-year-old is doing his best to remember his lines, his prepared speech. Fingers push up a part of glasses as one Daxtin Benoit, the herpetologist, speaks, "I was located Jusenkyo of the Bayankala Mountain range, which belongs Qinghai Province, which is ultimately located in China."

"A number of bizarre animals have been reported south of this area that sports hundred, perhaps even thousands, of natural springs." The good Doctor continues with a tone sporting bitter bemusement. "I mean, who would believe that a gigantic chimera being that sports features of cattle, bird, eel, or ape could ever be real? It's got to be a hoax, right?" A very bitter smile graces the face of the soon to be famous, or regarded as infamous in some circles, man.

"And yet, I witnessed such a thing and more the closer I got to these natural springs that the locals considered to be cursed." Dr Benoit states. "There should be links to various images that I had taken along with short videos being posted in chat, pinned as well."

Their teacher had already reviewed the various links in last week's class and the chat logs the week before that one. Heck, they had reviewed what ancient historic recorded could be recovered about others who'd fallen into these springs in the past, including one of the local settlements that use to use the human cursed springs to transform animals into appropriate forms so they could bed and have children with such... victims. It might as well be considered bestiality with a side of rape.

"Now then, in regard to the history of these springs and the curses they carry, and yes, I mean curses as each spring might have started off with the same curse but the expression of it depends on a single factor." Dr Benoit goes on to repeat what is now regarded as solid facts in regard to the Valley of Curse Springs of Jusenkyo. "If there hadn't been a 'drowned' victim of the spring, the spring absorbed the 'drowned' victims' form." The man does in fact use those quote marks with his fingers when saying drowned.

"The definition of 'drowned' is something that I'm sure people will be frothing at the mouth over in the future when they get around to studying the springs." And he nods in agreement. Ryan can still recall how so many scientists couldn't get over the idea that a statue could 'drown' never mind the few fish themed springs, though people do accept any oceanic life being understandable when it comes to not being able to survive in fresh water.

"Now, for those who fall into a spring that already had a 'drowned' victim, anyone who falls within or gets hit by said water is forever force to take the form of said victim when splashed with or within cool or colder water." Dr Benoit states with a clear confidence and

Ryan knows it's also from experience. "For the now cursed being to return to their original appearance or body, they must be splashed or immersed with warm or hotter water."

"And thus far, there isn't any known way to remove this temperature-based water curse." The cure being rather painful and if done wrong, it could cause the person to remain in the cursed form, it becomes their natural form in regard to the order of the world. When the method came to be known, along with how it could go wrong, governments had put laws into effect to protect cursed people from anyone trying to rob them of their humanity.

"Now, people are clearly demanding evidence and, well, I'm going to provide it but first, let's take a look at what equipment I have set up to ensure there's proper evidence." With that, Dr Benoit moves to take the camera and shows off the equipment, including those assisting him in recording this live event. There's various video recording evidence and introductions of the four who are at various monitors.

Soon enough, the camera is set back down, only its setting widens a great deal. "Ok, drum roll please..." And there's a count down from five to zero. Watches as cool water rains down from one of the makeshift showers.

The change happens without any hiccups and there's a leopard cat within a pile of cloths plus a pair of glasses. At this point, the chat explodes and, of course, it's at this point that various other links are posted into the online stream's chat box to replay the activation through different equipment. One Alyssa Thomas approaches to collect the cloths while putting the glasses into a case.

The next few minutes is of the leopard cat that is Dr Benoit performing while David Russell, a friend of his, narrates along with voicing instructions from chat to prove at this is still a live along with showing that there's no way that this is some kind of trained animal, given how there isn't much haste between the suggested action and Dr Benoit performing, to the best as his can as a leopard cat, acts or answering in the suggested manner.

It's at this point that they know that searches begin to happen concerning the location within China while this video is getting shared. Alyssa Thomas arrives by the time fifteen minutes had passed since the beginning of performance. Once the planked mobile wall are set up around Dr Benoit, there's another count down from five and then, the other shower rains down warm water, a naked Dr Benoit is now moving to stand up with the planked walls about him.

A long, dark shirt is tossed at his face, which causes giggles from the crew and once it's on, he begins to put the planked walls away. It's not long before the stream ends, but history had been made and people are now questioning just how such a curse could remain unknown. The image fades and the machine projecting that video seems to get shut off.

"Of course, this marks the beginning of Doctor Benoit making appearances nor transforming between his cursed leopard cat form and his original one." Mrs Hawkins states and the lecture that comes after that is not anything new information that they hadn't already reviewed. So, it's easy for Ryan to tune her out as he focuses on his tablet and going through search results for anything new being uploaded in regards to methods to manipulate Instant Powders to achieve desired results.

There's something that's just been uploaded and so, he selects it before closing the internet search for a pdf of the various tests that people did with Dr Benoit as the solo, then one of many, test subjects. There's mention of the infamous The Jusenkyo Preservation Society attempting to kidnap and/or kill the good Doctor for exposing the nature of the cursed springs to the world, which got them investigated and arrested. The records did give more credit to this springs' being around for centuries along with a good list of what crimes this group had done and were in the process of doing.

Moving on to a different article that covers a group of tourists visiting the spring a few weeks after the live stream of Doctor Benoit and goes review the footage they recorded with their cell phones, which led to one Kimberly Amber, low profile streamer, jumping into a spring and then there's her cloths floating with a stoat trying to get out of them. Someone is smart enough to grab a branch and would pull the cloths covered stoat out of the spring.

The reactions of those who'd been taking the video exclaiming in shock at the truth of what just happened. Given the location of the springs, the videos would get uploaded onto their preferred streaming site once they get within range of a stable WIFI. The video he's watching has another two members of this group delibrating getting cursed by leaping into different springs, both men and thus they stripped before doing so as to not get caught up in their own cloths if they end up in smaller forms.

Steven Baker would get cursed to transform into fox while Julian Smith finds himself cursed to transform into a kind of wild goat. With three members getting animal curses, the group retreats and the video ends. It would take them a good two weeks to reach a small size city, they had been paranoid that someone might try to arrest them on trumped charges or something.

The video would help support Doctor Benoit's claims along with their names becoming well known. They did run into trouble returning to France with the authorities on charges of them 'stealing' from a 'historical' site. Which caused its own political sensation and would cause an escape from their detainment center, one that is worthy of an action spy film. There's been at least three movies based on their escape, one is more faithful to their accounts then the other two.

Another article he picks to read involves Russia switching targets from Ukraine to focus on capturing the cursed springs, thus began a war between the two. It didn't work out for either, after all, there had been a group of Ukraine Hackers who hack both countries to wear their forces out. Both parties wouldn't figure out there's a third party, believing the other country was just using VPNs to seem to be coming out of Ukriane, which is actually rather bemusing as the Hackers had been rather spiting mad that they forgot the basics of hiding their location, they realized it later and would go about shrouding it later but for the first few months, it was easy to track them back to their country, even to their houses.

Soon enough, the bell goes off and they gathered up their few belongings before leaving the room. Once at his locker, he grabs his lunch kit as he swaps his tablet for his cell phone and blue tooth ear buds. It's three weeks until Halloween and he's in high spirits that he'll find a method for his Halloween costume, it's pretty typical these pass decades to use Instant Powders with actual costumes or just the Instant Powders on their own.

/Break

Ryan can't find any links regarding that download to see if they updated it or added some kind of glossary. So, it just means he'll have to rely upon his own judgement when it comes to going through the hefty old German texts that, if he's to trust Google Translate, seems to be about customizing an appearance of what could be translated into Homunculus. It's unlikely that Homunculus were actually successful in the olden days, but with knowledge they have now concerning genetics, it would be child's play to create them.

Studying the large human looking cake pan, he needs a way to keep it steady. So, back into the kitchen he goes and after a bit to trying various situation, he heads out with the self-driving car to go pick up some kind of clay. As he's slowly making headway in understanding the instructions, he adds new items that he'd try if this method works.

Most methods when it comes to creating hybrid Instant Forms tends to be mixing the two powders together, often in different portions, before putting them into the water to create Instant Water. If this works out, Ryan is can see how he'd be able to do this for the upcoming Christmas Contest for Charity. He might even win; even though they don't know what all of the prizes will be for this coming contest.

Arriving at the store, Ryan exits out of the car, ensuring to grab the key from where it's clipped in. Pocketing it and his cell, he walks through the parking lot. It's nearing supper so there's dozens upon dozens of parked cars meant for the various restaurants that surround the crafting shop. Strolling about the aisles, he is tempted to buy some of the faux leather to create a harness but settles for a synthetic quartz of thumb size, it's clear.

It's needed for this stabilization amulet that he'll need to create to keep up the form's appearance. He'll know created it correctly by it becoming cloudy, the instructions don't mention if, or what, colour will overcome the gem. Copper chain and silver jewellery wire for the amulet. With the supplies for the amulet taken care of, he ignores the rest until he finds the clay, taking out his cell, he tries to find the right clay for the amulet while picking up a few of the bigger portions for holding the cake pan steady.

The kind of clay he's needing is hard to get a real translation. Pull out his cell, he does searches concerning the term used with the word clay. It takes minutes before looking at the options on the shelves, looking for anything that had been mentioned. By the time a good thirty minutes have passed and he's tried looking up the translated term plus clay but doesn't get much besides it seems to be a type of pottery glaze. Which he searches up and finds a DIY recipe for this dark orange glaze.

Taking a moment to consider the clay he's already picked up; he weights it in his mind whether he should pick up more or if what he's got is enough. Deciding to look for a small portion of white clay that should take the glaze's colouring just fine. Before leaving from this section, Ryan checks to ensure he can use a BBQ or over as a pottery kiln and gets mixed results over the issue but figures that buying a cheap pan for him to put the clay on before putting in the over would be the smartest option along with seeing it there's a larger cake pan.

He finds a larger one that's more blank and flat compared to the one at home, which brings up the idea if he still needs the clay to create a steadying block. In the end, he decides to buy the clay as he's sure he'll find something to use it for. With the new cake pan and cheap cookie tray added to the basket, he heads for the cashier.

With that, he heads out and to the car. Pressing the button on the key to unlock the door, once in, inserts the key. Once he's selected Home, the car begins driving forward and out of the parking lot. Going over the instructions for the amulet, he is sure he'll be able to shape the silver wire into the right shakes, it's keeping them in the right shape when inserting them into the clay for the amulet. They are to be infused into the amulet, which makes him assume that they need to be covered by the clay plus they are to surround the quartzs crystal in a circle.

Once home, he notices that his younger brother, Michael, has been through his human Instant Powders. Most of his boy/man are untouched while the girl/woman are down by two. He just sighs, it's not like he has many of those, given he'd only been able to purchase them by groups of half a dozen, he'd only used one three, coming to be four, years back. Like many of his peers, he'd been interested in what he'd look like if he were born the opposite gender.

Given his brother is the same age as when he bought those Instant Powders, he could guess what he'd done with the two that are missing. One for himself and one for a friend more likely. He checks his supply of boy/man and finds the number unchanged, which is what he's more concerned about.

Taking a pouch, he leaves the garage and puts the key back on the hook. Heading to his room, Ryan settles the bags on his bed before pulling out the pans. With them, he heads for the kitchen and slices the plastic off the two. Putting them on the table, he checks and does notice that the human shaped one doesn't settle itself flatly on the table. Returning to his room, he takes out a number of items until he's got the clay, at which point he takes the bag and what's within it out of his room.

It's not long before he's put parchment paper upon the cookie tray that he bought along with greasing the parchment. With that done, he begins opening up one of the clay portions and heads for the bathroom for some dental floss to slice up the clay. It works and slowly, he lays the sliced clay upon the parchment paper. Then he begins to work on the pan before turning to shaping the clay to hold the pan. Bit by bit, he creates a clay cradle for the pan, ensuring it's a smug fit.

He's still got two thirds of what he'd opened up left. Wrapping it up, he puts it to the side. Checking his cell over the DIY oven kiln, he puts the clay plus pan into the over before setting up the temperature. Setting up the alarm to a point between the two suggested times, he starts it and heads for the bathroom to wash his hands. As he finishes up to somewhat satisfactory results, exits out.

He makes a quick dinner for himself before dealing with the left-over clay and the unopened package. Putting them out in the garage for safe keeping, he goes through the tools for things needed to cut and shape the silver wire. He heads to his room for the quartz crystal, silver wire, and a tablet that will hold the image for him to work with.

Returning to the kitchen, he works away, even checking on the stuff within the oven. Time tics away, with him taking tiny breaks for the bathroom and to wash his hands. After a few times of needing to take the white clay from the silver and fixing it, he manages to create the amulet, it's a rather large and thick rectangular brick that's about the size of between his index and thumb and three index fingers thick.

Setting the result to the side, carefully wrapped up along with things around it to help keep its shape, he goes to take a shower. Taking a bit of ten-minute break afterwards to check his Email, he returns to the kitchen to begin creating the glaze, once he gets what he needs, he collects them and then takes out a mixing bowl. Measuring out the right portions to create a small amount of the glaze, it's likely that he'll have a bit left over.

It's nearing midnight when he finishes baking the glazed clay amulet after removing the parchment that's still attached to the pan baked clay base. Placing fresh parchment on the pan, not enough to cover it like before but enough to cover the area for the amulet but an inch around it. The amulet came out a nice dark orange with the quartz seeming to have an inner light, which means he created it correctly.

Clean up takes him until nearly two am and he's sure to take the two back to his room. Setting them both on the desk, he moves what remains on the bed elsewhere and goes to bed. Tomorrow is Saturday and Halloween is on Monday. So, he has all weekend to let the stuff set before use.

/Next Day

Staring at the illusionary image of a boy/man that's being projected after he held the amulet and managing to speak the spell means it must have succeeded. He's got a small bowl of Instant Wolf with an eye dropper next to it. There are no real features of the face and altering how he looks; he gets to see the insides of the 'man' in the pan. The muscles under the skin, the blood vessels, skeleton, and organs shimmer in place of a complete 'man'.

He begins to realize what those specialized tools likely were for as he holds still and watches as the illusion shifts to go through those sights naturally. Given that most of those required rituals that take three to five days to enchant them, he is just relying upon luck and an eye dropper for his Halloween form. And so, he's careful about how much he drops on the head and aims for the tips of the hands plus the toes.

The head does sport a bit more hair upon the face while the ears did seem to move a bit up on the side of the head plus slight points. The fingers and toe seem to sport black nails plus looking a bit shorter. The nails don't look that sharp but then, he knows that it's felines that have the sharp claws he'd want for a werewolf. So, after adding another two drops to the head, one a bit more near the throat, the teeth do alter and there's fuzz on the more pointed ears. The nose has altered with the bones of the mouth seeming to come out. The hairiness does increase with some about the neck now.

Putting the bowl to the side, he gets up to get a smaller bowl from the kitchen and then adding a bit of Instant Tiger into it before adding a bit of water. With that, he cleans the eye dropper before taking a bit of the new water and very carefully lets half a drop touch the illusionary 'man'. Yip, the changes to the hand is now hairy and the nails seem to remain unchanged. Sadly, he adds a bit too much on the 'left' hand of the illusionary man and this time, there's sharper nails but the size of the fingers does shorten.

Setting aside the eye dropper, he uses a stir stick to mix up the water that's under the illusion. Doing so does fix the problem of the shorten fingers but the fur is more on the orange side then before. It takes time but he fixes that by using Instant Wolf to counter the colouring. He focuses on the 'right' hand and mixes the water there. Then adds a bit of Instant Tiger, trying to get the same nails which has him mixing them once more before adding Instant Wolf.

Letting out a sigh, he truly regrets not preparing the tools earlier then yesterday. Still, the fingers weren't as short as they'd been, and the nails continue to sport black. It's hard to see if they end in points given how tiny the hands are.

As he watches the shifting illusion, Ryan sighs. He moves the combination of pan and clay block onto the shelf before mixing the Instant Tiger with the Instant Wolf. Once he's got his clothes off, he dumps the contains on himself, the transformation is primarily that of a wolf. Stretching his body and walking for the door, he presses it open before walking to the entertainment room, settling on the couch as Michael is playing on the flat screen on a previous generation Sony PlayStation.

His appearance does get a glance from his younger brother but that's about it. And so, he just watches his brother and online friends storm a compound of some Survival Builder game. Listening to the one-sided conversation on his brother's end, Ryan closes his eyes.

It's not long before he drifts off, after all, he woke to the alarm he forgot to turn off so, he got perhaps four hours of sleep.

/Halloween Eve

The cloths were stylized after 1990s Goth scene with the amulet being held in one hand as he dumps the contains of the bowl over his head. There's a tingle that spread throughout his body and he looks down at himself, noting the open toed boots that show off his blacken toenails and then at his hands, the nails do end in points with a slight pink of his hand palms.

The amulet sports a navy-blue light, it's still rather clear and as he approaches the full body mirror, the image reflecting back is very much like that illusionary 'man' with animalistic features. Pulling back his lips, he notices his teeth and he touches the ears, which have raised half an inch from where they are normally.

Putting the amulet down on the desk, he runs his fingers through his hair. What feeling he has of his fingertips is rather dull, but it feels coarse. The colouring of both his hair on his head, neck, hands, about the wrist, and what he can see of his feet, don't sport the exact same colouring, which is understandable given he added Instant Tiger to his hands. Touching the fur on his left hand, it's clear that the orange of the Instant Tiger isn't all gone, it's just mix more with the brown, causing it to be a lighter shade compared to his head and toes.

Then he begins testing out his voice. First is humming, next he voices a greeting in a lower tone, then normal tone, and with a near shouting tone. The low vibes in a way that reminds him of a growl, the normal has a slight tilt to the pitch, and the near shouting is nearly high pitch howl. With a voice that's sporting a lower register then normal, he is bemused over the changes.

Being sure to grab his wallet and cell, he exits out of the room. It's not long before he's on his way to the Halloween Party being housed at Violet's, her parents signed off on it. As he walks the blocks, his brother had taken the car to attend a Halloween Gaming Tournament, which began right after school at a rented space.

His brother should be home by ten pm, not that he expects to be home later then nine pm. So he should be in bed by that time. As it's nearly five when he left and it takes him an hour to arrive that the house. "Yo!" He calls out and it's clear that the blink and look upon Glenda's face that she doesn't recognize him viva his voice nor his looks.

"Hey?" Nick, who's just finish knocking on the Halloween Door Knocker. The pair are dressed up in matching costumes, characters from the latest Final Fantasy television series. He'd wager that the hair dye and hair style is likely done with enchanted hair gel that also coloured their respective hairs. The cloths and faux weapons were most likely bought from a popular Halloween Store.

"It's Ryan, Ryan Hammett." He states as casually as he could, and the pair get that dawning realization coupled with the pair giving his appearance a second look over. "Wow, what did you do? Drink some Instant Water to get that voice?" Asks Glenda but they are interrupted with the door opening.

"Xena! What a surprise! I thought you would need to baby sit your sister on her Trick'n'Treating tonight?" Nick asks the horned teen in a nurse costume; the horn is likely the result of Instant Ox being applied to a particular location on the head.

The joke is pretty much in evident at first glance. "Well, my dad returned early and decided to take her for me. So, I just slap dashed this up." Xena states with a simple gesture of her current look.

"It's a CLASSIC, Xena, I repeat, it's a CLASSIC!" Nick declares, which earns him an elbow. "Glad you can make it." Glenda states as she moves to give Xena a shallow hug before entering into the house.

He finishes climbing the stairs, which catches Xena's attention while Nick enters after finishing his nervous giggles. "Xena." Ryan states as a greeting and like the pair before, she isn't sure who he ultimately is.

"..." Xena doesn't seem to have any clue but there isn't much time until a group of younger kids at approaching the driveway. Most of them sporting costumes that are air inflated, like wings or looking like they are riding a horse.

He moves out of the way to allow the group to pass him to get to the door, saying the age-old Halloween Eve greeting. "Trick or Treat!" Xena pulls away from the door frame to reach for something, it's likely that there's a bowl with treats for Trick'n'Treaters.

With tiny candy bars getting put into bags, the group leaves after that, most thanking Xena for the treats. "Ryan." He supplies as he hears the sounds of a movie playing in the basement now that he's near the door frame.

There's a few in the living room that's near the front porch and closet. He notices a full Instant Donkey along with someone dressed up as a pink scaled dragon. The pair are likely a couple costume from the old movie Shrek, Dragon and Donkey.

"Ryan?" Xena seems to find her voice and the group of six in the living room perk up at the name along with the sight of him. "Well, yes, I'm sure that's my name." He tries to sound drawl, but it rumbles out kind of like a growl.

The Donkey's ears turn to face backwards at the sound, it's clear that whoever that is, they can hear above average with those long ears. "How's things going?" He asks as he looks back at Xena.

"Everyone is pretty much here, what with them getting dropped off by relatives or just sending the cars to the nearest lot." She states before remarking, "Seems like someone bought a scammer's sell pitch about a human speaking jackass."

The Donkey of the group's nears go flat and there's a series of baying with a end order of teeth snapping in the air. It's clear that everyone is bemused over the reaction that Xena raised out of their transformed peer. He mentally sighs as he does kind of feel for the person but also admits that they really shouldn't have expected anything advertised to be true, after all, if they figured out how to allow an Instant to speak normal like, it would have made the news.

Xena moves to allow him to enter, and he does so, taking a bit to get closer to the group to figure out who's dressed as Dragon. Seeing its Lizzie, he realizes who the Donkey is. "Ben. Lizzie." He greets the pair before going on to greet the other four, Xena is dealing with another group of Trick'n'Treaters.

"Gothic Beauty and the Beast?" Inquires Vic while his twin, Zack, pipes in, "I see the Beauty, so, where's the Beast?"

That prompts a couple of chuckles, and he snorts in turn. Though, he admits, his idea was more from the near-human forms from two old tabletop games, Werewolf the Apocalypse and its successor of a sort, Werewolf the Forsaken. The first was Gothic Punk themed, thus he though dressing as a Goth would pay homage to the original game.

The twins are dressed as a Holy Cleric and a Devilish Warlock from the popular series Hell Dasher. Vic as the Devilish Warlock with his brother the Holy Cleric. The final two members of the group of six are Helen and Marco, Helen is dressed in a Vampire Hunter get up with fake blood upon the faux leather armour that sports plastic wooden steaks. Marco sports an Eastern Monk attire with a plastic ring staff with a series of plastic rings hanging from the plastic ring that's at the end.

"Well, I feel threatened." He states as drily as he can at the group. "As for me being the Beauty, wow, I now know I don't want to meet what you mean by Beast."

Ben snickers as best as he can give his current state while Lizzie murmurs her agreement with his desire not to run into what their definition of a Beast is, particularly in regard to how he, Ryan, looks right now. Zack chuckles while trying to play it off while Xena gives Vic a peck on the lips. "What movie is playing downstairs?" He asks after a bit of conversation with Marco and Helen about his costume and what inspired it.

"I think it's that classic, time-honoured homage to the season of ghosts." Zack states in a very solemn tone and it doesn't take long to realize which movie it is. "Which version? The 1980s one or the remake of 2040s?" He asks, one is a timeless classic and the other is a shameless reboot, even more shameless than the one that came out in the 2010s which was gender flipped protags.

"The 1980s." Replies Lizzie and he nods, he's seen that one enough for the month. "Followed up with the sequel made of the same decade." Marco finishes and he lets out a sigh.

He recalls watching the classic 1980s and the 1990s cartoons every Saturday morning with his mom and then, later, his younger brother during October. There'd been other Halloween cartoons he'd seen due to his mom, but times change and as they change, there's never any way to get that time back. "Is there anything left from dinner, or it hasn't been ordered yet?"

"Ah, yea, I forgot to ask about that!" Xena exclaims and what follow is asking for their vote on either pizza or fried chicken getting delivered. He votes for pizza while majority of the others go for the chicken. That gets texted to Violet, and he can only guess at her reaction.

About twenty minutes since he arrived is when the last three who said they could make it arrive. The three are dressed up as classical vampires, complete with ancient suits. Faces pale with red lips with crimson eyes plus sharp looking canine teeth. What's makeup or what's illusion is something he can guess about but that doesn't mean he gets it right. The trio head down after chatting for a few minutes.

As time passes, food gets delivered with everyone sending Violet their share of the total once it's shared. He's a bit more careful of what he drinks when the soda doesn't taste right, sticking to water. Nothing serious got brought up and when addressing Ben, they had to keep it to yes and no for him to be included.

A few of the basement dwellers come up to join them for a bit while some of the group would head down to socialize with them. Pictures get taken, some as single and others as couple or groups. Ryan is rather satisfied at how few of the others can easily recognize him.

As eight draws near, people begin to head out and he catches a ride home with Tim and Conner, with the pair being a few blocks from where he lives. Thanking Tim, who's car is driving them, and saying bye to Conner, he exits out of the car. As he approaches the front door, the porch light comes on and he unlocks the door, tapping the security pass code in, he closes the door and locks it.

As he checks the house, it's clear that his brother is still out and thus, he begins to take off his cloths. Once he reaches his room, he tosses what he's carrying into the dirty cloths' basket. As he stripes, he looks at the amulet, which still sports that glow. Once he's done, he goes to have a warm shower to dispel the effects of the Instant Powders.

It's not until he's out that he realizes that something went wrong. Moving to stand before the sink that sports the mirror, he finds that he's still transformed. Running a hand through his hair before tugging slightly at the wet matted hair, it doesn't give, and it does sting in slight pain if he pulls to hard.

Heading back to his room, he picks up his cell, which he needs to retrieve from the pockets that were in the dirty cloths' basket plus his wallet. It takes him nearly ten minutes to recall where he last had it but once in hand, he is quick to bring up the instruction and then, for the next forty minutes, mentally reviews the steps he'd underwent regarding splashing himself with the Instant Powders.

Gripping the amulet, he tries speaking the words in reverse, the incantation he'd used on Saturday to give that method a try. The glow hasn't changed and so, he heads for the bathroom. Putting the amulet under warm water doesn't do much and then he tries to think of what might work. It's a bit before he decides to see if holding the amulet while having a shower would work, as he had been holding the amulet when he splashed himself.

Which... works! Feeling his panic subside, he notices that the colour is gone but the inner glow remains within the quartz of the amulet. He lets out a chuckle before drying himself off with the towels once more. Leaving the bathroom behind, turning off the light, he returns to his room.

Looking at the amulet, he is only getting use to the idea that without the amulet being on him, he could have remained under the effects of the Instant Powders. Which begs the question of if it would have reversed after twenty-four hours or until he'd showered with the amulet. He's tired and decides, as he puts something on before going to bed, that he'll likely figure it out come December, as he wants to create those tools for more control over how those Instant Powders express themselves.

/Break

He'd forgotten which of the two was Instant Man and which is Instant Reindeer. In the end, he figures it hardly matters, so, he puts the contains of the right bowl into the pan. Speak the incantation with the amulet only for the colour of occupy the quartz is green. Looking from the amulet, he watches as an illusion slowly appears in the pan.

It's that of a reindeer and like before, given time, the illusion shifts to give the appearance of the muscles and other inners. Watching it, he takes time to consider if this changes things, after all, he hadn't expected to work from the beast to include that of man, but figures, this might work just fine.

And so, he begins his task of introducing Instant Man to the illusion. This is the first time he's done this with the freshly enchanted tools. He has his tablet out and the cheat sheet he took weeks to create, one that details what each tool does and how to use them, aka, what incantations he would need to speak to get them to work.

The first thing he does, is focus on allowing the form to be bipedal which involves the bones and muscles of the spine before the rib cage and pelvis plus those muscle groups. It's tricky but soon, the illusion does show the figure standing upright like a man. Next is the forelimbs, namely the hooves, three fingers plus a thumb, it works for him, even if the fingers are a bit thicker then he'd likely be comfortable with. He doesn't do anything with the coat of fur, as it works for what he wants.

Going through the cheat sheet, he shrinks the antlers while also working on the throat plus how the head is held. The head shape is one he slowly shapes to mimic a slightly cartoonish cross of a reindeer and a man. The muzzle remains but is much shorter plus the alternation to the tongue and teeth, shrinking as needed but keeping them mostly like those of the beast. Enlarging some muscles here to help hold the head up, bulking up his upper body to be more clearly masculine,

Bit by bit, he alters the Instant Reindeer template into something that should work for the twenty-one days that the Contest requires the participants to dress up for, well, that's including weekends as he doesn't plan to undo it in case, he can't repeat the right appearance. If he's right about the amulet's importance to regain his original appearance, that it'll break the time limit of the Instant Powders, then... Well, he can already imagine how many people will lose their shit over this method, not just over the shear amount of customization that it offers.

He also gets the dimensions of the body so he can work on the decorative harness afterwards. Ryan is sure to put them on his cell phone. It also takes him a bit to realize that there's something lacking, something that deals with the bathroom. And so, he manages to tease out such a body part before shrinking it down, when he does a quick search about it on reindeer along with moving it.

Mentally noting that option for the future, he takes a few minutes to study the illusion with a critical eye. After a bit, decides to take a look at it again in the afternoon. For now, he needs a break and so, he sets both bowls on a shelf while putting the tools onto the cloth. He takes the empty bowl and heads out of his room.

It's not long before he's grabbing a drink and heading for the entertainment room. His brother is in his room, playing on his laptop and thus, he is able to boot up the PlayStation and log into his own profile on it. It being Saturday, he has a few days to go to craft the harness for his costume for December. he's already got the faux leather and the cheap metal rings for it plus a good size bell for the collar that will be separate from the harness.

He'll begin work on the harness tomorrow, which is Sunday. That gives him five days to create the harness and the bell collar. He'll give it an inch or inch and a half extra to the measurements to give him some room to adjust the two on his body without always needing to unclasp it to adjust it.

/ December 1st **

With the harness hanging from him and wearing a pair of shorts he'd bought for this, he's got a dozen of them, he is sure to have the amulet in his offhand as he takes a few steadying breaths. Straightening, he dumps the contains over his head and soon, the shorts are stretched near their fullest while his upper body fills out the harness. The bell of the collar jingles as he gives himself a shake.

The weight of upon his head increases but that's what he expects. Looking into the mirror, he gets his first, actual look at what he'd created. It's, again, pretty much the illusionary image that the pan showed off, it's just, now, it's got life to it, as in, his life. Looking at each of his hands, he flexes the hand with the amulet as he sets the bowl down.

Having only three fingers is odd but it also doesn't feel that odd. The fact he has a thumb helps; he reasons to himself. And so, he places the amulet down as well. Taking steps about the room, getting use to his height and bulk along with the fact he's got hooves and is glad he had modified the legs, so they aren't that noticeable digitigrade instead of the typical plantigrade of humans. He'd done his best to ensure his hooves would support his weight, having enlarged and strengthen them as best as he could.

The gait is different, it's like walking around upon his toes only there doesn't seem to have the option of plant the heel upon the ground. Feeling as secure of himself as he could, he ducks a bit once the door opens to get through. The antlers don't knock on the door frame, but he can't shake the feeling that they did touch it. His hooves click clank upon the wooden floor of the hallway as he heads for the kitchen.

His school belongings are next to the door, ready for him to grab them and go. His dad is at the table along with Michael, they both don't notice him until he's going for what he'd bought for him to eat. It came about when he realized he hadn't done much to the digestion track and he might need to watch what he eats. So, he bought a lot of greens, like kale and lettuce.

If it gets too expensive, he's sure he can buy cheap dried greens from the local pet shops, after all, rabbit food should work for this Instant Transformation, given they have similar diets. As he manages to not drop a bowl as he grabs one, he hears someone choke and it seems like someone noticed his appearance. Not that it bothers him, as he is busy figuring out if he should grab a fork as he walks over to the fridge after putting down the bowl.

He isn't sure how much he'll need to eat as he pulls out a bag of mix green salad. A glance towards the table, he finds his brother looking at him, whatever was on his phone forgotten. Closing the fridge door, he grabs the scissors that are on the side of the fridge to cut into the bag. Once done, he puts them back onto the side as he walks to where the bowl is waiting for him.

It's clear when his dad finally takes note of what going on for, he hears a bit of a choking cough as he fills the bowl as best as he can. As he finishes with the bag, he rolls it up before taking it and his bowl from the counter. Once he's finished with the fridge and is moving to the counter island as he isn't that confident with sitting down right now, he notices his dad glancing at him a few times over the course of him eating with a fork.

"You know, I hear pictures last longer." He manages to state in what he intends to be a dry tone. It timber is a bit loud and there's hints of awkward vocal empathise. Which, well, makes him a bit more aware that he might need to look up better means for the future for his vocal cords, after all, some birds are able to mimic human speak, right?

Perhaps he shouldn't be that shocked when both of them aim their respective cells his way and take his picture just as he finishes closing his muzzle, pulling the fork away. Ryan feels his ears swivel forward as if having their own mind. The pair snicker with Michael quipping, "Deer in headlights."

Snorting in annoyance, which has him also shaking his head a bit, he focuses on his meal of salad. Soon enough, it's time for school and he heads off with his brother. He considers the car and moves to get in the back, leaving Michael to decide which of the front seats he wants. It's a tight fit but he manages, particularly keeping his bag next to him on the next seat.

The drive gives him plenty of time to reconsiders his choices in regard to his whole life, his courage seems to be deserting him. Remembering the previous years that he's witness the seniors participating in this contest and how he'd have judged them concerning their choices... He suspects that the same will happen to him, after all, he's pretty sure his looks will be judged as being cartoony, given he's got three fingers and a thumb or big hooves or even the size and shape of his head.

They arrived and it takes him a few deep breaths before he exits out of the car. There are a few people lingering in the parking lot, which, perhaps, is something of a tradition as he recalls seeing a collection of participants lingering in the parking lot, particularly if they drove to school. The other locations are generally the various doors.

There's a group of seven formed of elves, a Santa, a Mrs Claus, and a reindeer. They are all costumed up, there doesn't seem to be any Instant Powders used, if there was, it's not evident from this distant. It's like he can feel a number of eyes upon himself as he begins walking away from the car. His brother is gone along with the car key, which means he'll have to wait for him after school unless he drops the key off during lunch.

He manages to walk pass the group that's lingering near Ben's van. Giving the group of seven a nod, he returns to focusing on walking forward. There are onlookers who have arrived or been waiting on seeing the various costumed up seniors. Entering the building, he heads for the offices and hands over the envelope with the contest application plus the donation amount for the use of Instant Powder.

The secretary accepts it and goes over the contents of the application before taking a good look. Soon, they go over the verbal agreement, which is recorded, and to ensure he's able to participate in class as he hadn't put anything down for speech impediment. There's been problems in the past over Instant Powders causing difficulty with schoolwork and activities, thus, the need for verbal agreement. So, full body Instant Powders are only allowed on the final day before Christmas Break, which is a rather easy day that does turn into something of a school wide party when the final hour hits.

He's handed a school permit to be placed upon his collar or harness. Putting it on the main ring of the harness that's stationed upon his chest, he walks out of the office. With that, he heads for his locker to put his bag away along with grabbing what physical books he needs for his morning classes.

Once done, he heads for the class, which will be starting in about fifteen minutes. Within ten minutes, the rest of his peers come shuffling in, all but two having signed up for the contest and have their permits pinned on either side of their chests. Most picked to dressed up as elves, there's another reindeer and the rest dressed up as Santa or Mrs. Claus.

Soon the final bell goes off and Ryan does his best to not allow the staring to get to him. Class begins and that's that. The teacher begins on reviewing their last lesson to ensure nobody has any last-minute questions before beginning onto this day's lesson.

The day goes by, with plenty of looks sent his way whenever he's about the halls or with people approaching him for pictures with a side of questions about how he mixed up his Instant Powders or which site he got the mixture instructions from. His answer is some downloaded instructions and just followed them once he had everything set up.

He does have his doubts about the instructions he downloaded and yet, things seem to be working out, if he triples checked the translations from the original text. He'd been on the lookout for an English translated doc, but nothing has yet to release on the web concerning the method. Thus, his own creation of a cheat sheet on how to use the tools and links on pronunciation for the incantations.

His brother kept the car key and so, at the end of the day, he's waiting for his brother at the car. He's had some trouble with his cell and tablets due to his fingers, thus he's been using a stylist to use the pair of devices. Sure, it's clumsy to use one, it's an old one that belong to him for nearly six years now but it's all he possesses at this point that would allow him to make decent enough use of the pair. He may find it within himself to look for a better one or perhaps he won't, it really depends upon how the stylist holds up these coming weeks.

"Annoyed yet?" Michael inquires in lieu of a simple greeting. Feeling his ears flicker backwards as he stares in what he feels is a deadpan look. It's unknown to him if it looked like it feels, given the lack of cowering or even a hint of a flinch.

"Unlock the car." He states as he moves to the back seat behind the driver's seat. The clicks sound out and he opens the door, carefully getting into the car. Antlers causing him some concerns and yet, so far, it seems that there isn't any damage to the car but it's just the first day.

Give it time, it's just been one, singular day. There's still plenty of time for an incident to occur. He finds it odd the feeling of sitting with a tail to be as interesting as it had been this morning.

The drive home has him considering how he'll get around to having a shower, after all, hooves plus tub isn't all that safe. Ryan isn't sure if the tub grips, he bought and placed in the tub will be that useful. He'd tried to cover his basic needs throughout the month of November but, well, it's one thing to imagine any problems he may have it's another to live them.

Arriving home, he heads straight for his room, after doing his best to get the bottom of his hooves cleaned. Once in his room, he spends the rest of the afternoon doing a portion of his assigned homework. Dinner saw him eating the remainder of the salad he'd had for breakfast. While not having eaten his fill, Ryan returns to his room, only he's doing a bit of research on universities and trying to figure out what career he wants to pursue in his life, after all, he rather not invests a lot of time and money to create a business centred around selling custom Instant Powders.

It'll be a matter of time before someone steps forward to claim the techniques and since I don't have the hard copies, I wouldn't be able to profit all that much from it anyway. He muses as he finishes closing the search tab, in the end, he's sure that when it gets released, it'll be the talk for a few days so it's likely he'll hear about it in the coming month or at some point in January. The sale of the instruments needed for the technique are also likely a factor into why knowledge of this magical technique hasn't been released to the public, after all, h can see someone wanting to profit as best as they can before people figure out the enchanting methods for the tools.

As he waits for the next song to play on his list, there's an advertisement for Lightning Touched, which is one of the oldest and nearly scandal free online store that deals with magical items. They had once offered magical supplies and arranging for custom magical item but things... well, scandals happened, so yea, they sold off those portions of the business and focused solely on already created magical items that pass the International Safety Standards for Magical Sales.

Returning to dealing with his least easy subject's homework, he picks up where he left off earlier in the day. Listening to music while looking things up to help him make more sense of the topic he's been assigned to write about. He does take a break to use the bathroom, which is rather awkward given he has furry behind along with his hands not being as dexterous as they had been yesterday.

He works it out and returns to his room. Finally, it's nearing his typical bedtime, so, he saves what he has along with bookmarking the links he'd found helpful before turning it off. He'd changed his toothbrush and does find it interesting experience but still, he powers through.

As he lies upon his bed, void of pillows due to his antlers, he realizes that he'll have an interesting time of it tomorrow, when he'll have a shower. After all, he'll need to comb out his coat of fur and he's unsure if the items he bought will be able to fully reach every inch of his back. Ryan's loathed to ask for aid from his younger brother as well, if only to avoid teasing remarks that Michael could think up to use.

Over the course of the Christmas Contest, people dropped out due to various reasons, but mostly ruined costumes or something of their effect not being able to be reapplied. To nobody's surprise, Ryan wins the Contest, having managed to overcome the dietary issues he ran into along with grooming problems that had him dealing with fleas, which got fixed with magical flea shampoo and conditioner he bought in advance on the off chance he might encounter it. With his picture taken with the comical cheque for the Charity they voted on back in September, which was supporting victims of abuse.

Once home, he headed for his room for the amulet and then the bathroom. He was so glad to return to his normal body that caused him to tear up. Vowing to keep such things for short periods of time, at least until he's fully prepared to deal with the whole health issues that could crop up with the body he engineered with Instant Powders and the magical technique that's yet to make the news.

During an experiment, he found that if he didn't hold the amulet, it didn't cause anything to be off with the form he crafted, it just allowed the Instant Form to fade away like normal when he's in contact with warm water. Thus, he didn't see the need to include the amulet in future experimentation unless he had plans to stay in the Instant Form for a few days.

Graduation saw Ryan gearing up for university and doing a bit of part time work before moving out of his parents' home, moving into a dormitory. He kept the Instant Powders and the magical tools in the bottom of an old trunk, not seeing any need for them during his time living in the dormitory nor when attending university, struggling to keep up with the requirements for his chosen career.

/ Week Since Graduating University **

Looking at his account, he despairs over the fact that his funds will likely be gone before he'd gotten settled into the house he's set to move into next week. Ryan still doesn't have a job lined up; he'd sent out his application to various companies but hasn't heard back from them. And that's when it strikes him about his old idea about custom Instant Powders, causing him to open a new tab to do a quick search on the subject.

In the intervening years, there still hasn't been a peep over the magical technique he'd downloaded nearly a decade ago. He'd forgotten about the whole thing and yet, now, it seems that it might be a lifeline he needs right now. Looking through the so call science of mixing Instant Powders, there's little relatable progress in creating universal results. Most were on covering over the body to prevent the Instant Powders from touching the non-selected area. It was time consuming to get it done and while the results do look great, it often wasn't something anyone would want to endure repeatedly to achieve the look they want.

Ryan goes through his belongings until he finds the items in question. Since the Instant Powders don't expire unless, of course, they are mixed with water. With that, he is sure that his supply should still be good, even though he hasn't touched them for since he'd graduated high school. Next, he creates a new email address before he begins looking through the various sites to select the most creator friendly one, he signs up for it under the name Crafting_Chimaeras . It's also one that allows for the money collected by the site to be redeemed in the form of a Gift Master Card or a Gift Visa Card.

As he waits for the validation code to be sent to the newly created email address, he is setting up a workstation for him to create his first Instant Powder custom form in years. He'll have to think up an interesting look for his Profile Photo as he makes use of Instant Octopus for its skin color and texture ability, he's going for something on the simple side right now, so, Elf but with... a twist to it. He's looking through various drawings of Elves on various art sites to get inspired, and he does is sure that what photos he does end up taking will be of amateur quality.

The kind of an Elf he's bringing to life is one that's sporting mushroom cap growths in place of hair with bright markings that make use of the Instant Octopus skin colouring effects. Dark orange is the basic colour for the skin tone, shading comes from different kinds of mushrooms which gets used for the arms and legs. Using the ability to pinch the shoulders and hips with vines coming out of the final mushroom cap, draping his back. He then uses Instant Girl to erase male genital from the form, making it sexless.

Then he figures out what he wants to do about the teeth and makes use of Instant Dog to create a mouthful of fangs. He continues to rely upon Instant Octopus to make the inside if the mouth pop. The tongue was more of a last-minute addition after he figured out what shade of red, he wants the eyes to appear in. Long and a vivid green colour, it stands out along with the dark blue he's using for the supposed tattoos. It does take a bit to create a simple loincloth to go with the primitive feel. He'd add a spear but didn't think he'd shape a discarded branch to his liking in a timely fashion.

Once clearing out the living room of any personal effects, Ryan applies the Instant Water and uses the tiny capture button to take pictures from where he set his phone up. It's different body shots along with crouching down with a wide, fanged smile and the following involves his tongue coming out. By the time a good fifty shots had been taken, he prays that some of them should be good enough for him to post.

Applying warm water, he considers whether he should work on a secondary photo session, just with a different subject matter. Like, perhaps, he should do a fully on fusion animal? Still, he is waiting on the code, so he contains himself on reviewing the photos he'd taken. After selecting which he figured will work, he begins doing some browsing for said idea.

As he makes himself some noodles for dinner, Ryan is thinking of a Qilin or Kirin for the second, although he's trying to figure out how to press the button to take the picture. Which means, he might need to select something smaller to ensure he use the tiny remote he owns. There's Clouded Leopard and I think I got a pouch of Snow Owl...

That would mean a small gryphon or a simple winged cat. He muses upon reflecting on sight of the living room.

The rest of the day goes by, and he's got the Instant Water for the mixture of Instant Clouded Leopard and Instant Snow Owl. He makes use of more Instant Octopus to help mingle the bird scale like skin with the fur of the feline. Then fusion of feather and coat patterns. The skeleton gave him a bit of trouble given the difference of bone density between the two species, but he works on it with help from fantasy anatomy sites. He leaves it for tomorrow as he wants to get some sleep.

Morning comes and he gets the code, which he then uses right away to validate the account. Next up, he goes through the paid tiers, which does include created videos. Something he'll have to muse over at some point in the future, but for now, Ryan picks Five US Dollars as the lowest tier, given access to two of the photos he'd taken with the Ten US Dollars tier being the highest tier, granting access to all the photos. Once that's settled, he uploads the photos he thinks works and then selects which two will be allowed viewing for that lowest tier, one of the basic frontals and then the one with the fanged smile that he's crouching for.

The rest of the morning has him figuring out the right angles for the gryphon shoot. He uses a prop substitute of the roughly same size as the gryphon. Checking the sensitivity of the button, he rigs up something to ensure that the slightest weight will trigger the button.

Once lunch passes and he'd looked up easy advice for budding photographers, which he then employs concerning the living room arrangement, he then strips naked once he has everything set up and makes use of the Instant Water. Transformed, he goes on to take pictures of himself, aiming for nearly seventy before heading for the bathroom to transform back. And so, he spends the rest of the day looking through the photos and picking which he likes, slowly slimming down the number of photos until he's got about two dozen.

Satisfied, he then checks on his new account, there's a few visitors who did a single donation, got a look before unsubscribing while a few left comments before doing so. A few donated an additional five to upgrade a tier and there's a lot of positive comments on those photos. He's already getting discussed under the New Accounts section, of course, only those who'd paid can see the photos, but it's brought a few people to check over his bare as fucking bones profile.

He uploads the gryphon photos, selecting six this time for the lowest tier and the remainder to the highest tier. He also puts in the Upload Schedule every two weeks with two sets of photos. He doesn't promise any videos, in fact, he might need to invest in finding a studio to shoot at if he's going to try being serious about taking tasteful photos. The fact that he uploaded again causes a stir and he gets a good amount of money from the activity.

Upon the third day is when he redeems the collected money in Gift Master Card form, as he needed money to pay the movers. Sadly, he's yet to hear from anyone concerning getting hired, so, he's already looking for places he could set up a photo studio, he might even hire an illusionist to create interesting and suitable environments. Someone who's studied to ensure their illusions to be a bit more on the solid side so that they can be captured by modern day recording equipment.

Ryan also seems to have set himself up for two kinds of photos, one humanoid and one fully bestial. The next humanoid will likely be something a bit on the larger side, he's dithering between minotaur or centaur while he's pretty much set on a spin on a Chinese Qilin. Still got to figure out what I want for a Profile Photo as well.

/ Ten Years Later **

Reading over the E-Mail for the fifth time within the past thirty minutes, Ryan finds it hard to feel any emotion other than relief, relief he's been let go now that his company is now under new management. He's heard things about Jayden Roads, none of them flattering and if there's even a kennel of truth within the rumours, then he pities those remaining with the company.

End of the month, huh? That's... about less than three weeks from now. He muses as he checks the calendar on the computer's right bottom corner. Moving on to the next series of E-Mails, he see them but there's little within the next two that were for his job, no, they were acknowledgement of the fact that there's going to be changes going on within the company. Mentions that the letters were going to be done being sent out by the end of the tomorrow's workday.

There's no personal E-Mail addressing him in any fashion after those two, nope, it's just the typical inquiries about projects' progress. It takes him a few tries to type out replies to said inquires, he'd had to edit his answers without implying that news about his firing. It's a bit hard, given it's in the forethought of his mind since he got around to reading that E-Mail a second time.

He just knows that he'll be distracted until he gets around to telling someone about his coming being let go from this company. Not that Ryan fears for his bank account, not when it's not like he's married nor even dating anyone at this point. He still arranges for a pair of photo sessions for posting under his account Crafting_Chimaeras and receiving money for the various tiers.

Sure, he does pay an Illusionist for enchanting the rooms to look the way he envisions but it's not like they meet up face to face. He'd gone through five in that first year of him posting those photos under that account and then two in the second before getting into contact with this current Illusionist, the name on the business card hadn't changed since they started up their business relationship, Mystery ReFlex. He'd thought it a typo at first but, after knowing the person behind the name for over seven years, guesses that even if it was, they either can't alter the title due to that's just how they are known by or they had bought so many business cards with it that it would be a loss to get the name corrected.

Letting out a sigh as he sends the final reply to a different department's inquiry, Ryan decides now is as good a time to go get a refill on his drink. Closing things and getting his computer to go into Sleep, he gets up out of his chair with the intent to walk out of his assigned work area. It's as he's walking out that Gerald Jardon, the gossip of the building and someone who didn't have a valid reason to be on this floor.

"Ryan! How's things going? Got any interesting news?" Jardon asks as the other falls into step with him as he is on his way to the nearest Staff Kitchen.

"Interesting news? Is there something going on with the project that I haven't been told about?" He deflects, sure, he wants to mention his firing but not to Jardon, who mind just exaggerate anything he might say about it.

"About if you're still got a job next month." Jardon states with a clear roll of his eyes. Ryan has his reasons for being cold with him and even now, he rather not associates with the man nor with his 'best bud' Jack Nickles, who works in HR.

Recalling Nickles, he suspects that Jardon is here more to get confirmation then anything. It's clear that Jardon knows, not that Ryan is sure if any complains over the breach of personal information will likely amount to anything. He's sure that there's been a few official complaints filed before concerning Nickles lack of care over what comes out of his mouth when he's with Jardon. Nothing seems to come from it, well, perhaps the odd slap on the wrist.

True enough, Jardon can't seem to contain himself, saying, "Well... perhaps it'll come this afternoon." As they reach the elevator, they find Albert Minds and Vicky MacDonald waiting, they clearly quiet down before they reached them.

"So... Anyone got anything to share?" Jardon asks with a predatory grin as he looks at MacDonald, who looks away with Minds giving Jardon a scowling look. Not that Jardon seems to care about Minds.

"Aren't you on the wrong floor?" Minds pipes up just as the elevator arrives. The doors rattle open with MacDonald stepping before the doors.

"I'm just ensuring that people doing ok, given the announcements that got sent out." Jardon states with faux innocence. He doesn't spare him a look as he gets in after Minds, who after a few seconds of glaring at the smug looking Jardon enters.

"I'm sure you are so concerned." Bites Minds with oozing sarcasm upon saying the word so. "It's not like you've got anything to worry about, given your good buddy Nickles."

Jardon holds the doors open as they were closing, not really entering as Jardon seems content to study Minds before looking first at MacDonald and then at Ryan himself. "Well, at least there's pair who can support one another due to similar circumstances. Just be sure to keep out of storage closets."

The hands move out of the way of the doors, and they take time to close. MacDonald lets out a sigh while Minds gives him a pitying look. He remarks, "At least we'll be away before Jayden Roads really begins his reign within the company."

"Ah." Minds winces while MacDonald seems to startle a bit. "Wait, that's who's joining the company? Jayden Roads?"

"Yea, he is." Ryan confirms and it seems that MacDonald leans back in relief. "Oh gods, this is great! Sorry, Al, but, if he's the one who's taking over then I'm so glad I've been let go!" She says to Minds, the two work on the same project up until a year ago, when MacDonald got moved to his department.

"Jayden Roads... As in... That Jayden Roads? Mister I-Am-God-of-This-Company-Now Roads?" Minds asks and he nods. "I'm... putting in my resignation by the end of the day." Minds states in a matter-of-fact tone and he doesn't blame Minds, it's likely that the next round of firings will happen in three months, that is, if the man keeps to his usual course of action when being handed a company.

"Might run into trouble with that, given there's likely going to be a flood of resignations being sent when news circulates around about who's to be the next CEO." He remarks and Minds pulls out his cell phone, saying, "Right, might as well start it as soon as possible."

MacDonald sends him a smile that's sporting dry bemusement, which he shrugs. "So, you got the axe as well?" She asks and he sighs, leaning on the side of the elevator. "Yea, I did, not that I'm overly complaining when I saw whose name was written in as the future CEO."

"Hard to believe, you've been here for over nine years." MacDonald states and he shrugs. "Things change over time, it used to be a good place to work, for about two years, things just... started going downhill afterwards, when the company went public and got a Board of Investors."

"Only been here for four years and I thought things were going to get better when news that the current CEO is retiring." Minds remarks in a distracted manner. "I mean, what was the point of the survey we did four months back?"

The elevator comes to a stop and with a ding, the doors begin to rattle open. Ryan exits first with Minds following, all the while pressing the tiny keyboard of his cell phone. MacDonald is the last one out and it's clear that the first round of fires might number a bit more then Jayden Roads is known for, given the number of agitated employees milling about the five tables and about the counters.

Soft conversations being a background murmur as he makes his way to the fridge to grab one of the bottled waters that are typical for the company to supply. It's not long before the name of Jayden Roads spreads throughout the room and it seems like the mood shifts into something more lighthearted. It seems that few ever focus pass the news of their firing to see what else got released in that letter.

A few of those who'd come to support those who'd been fired are now following Minds idea and beginning to write out their resignation. A few people share articles to those uniformed about who Jayden Roads is and what his usual MO as a company's new CEO is, along with what kind of state the various companies end up as under the man's leadership.

This is going to be the man's eighth time as a company's CEO, the man left his previous post about ten months ago. "He really gets around the business world, huh?" He hears someone comment while a retirement speech is running near him.

As he finishes the bottle of water, he grabs another before leaving with the latest group leaving the Staff Kitchen. Moving out of the way for an incoming wave of employees as he decides to take the stairs instead of the elevator, after all, he could use the exercise.

/ First Day of Unemployed **

He wakes about ten minutes after when his alarm would have gone off. Letting out a soft sigh, he rolls to the side of his bed before sitting up, his legs over the edge of the bed. Realizing where the water bottle is, he leans back to snatch it from the other end table, pressing the button, he takes in a mouthful. He swishes it about within his mouth as he slowly swallows the water.

Getting up off the bed, he takes the bottle with him to the dresser. Placing it on top, he goes through the dresser drawers for something to wear. Once he's decent enough, he recalls picking up the bottle as he heads out of the room. Heading for the kitchen, where he refills the bottle with water from the fridge, he notices the road before his apartment, particularly at his car.

He's not sure what to do with himself today, yesterday had been his final day and there's also the lack of him needing to set up a photo session as that's happening next week. Which is how his game console gets noticed by him, which is next to the large flat screen tv. He can't recall the last time he's made use of it.

With toast eaten, he wanders over with a glass of apple juice. Putting it on the coffee table, he turns on the tv and the game console. And so, for the morning of his first day of being unemployed, he plays Rafts of Clouds III. Lunch rolls around and then passes, it's around two pm that he pauses the game to attend to bio needs.

The afternoon is more Rafts of Clouds III and he stops near eight pm, which is when he decides to watch some streaming show. The day is rather uneventful, and Ryan still finds it hard to know what to do with himself, but he's sure that he'll get use to this. For now, he'll wait before altering his photo sessions from a biweekly basis to a weekly one.

After all, he might decide to try and get a new job before the new month is over and done. Deciding not to rely upon his savings, investments, and money tiers from his account. Might also need to see if Mystery Reflex is able to modify their schedule to accommodate a weekly schedule. Ryan reflects as he turns off his tv and gets ready to have a shower.

/ Four Months Later **

With everything ready to go, he enters the rental pool. His body alters and he swims about, getting use to the changes as he waits for the signal to go off. The crimson light flows into a green one and thus, he tenses his body before exploding from the pool onto one of the few set pieces of the room.

Shaking his head, allowing his frill to open, the side first and then the top one. It's an odd sensation of moving things upon his head and sides, that lead all the way down to his shoulder and lower back. Flicking a more serpentine tail then fish first to the right and then to the left as he looks around.

Hoping that his acting is decent, after all, this is the first time he's done a live stream, never mind recording a video. Pulling himself more into the air while having his tail encircle under him, Ryan does his best to come across as relaxing as he begins to take deep breaths.

When another light flows into a green one, signalling it's been five minutes since he exited out of the pool, he takes one deep breath before opening his mouth. And a lowish note comes out and he holds that note for a few beats before he begins to have his voice slowly rise in note, getting use to the various notes. It had been tricky, training himself to recognized the various musical notes for this. It had taken three months of planning for this and he didn't really have a song in mind, deciding to just... wing it.

And as he finishes going over the musical scales, he takes a moment to take a refreshing breath before going beginning to sing out his emotions, feeling out which notes express his emotions at this moment, which are nervousness along with caution and as this continues to go on, he feels more comfortable and the notes, he hopes, reflects that.

As the signal that it's been nearly fifteen minutes of this segment, his notes begin to lower until he becomes silent. He makes it obvious that he's looking off at some far-off point that's where's the next signal light is. Uncoiling his tail as his body begins to lower down upon the fake rock, his frill slowly coming close to his body.

As the light changes into a green one, Ryan lets out a loud, angry screech before seemingly bolting into the pool.

As he swims around, his eyes keep looking at the signal light, waiting for it to turn red. When it does, he relaxes and moves to the surface. He checks each of the signal lights and finds they are red. Letting out a sigh, he lets himself fall back into the pool and spends a bit of time just enjoying floating about the pool's surface.

Feeling relieved that this live stream is over but also dreading the kind of comments in the chat. The thought of how badly he'd messed up concerning his singing along with his acting. Sure, he's posed for photos but he's always had a series of them to pick through for those he decided is best.

This live steam is raw and for all that he's done his best to prepare himself by creating a script of a sort. The signal lights were easier for him to see and had been set to various timers that were connected to the live stream. He's not sure he'll do another, after all, this whole thing turned out to be rather nerve wrecking.

And so, he gets out of the pool. Sliding over the tarp that's covering the floor, it's hardly the first time he's been legless, this being his eighth in fact. As he arrives at the pail of warm water, it had been rather hot when he poured the water into it, he curls up to ensure that majority of his body will get hit with the water.

For all that's he's prepared for the sudden change, he still almost ends up falling upon his butt. Getting something on, mostly just to cover his lower body, he begins to clean up the water that's pooling around where he's standing. Flickering on the switch to begin emptying the rental pool, he begins wiping down the rock prop that he'd been resting on for the stream.

As he collects the various lights, the three microphone he'd placed about the room, the motion sensor that's above the light he had placed in the pool, and the camera that had recorded it all. As he does so, he muses over the various animals he had used to create his version of a Siren. Most of the items were ones he'd rented and thus, he's careful about putting them back in the bamboo plastic tubs along with the thick packing cloths.

Due to the location of Jusenkyo, there's no large aquatic mammals like dolphin or whale, thus, the vocal cords he'd used were birds. There's no particular song bird he'd used. The three-point frill came from cobra. Given he was going to use cobra for the frill, didn't see the need to waste more of it so used it for the tail along with scales about the body plus thin pointy teeth. Colouring of the body and scales, he'd used the trusty octopus.

As he finishes up what he could, leaving the tarp and the rental pool alone as the owners will collect both. The fake rock was put in the closet, after he taken the stand apart. Checking through the various tubs, rechecking that everything is in the correct tubs, he then puts the lids on and using the combo locks to secure them for their owner.

And so, Ryan walks over to the laptop. Opening the lid, it wakes from the sleep mode and he sends the messages to the owner of the pool and the other equipment he'd used. With them sent, he ignores the Mail app to go to the site that he'd used to live stream.

He watches the recording, which is about twenty minutes long. Embarrassment is the primary feeling as Ryan watches it. Listening to his singing, he is a bit surprised at the pitching but assumes it might be due to using three microphones as they had been located at different distances. The point where the him on the video lets out a loud screech, he winces at the volume, he hadn't expected it to be so high pitched.

And with it coming to an end, Ryan looks at the various comments posted before going through chat history. There are comments over his choice of colouring along with design when it comes to his designing of the Siren form. Such things aren't anything new for him and likely this won't be the last comments he'll get about his design choices, although most are likely bitter about the lack of information concerning his method of creating such forms.

Even after so many years of him uploading photos and now a live stream, it seems that whoever was the one to upload that manual onto the internet hasn't seen fit to release it digitally. It baffles him at times as to why they would do so in the first place if they didn't wish to benefit from doing so by getting renown or monetary profit. He had entertained the idea of releasing the original along with his translation but didn't know if that would draw a series of lawsuits to his door or not.

It's an old matter that he refuses to dwell upon. He has backup copies of the original upon memory drives along with printed out in a binder. That includes his first translation along with his latest personal notes. He isn't sure if the owner of the manual and the uploader were one in the same, never mind if they might have the aptitude for magic.

As he rewinds the video, Ryan's mind is on something else. Wondering if he shouldn't have done another skit or perhaps just done a Q live stream instead. Either way, it won't reverse what he'd done today and he won't be going ahead with any other streams, at least, not without doing a few practice filming, like, five.

/ Eight Months Later **

The ring tune is from his second cell, which is a pay as you go one. The number is unknown, which isn't that surprising, given that the only number registered is for Mystery Reflex. Could it be another wrong number?

As he touches the correct icon that's on the face of the cell before selecting Speaker. "Hello?" Ryan fully puts down his controller. "This is Crafting Chimaeras."

"Hello, this is Mr. Liberte and I represent Zeed's Vocals." The man says and it takes him a full minute to recognize the name Zeed's Vocals, the lead singer's name is Hermonie Starks. The reason he is familiar with the name has to do with what happened three months back, that some overzealous fan/stalker had got upset over some overreaching offer that got rejected and thus the person went about placing a Curse upon the singer. The details of the Curse weren't released to the public and the news did fall to the waist side after two months.

"This is the man behind Crafting Chimeras I presume?" Mr. Liberte inquires after a period of silence as he mentally argues with himself over whether this is a prank or not. After all, he doesn't see why anyone in the music industry would want to get in contact with someone like him.

"Yes?" He then makes a throaty cough before speaking once more, "Yes, this is the account holder of Crafting Chimaeras." He can't find it in him to fully trust this whole situation.

"According to your account profile, you claim to be the one doing your own mixing for Instant Powders." Mr. Liberte states. "So, I would assume you are more than just the account holder."

"Ah, that is true." He admits, it's been a very long time since he had to deal with his profile information, given he pretty much kept it short and simple the first time around. "You are aware of how hard it is to believe that someone related to Zeed's Vocals would be interested in contacting someone who's does what I've been doing with the account."

"I can see how you might find this rather hard to believe." Mr. Liberte admits and then after a few seconds, the man inquires, "In order to get a hold of this number, we did seek out and speak with the person behind Mystery Reflex."

That explains where they got this number. Ryan admits to himself. "I see." From the few times they spoke with one another, Mystery Reflex had sounded to be a woman but he couldn't be sure, given the other's job, thus it's not that hard to imagine to them using misdirection to get misgendered to protect their identity.

"I still find this to be... hard to swallow as it were, that you would seek to speak with me, given that there's plenty of... more impressive talents in the world." He states, still not sure what makes him someone they'd want to reach out to. Heck, I'd understand them wanting Mystery Reflex's input on magic then myself.

"We have spoken with various experts from the various branches of the occult study." Mr. Liberte agrees. "All the results of the studies and attempts didn't work out."

The dead way that was spoken, causes him to wonder over the results had been. "It seems as though I'm missing a key bit of information." He tells the man on the other side of the phone call.

"We take it that you are not willing to share your method of mixing Instant Powders? For any price?" Mr. Liberte asks.

"To be honestly, I don't own the hard copy of the method nor do I know how to get a hold of the one with it." He admits. "It was by chance that I download it before it was deleted for whatever reason the uploader had to remove it."

"And you don't recall the handle of the uploader... Nor the country of origin, yes, I can see why you would be cautious." Mr. Liberte sounds thoughtful and he admits that's true, given his previous studies along with what his old job had been, magical legality is something he's wary of and isn't sure he wants to spend the money to figure out where he stands, legally, when it comes to possessing the magical text that he is sure falls under Alchemy given the subject that the text addresses.

"It might be best for you to get into contact with a lawyer on your end." The implication is that they seem to be incline to do the same. Which Ryan couldn't help but sigh at the fact that this issue is likely going to be troublesome.

"Is this number temporary?" He asks after thinking about it for a few minutes. "This number will be valid for the next four months."

"I see. Ok, so I'll make an appointment and after having the meeting, I'll phone this number concerning my options to render aid viva said method." Soon enough, their farewells to one another are given and then he pulls the cell away, the other party is the one who put it an end to the call.

"Great... Just... Great." He murmurs as he swipes the app away. Putting the cell down, he rubs his face for a bit.

/ Three Weeks Later **

He'd been nervous, as he had decided to assume his profile appear for this whole thing. Which involves him deciding to travel to the airport viva bus but few people really seem incline to treat him different. Then a local wearing an illusion gets on the bus and he's reminded that, yea, it's not that unusual to see someone looking so fanciful as his current appearance. With that reminder, Ryan had relaxed and feels like a weight had been lifted from himself.

The trip is uneventful, then again, given the plane is a private one, it was more than likely was always going to be. There hadn't been much for his lawyer and himself to discuss, a mere review seemed to be in order. Once done, they were left to their own devices for the rest of the trip.

Arriving at Glacier Park International Airport, it's some miles from their actual destination, which is Whitefish. Even now, Whitefish remains to be a small city within Montana, it's still a tourist hub. As they enter the airport building proper, they are greeted with Mr. Liberte along with a pair of private security personal. Ms. Welder is the one to do most of the talking when the polite greetings are done, leaving the lawyers to converse, Ryan takes in the airport's hustle and bustle.

With what chit chat comes to an end, they head to retrieve their luggage. Following Mr. Liberte to a trio of cars, his lawyer and himself are directed to the middle car while Mr. Liberte heads for the final car with the pair of security personal split between the two. Once within the car and put the seat belts on, he wonders if the security detail is a little overboard, after all, they have the caster in custody, right?

"You know that you might encounter warm water during this trip?" Ms. Welder inquires and he inclines his head. "You don't seem to have a flask on your person." She gently points out and he blinks before realizing what she's implying.

"My method means that there's a special condition for my reversal." He explains. "It's... something that could be exploited."

The expression of Ms. Welder seems to get the dawning realization at what he's implying. There's nothing more said between them and he's glad he left the amulet back home. After all, he doubts it would work while he's in this form, plus, he already knew, the amulet isn't needed to use the custom Instant Water, it just keeps the form from reversing before the wearer wishes for the transformation to be reversed.

/ The Next Morning **

He's sitting across from Ms. Starks while their respective lawyers discuss the contract that would also have an NDA if this fails. Which makes sense, given his position as a popular media figure in certain circles and Hermione Starks' clear presence in the music industry. The details of the curse is the reason for the NDA portion of this contract, which likely could be used against her by her more extreme fans.

They've arrived at eight thirty am and got into meeting with the musician at nine am. The high collar covers her neck while there's what appears to be fur sticking out from the long sleeve, covering a small portion of her hand. The pair of glasses upon her face are likely enchanted to hide something to do with her eyes.

He notices that they've been at it for nearly forty minutes and Ryan feels like a lump of rock throughout this whole conversation. It causes him to wonder why they didn't already have a general contract for this situation, given it's been almost nine months since the curse was put on Ms. Starks.

Mr. Liberte glances at his client during a longer period of silence. "Perhaps a break is in order." He suggests and Ms. Welder agrees after glancing at him. "Acceptable."

As the pair of lawyers get up, he hurries to do the same while Ms. Starks does so slowly and with dignity. The two pairs of them do leave the room and then take off in different directions once they come arrive at a fork in the hall, with them heading for the front while the musician and her agent head off, likely to the restaurant. His lawyer, Ms. Welder, leads them outside viva the front doors.

"Is it going well?" He asks, feeling a bit awkward over the silence after nearly a minute of them stopping near a bench. His lawyer gives him a glance before sighing.

Looking away, she seems to be thinking over something. "Well, it seems that they don't expect anything to come from your... technique." Ms. Welder states slowly.

"Do you think it could solve this problem?" Ryan asks after a few seconds of considering what she said. He's no expert after all, he pretty much stopped looking into the subject or products besides those involving Instant Powders, which hasn't really seen much development in decades.

"Well... from what I've gathered through my contacts... Nobody has found an Alchemy technique that could affect Instant Powders." Ryan nods, after all, this technique involves the appearance of a Homunculus, which does fall under Alchemy as creating one, while illegal in most parts of the world, wouldn't be something anyone would think could do more than alter the appearance of Homunculus.

"It must be a rare technique." Ms. Welder muses. "Which branch of Alchemy does it use? I don't think I've asked that in our previous conversations."

"Branch? Huh, I... To be honest, I can't say as it's all very confusing as I can't seem to get what they mean by branches..." He admits. "I mean, Decomposing is a branch or is it a process? Never mind how it's been set up in various shows, I mean, there was how many Japanese anime and manga with that as a premise back in the Twenty-First Century? Even in the late Twentieth Century..."

"It's rather confusing and branch is more of a modern term for what subject an Alchemist is focus on." Ms. Welder remarks. "Metal transmutation is a classic 'branch' of Alchemy along with creating life, which is what Homunculus fall under."

"I do seem to recall seeing a picture of a tiny green lamb in a school text once." Ryan muses. "As for the technique, it might fall under the subject of transmutation, given how it alters the body from one form to another, even if the medium is Instant Powders."

"And yet, that's not the purpose of Alchemy's transmutation." Ms. Welder remarks and he nods before going on to say, "Yea, but at the same time, what horror pictures I've seen of Homunculus."

There's not much to discuss concerning the subject of Homunculi and the subject changes into repeating previously covered points. Reminders of their strategy when it comes to negotiations and their own counter conditions. By the time the break hour comes to an end, they were each upon their respective phones.

/ Three Days Later **

As he waits for the aid to open the package up, Ryan is doing his best to keep from fidgeting with his various tools that's waiting upon a silk napkin after having been thoroughly cleaned by hand by himself under the supervision of the head chief. The pan had been a bit harder to clean, given they wanted him to get the pan out of the clay block he'd baked it in when this all started.

They couldn't get it out and so, he just wiped it down after it's been reported to Mr. Liberte, who came to give it a look before agreeing that a simple wipe should work. True, there was a bit of dubious glances at the fused pan block but the man did leave him to the work with the head chief of the restaurant, who's kitchen sinks he's using to do so. The woman, one Mrs Gunn, is the one who carried the tray of drying tools plus the pan block into said room before she sets them upon the silk napkin that was upon the table.

There are no cameras pointed his way, as agreed, so he'll be able to work his 'magic' without worrying anyone would attempt to mimic it. If it works in breaking the Curse, then he will likely find himself getting recorded viva this impromptu stream, which is going to be a Live Stream. Like I need the pressure and why? Why did we agree to them streaming this Live?

"Here." Ms. Welder approaches with a pitcher of water that's been finish getting scrutinized by the three magic users to ensure that the pitch and the water haven't been tampered with before being given to him. "Thanks." He says as he pours the water into the pan block.

With that, he sets it to the side while ignoring the feeling of the eyes upon him. Just because he's not getting recorded didn't mean that there weren't going to be people watching him go through with his technique. It's a unique experience, one he doesn't wish to replicate, even though he's yet to perform his agreed upon part of this whole thing.

The man seems to review the list of which Instant Powders to put upon the tray, as if not sure if he seriously needs what's listed. Which is kind of fair, given that octopus isn't a popular Instant Powder and yet, it's something of a base Instant Powder when it comes to skin colour and texture. It's a good bridge when it comes to fusing different skin/fur/feather/hide/scales of species together.

Other than the form being neither man or woman, he's given freedom when it comes to it. The primary requirement of being neither gender isn't alien to Ryan, after all, his custom forms are generally genderless. Which had left him figuring out the rest as there's little to go from there but he also refuses to just copout and go with an Elf or something that's too like a human in appearance. He also wishes to ensure that the voice will sound spectacular, given Ms. Starks is likely going to be asked to sing for those watching.

Soon the Instant Powders and brought over along with small bowls. Each of the bowls are silver, something to do with magical poison reveal. He assumes. The packets are unopen as he checks them, having check a third time, he singles out the woman one and opens it, pouring the Instant Powder right into the pan block. As he fills his second silver bowl with water, there's a slight hiss and Ryan feels someone at his back, looking over his shoulder.

A glance reveals that it's one of the three magic users and looking down at the pan block, doesn't see anything unusual. "Please don't stand at my back. You can stand to the side but I rather not have you directly behind me." He says as politely as he could while the breaded guy grunts after a few seconds, stepping to his left while the other two seem to have come near the table viva his right, their own eyes upon the image of a woman that's near the pan block.

Taking a slight breath, he fills two more of the silver bowls before going through the packets once more. With the right Instant Powder, he needs for the next step, he opens it a touch before putting it in the least filled silver bowl. Setting the open packet in one of the unfilled silver bowls to keep the contents from coming out, he reaches for the right magical tool from the silk napkin.

The words come out casually as he gently adds the opposite gender water near the crouch area. The internal display regarding the right parts shrinks until they are gone. The muscles also change to erase the usual opening that women have down there. The image flips through the various layers of a body, the skeleton, muscles, blood vessels, organs, and skin.

There's no more water in the silver bowl, so he sets it to the side, doing his best to ignore the exchange of looks from those that are watching him. Pulling one of the clean waters, he begins to go through the packets before settling upon one of the birds. Doing his best to ignore the magic users about the table along with the aid who'd opened the package, he alters the lungs, throat, and larynx using the same magical tool plus the water. Then, he sets down said magical tool for the one meant to enlarge what has been shrunk due to the size of the bird he had used.

Slowly, he works through the packets, pitcher of water, and the silver bowls. Someone does take the used ones to clean before returning them as he works on combining feathers and scales. With them situated in the locations he thinks works, goes for the Instant Octopus and begins to alter the bare skin into what he's decided would be the basic colour. Then he begins on evening the edges about the two areas, making a boarding transitioning area.

Feathers and transforming a few into down to simulate hair, scales being used to come across as gemstones that's been embedded into the skin, which had him using a pair of different magical tools. Pitching the skin in the same location as this one prominent scar that's upon Ms. Starks' back, in doing so it gives an illusion of a scar tissue. Sure, the scar likely won't be noticed, but he thought it suited giving the illusion of character, that this form has been lived in. The ears change not just shape but location, which means he alters the ear channel, which alters the skull and the brain within to accommodate the changes in location.

It takes a few minutes to slowly alter the skull which alters the face. Sure, he goes back to make adjustments but with the head a bit more... non-human in dimension, which mean has him working on the teeth next, Ryan considers making them all fangs or going a bit flatter than he generally prefers. Given he's going to be adding antlers, he could go that route, hoping to have the canines popping out without needing to go for a predator's teeth.

The are tiny antlers buds that he arranges like one would reptilian spines or spikes, with them starting along the forehead and stopping just after the ears, which is among the mess of down and feathers. Pouring more Instant Octopus, he begins to alter the skin covering the antler buds. Then he studies as he wonders if he shouldn't do more but decides that the colour is popping rather well and in the pattern that looks like it's been painted on.

With the remainder of this dose of water, he alters the colour of the down to an off white from its messy mixture of the feather colours. The antler buds and feathers are a good contrast to what he just did.

Next, he considers the lower body, which is still human, well, besides the colouring of the skin. Studying the toe nails, he checks the finger nails and hums, since he still has some Instant Deer, he using it to blacken the two sets of nails.

Then, he begins to add more water into the bowl and then a bit more Instant Deer as he decides to go a digitigrade with four thick toes.

Altering the potions of the bones of the leg plus feet and lastly the pelvis, adding Instant Deer when he thinks fusion of some bones or altering the shape would serve it well. As he finishes with the shape of the toes and legs, he moves onto something else. Infusing the leg hair with Instant Deer help thicken and provide a uniform appearance, which includes colour, but he knows how to fix that. Studying the feathers upon the head as he mixes up more Instant Octopus to begin altering the colouring of the fur that's below what's the 'knee' of the legs to the toes. It's tricky but it being a bit more earthy in tone compared to the feathers wasn't that bad of a contrast.

"Lunch!" And he jerks his head to look at the aid who just entered with a trolly that's got dishes upon them. It appears that there's a few of them waiting to be rolled into the room.

His gaze goes to the clock that's upon the wall and realizes that the morning has flown by. And so, he studies what he has created with Instant Powders and finds it rather decent, given it had been down without any real planning beforehand. I could have added scales about the thigh plus doing some 'painting' on them but I doubt anyone is going to be focusing upon her legs.

Looking about the room, those that had been in the room clearly wondering where the time went as they had clearly been watching him work his 'magic' with the pan block, magical tools, and Instant Powders. The three magic users seem to watch to reach out and touch something, likely his magical tools but reframe from doing so. Taking a step back, he notices a few things about his condition and so, excuses himself to hurry off to deal with more urgent one.

Upon returning, there's more people in the room, which include Mr. Liberte and Ms. Starks. Those who were new additions within the room seem to keep glancing at the image that's featured over the pan block. What conversations that are going on circle around what he'd done and their various reactions that seem to range from awe to fake begrudging respect or trying to dismiss the idea that will look as advertised. Collecting a plate, he joins Ms. Welder, who seems to be deep in thought as she doesn't react much to his presence.

It's likely understandable, after all, the three magic users also seem deep in their own thoughts, although their gaze would seem to be pulled towards the pan block. After a few bites, he drinks from his soda can once he opens it. As he finishes, he feels a bit tired but that's to be expected, given how focus he'd been since little after seven am until eleven fortyish. He'd been standing before that table for near five whole hours, that's including him waiting for the packets and bowls to be placed upon the table so he can start.

"You truly make Chimaeras, don't you?" Ms. Welder muses and it takes him a second to realize she's addressing him, that she's aware of his presence next to her. "Well, yea, I ultimately do. Given I'm using more than two Instant Powders and that's what a Chimaera is, a combo of more than two animals or beings."

Ryan knows that very few people ever believed him when he lists the Instant Powders he's used on various form when it uploads the photos. Given how the usual traits are not evident, people tend to take that as him lying. He suspects that the people who just watched him work, they likely changed their minds and, depending on their own NDAs, might post this witnessed event on the various forums and various sites.

As the food gets finished, the conversations change tone as it seems people seem that this will break the Curse. Ryan finds it hard to try stay pessimistic over whether it'll work but, admits that, well, it just might work? After all, having looked up the subject of altering looks of Homunculi as it kept bugging him, he admits that nobody likely expects such failed techniques could work to design an Instant Form.

As the various dirty plates get collected, Ryan watches as Ms. Starks and Mr. Liberte approach the table with one of the aids that hadn't been within the room during the morning. The bearded magic user approaches the pair, likely to get a few words in, well, he assumes that's why he's approaching the pair. A scanning of the room, he notices that the woman sporting dyed white with red tips is on her phone near the fire exit while the other man, who's got a tribal tattoo of black and red above his left eyebrow is center of a group of people listening to whatever story he is telling, he's assuming given the gestures of the hand and the changes in how the man holds himself.

With ten minutes to one pm is when someone claps their hands to get the rooms attention. Ryan lowers his phone after pausing the game he'd been playing to pay attention to what's being said, which is likely in relations with the Live Stream, which is to happen in a few minutes. It's mostly just reminding them to not walk before the various cameras along with how to activate spell upon the various wooden bracelets that will ensure any noise they make will be lowered by a certain degree, not that he has one nor is it likely he's going to be given one as he's not expected to be moving about a heck of a lot now that his job with the Instant Water is done.

As for him making an appearance on the Live Stream, it's not certain as there's little planned besides the short Q and the very public splashing with the Instant Water, which should cause a transformation. If everything goes well, Ms. Starks will sing one of her older songs before going on to sing a few requests from the chat. The Curse activates whenever she sung or had experienced her usual monthly visitor. The details of the Curse weren't given to him, just simple points, namely, singing causes the Curse to 'grow' and even if she were to quit, it wouldn't stop the advancement of the Curse, something about it being locked upon her gender, which is where they had insisted that he make use of both genders when creating the Instant Form.

Soon, tables and chairs are being moved either out or to the wall. Chairs being stackable makes that easy while the tables are just pushed to the side, with a few being flipped over before settling upon another table. A few potted plants and such get placed where the padded chairs are to give it a homely feel. The space is getting a few things moved around as the camera people give suggestions along with them typing away at their respective laptops.

The breaded magic user is the one who pours the Instant Water from the pan block to a pail. The other two keep to the man's side and he approaches the table to begin putting his belongs away, after giving them a wipe with the silk napkin. Putting the items into the traveling tub as people are settling upon the chairs. With a quick snap, the lid is clipped into place. The silver bowls plus the open packets are left upon the table as he hauls the tub to the door where Ms. Welder is standing, taking a few steps away, the magical lawyer sets up the ward to ensure that the tub is secure and protected from thief and tampering physically or magically. Or is the magic used was on a greater scale that Ms. Welder will be alerted to the tampering with the tub.

The speakers that were set up, play a soothing background music as the Live Stream goes Online. The previously bulky cloths worn by Hermonie Starks have been shed to a simple two-piece bathing suit with a trendy trench coat with short sleeves gives a good look at what kind of changes the Curse had cause to the singer's body. Uneven portions of the singer's body sport fur of varying lengths with a collar of fur about the location of the larynx. Eyes looks just as uneven with one sporting a more human looking one with the eye colour being the hint of something being wrong while the other is more like that of an animal, only sporting her original eye colour.

It's clear that the Curse was meant to be cruel just by looking at how the changes were happening to Hermonie Starks' body and he suspects that the unseen changes likely had to do with her mind. He wonders about how the other members of Zeed's Vocals are dealing with this series of events. If any of them feel frustrated at the fact that they couldn't do anything to aid Hermonie Starks with this Curse.

He doesn't fully pay any attention to the Q as he can listen to it later. A few people come into the room while others walk out. Ryan can only guess as to what business those people had within the room, given that this isn't a staff room nor was there much for people within the room besides the Live Stream and anything related to it, there's a slight shine to around the trio of magic users that means that there's a shield over the three, likely to ensure the safety of the pail holding the Instant Water. That there's another pail of water not that far from the Q session only makes sense, given that they would need warm water to reverse the effects of his modified Instant Water.

A touch over twenty minutes and it's then that they call an end to the Q for deploying the Cure to the Curse for all to witness. Which is the signal for the breaded man to approach with the pail, which is handed to a standing Hermonie Starks who is sure to thank him loud enough for the cameras and microphones to catch. She then ensures she's facing the cameras with the pain first at her chest and then, she dumps the Instant Water upon herself and she is transforms into much fleshier version of the illusion that had been hovering over the pan block.

"As you can see, I have been transformed! Now then," Hermonie Starks is clearly doing her best to get use to her new voice as she does talk for a bit, there's a few throaty grunts throughout along with the voice moving through different pitches, likely the musical scale, at least, he assumes some of them were. She even moves carefully upon her altered legs but she seems to getting use to it within a few minutes but doesn't feel comfortable siting back down upon reaching the chair. Which is likely a good idea, given the digitigrade nature of the lower body and how unfamiliar she is with dealing with anatomy.

"Let's begin, shall we? I think it's time to do what you are all hoping for, right? A performance from yours truly, right?" Hermonie Starks states and he assumes that the chat is in total agreement, and thus, she lets loose a musical note, not unlike what he had released back in his own Live Stream.

It, of course, changes but the reaction of the pure note is clear as day upon those who's part of getting recorded viva the Live Stream. The lyrics are one of the songs that Hermonie Starks had recorded on a solo video. The lead singer of Zeed's Vocals begins to put her whole body into the performance, her movements are quick to become confident, after all, the basic bone structure is still human like. The song, of course, has its unusual highs but Hermonie Starks is a professional and makes the best of those odd pitches.

The next song is currently in the process of being voted upon which they stretch on to a good three minutes, with Hermonie Starks doing a few quotes for the audience to keep them entertained. He notices that she's clearly using the silly voices to get a better idea how quickly she can switch pitches along with what her new vocal range is. He does get a few glances from Hermonie Starks before she goes on to sing the next song, which she is sure to use her new range to give an unusual performance for the song.

Third song has Hermonie Starks a touch more comfortable with her new larynx along with lung capacity. It's clear by the fifth song, she, and the audience, want a musical challenge to really put this Instant Form for a decent test. Which has some rather odd song that's opera like that's now being played, it's from some old nineteen-nineties movie called Fifth Element. It seems that it's enough of a challenge for Hermonie Starks given the almost predatory smile, that includes showing off her teeth, which does indeed cause the canines to pop.

A few seconds and the background of the song begins. It's a clear flat attempt at singing the song but, in his humble opinion, she seems to enjoy her attempt, for all that she likely hadn't gotten the beats correct among what other flaws there most likely are. "Well, I hope that proves that is my first-time hearing and trying to sing that song!" Hermonie Starks addresses the cameral. "It's an interesting one, I think I'll have to give it another go, but not now."

"So... I know a great many of you have plenty of questions regarding this fantastical Instant Form!" Hermonie Starks remarks and he straightens up while perking up from where he's leaning upon a counter. He rather hopes she isn't going to beckon him over, for all that his actual identity is obscured with his current looks, he isn't all that sure he wishes to be seen next to a member of Zeed's Vocals, never mind with the one who's made the news due to some fan/stalker going so far as to Curse her in a cruel manner.

He rather not attract that kind of attention, thank you very much! And yet, he is pulled forward, likely due to a spell. As the spell has him staggering as it lets him go, Ryan notices how the cameras use their limited movement to include him as Hermonie Starks moves forward, the steps confident.

"You all brought him to my attention with that Siren video." Hermonie Starks grips a wrist of his left arm. "So, it's my pleasure to introduce Crafting Chimaeras! He's the one who designed this Instant Form!"

He's pulled towards the set, given that most of those who'd been seating there for the Q session had lingered for the songs. Now though, they had slipped off the screen. He smiles for the cameras but can only guess how clearly out of his depth he is as he allows himself to be move closer to the various chairs, all the while the cameras do follow them.

"Glad you approve my work." Ryan manages to say in a level enough tone. "Hopefully your viewers and fans are enjoying the Stream."

"I'm sure when this is over, you'll be able to see the many positive comments about your work!" Chirps Hermonie Starks. "I must admit, when I saw your Siren video, I hadn't thought you were doing it as raw. The vocal range isn't one that many thought to be possible for anyone could get without a spell or an enchantment."

"A lot of people overlook the number of Drowned Birds among the number of pools, which do include various native song birds of China." Glad it's just a Q session going on between them. "Of course, there's plenty of much more impressive forms among the Drowned Pools..."

"You rat bastard! You think you can just get out of this scot-free?!" Some guy is rushing forward with a pail that seems a bit familiar. "Well, enjoy for fifteen minutes of FAME, because everyone will know your ugly mug from here on out!" With that, the contents of the pail are sent flying towards the pair.

Hermonie Starks is shielded rather quickly and thus the warm water falls without touching her. As for himself, Ryan gets hit in the near side that's close to where the guy is. Of course, nothing happens as he plucks at the wet spot of his shirt. "Rude, man, rude." He states as he holds the spot of the shirt away from his body.

Looking annoyed at the guy, who's in the process of falling due to a spell, Ryan sighs. "Well, that was..." It's then that he notices the clear gobsmacked looks upon those around him, which includes the woman that's not far from him. "Well, I did say I came prepared for an instance like this, didn't I?" He defends himself after looking about the room.

"I think this is a good point to end this particular Stream." Hermonie Starks states upon finally gaining control over herself. The pair of magic users are now approaching the fallen man, the woman pulling out pair of handcuffs.

Soon enough, the man's arms are pulled backwards as the handcuffs snap around. He assumes that the camera is over and Mr. Liberte seemingly teleporting next to Ms. Starks' side. It's clear that she's not holding up as well as she had been when the cameras were on. With there being nothing, he could do, Ryan steps away, heading for where Ms. Welder is, who seems to have recovered from the incident with the warm water tossing lunatic. "Well prepared indeed." The magical lawyer states with a slight head shake as she looks at him up and down.

"Didn't I tell you? I'm sure I mentioned that it has lock of a sort." Ryan inquires, he's sure it came up at some point on during their conversations. "We were... traveling? Maybe in the car? Or the plane?"

It takes a bit of thinking before the woman to slowly nod. "Ah, I seem to recall something coming up but I thought it was a type of personal shielding... But your words... Huh..." Ms. Welder lets out a sigh.

He is a bit curious about what she thought he meant by special condition; Ryan is sure he used that kind of wording. Although he does now have to consider that the pail that had been holding the warm water might have other spells besides one to kept, he water above a certain temperature upon either the pail or the water itself. Yet, it seems that it's not something he finds himself overly concerned with as a great many important dressed people are making their respective appearances.

As Ms. Welder turns sharply towards the door, someone has already reacted as this man who'd attempted to make off with his tub is falling to the floor due to a spell. "Looks like we caught an accomplice." The man is quickly handcuffed and Ms. Welder goes to ensure his tub isn't going to be taken as evidence, although how she'll make that happen, he's a touch curious to know.

Still, Ryan just finds this whole thing to be draining upon him. He's hopeful that things will be easily sorted out and he can head back to his apartment. Where he's not having to deal with lunatic fans/stalkers and whatever schemes they have concerning the people around their idol/target.

/ A Year Later **

Sitting in Ms. Welder's office, Ryan looks over the document. It's been a trying year for them both, as his technique has come to the forefront of the global stage. After all, it wasn't just due to what he's created when it comes to using Instant Powders but also the many tests that followed that infamous Live Stream splashing as it seems that warm water and the pail that held it had some serious enchantments and spells upon them in regards to unlocking Instant Powder locks, particularly given the water had been gathered in an ancient artifact pot that was meant to unlock another ancient artifact's ability to lock a Jusenkyo Curse.

It's the first time he's heard of the pair of artifacts, the Pail of Preservation and the Pot of Liberation. Even now, the full details of what they'd been used for along with how they've been tested weren't disclosed to either Ms. Welder or he himself. And yea, his magical tools had under gone examination under Ms. Welder and his own supervision, with them clearly passing the various examinations before being given back to his possession, with plenty of grumbling and weak protests, once he admitted he could just create another set, which includes recreating his clay block engulfing a ginger bread man cake pan.

That he'd been tested for nearly two weeks before being allowed to head home still miffs him to this day. Which included medical ones alongside magical ones. Thankfully, he'd been able to notify his followers viva the site about his lack of photographing for the unseeable future.

He'd been sparse when it comes to updating his followers even when he returned home and began uploading photos of himself once more. Ryan had also been sure to convey his thanks to Mystery Reflex for their help with finding such a competent and professional magical lawyer such as Ms. Welder. After all, she would have easily dropped him once Mr. Liberte agreed he'd completed his end of the bargain and thus could have left him to find others to take up his case when it came to dealing with the global community and it's inquiring over the technique he has been using along with pressuring him into signing some kind of guilty plea, which he is sure is illegal, not that they got around to completing that particular statement upon Ms. Welder entering the room, stating that she's his legal advisor.

"Hard to believe it's almost over..." Ryan sighs as he goes over the document, shamelessly using his phone to look up legal jargon or term of phrase. This document is pretty much ensuring he couldn't get into any legal trouble along with pardoning any perceived legal crimes he'd unknowingly done during his use of said technique in the past while also him receiving a license from here on concerning the method, even if it's one that covers whatever field of magic he'd been using.

The other party that's representing said global community in regards to magical law and governance all sport varying degrees of impatience annoyance to plain boredom. They number five along with four save one of them being magic users. Ryan finds it within himself to not feel all that threaten by them, not after everything that's happened in the pass year.

As he finishes up save for the last signature, Ryan hands it over to Ms. Welder for her to put it under the last number of tests to ensure that there's no hidden clauses upon the document. Once it passes, Ms. Welder passes the document over for them to look over before signing or initialing that they witness that he has signed it under their respective supervision with them doing the same when it comes to the final signature. Each of the four put the almost completed document through their own tests before handing it back to Ms. Welder.

She goes over it before handing it over to him for the final signature. Which he does, at which point he passes it to the non-magic user. The woman takes out some wax plus a metal signet ring, putting the crimson wax next to his signature before placing the signet ring. Wax melts under the ring before the woman pulls the rest of the wax away before lifting the signet ring. The document's pages flare a crimson that's the same shade as the wax.

The document gets passed to one of the four magic users once the wax and ring are put away. Each put their signature down before including a bloody thumb print that was brought about viva a silver pin to prick an index finger to cover said thumb with their own blood. The pin prick is healed with an enchanted napkin. The final signature is Ms. Welder, who does the same as the four magic users.

Within seconds, prepared blanked papers plus bottles of ink float in the air as copies are made of said document before the original is placed into a secure glass and silver tube that's enchanted and warded. The non-magic user takes possession of said tube containing the original document while six copies are handed out to the four magic users, Ms. Welder, and himself, the remaining six copies are taken by the official to be filed with certain departments right away and with a single one to be used as a reference along with it being used to create more copies or translated into different languages, with those copies being of either digital or physical copies.

As the copies were being created viva magic, Ryan has his phone out and sends the documents to not just the five before him but also to various authorises, be they magical institutions or government departments. It's the original pdf along with his English translation of that old Germanic that it was written in. Minutes later, the pair of pdfs is done getting uploaded.

"This? You were using THIS?" The man with slight graying hair and bread exclaims as the man had hurriedly skipped through a portion of it. "This is... it's a failure! Just like all that's like its type!"

"You are familiar with it?" Ms. Welder inquires while the others also look at said man. "Failure? It clearly isn't, given how much evidence we have that it is successful!" Remarks one of the other magic users.

"It's one of those that are meant to alter a Homunculus' appearance. It's hard to say if it was before the attempt at bring it to life or afterwards." Graying bread man states.

"I can't fully recall my reason for trying it but I figured the appearance portion was worth trying when it comes to creating an Instant Form." Ryan states with a slight shrug of his shoulders. "The amulet that it suggests creating isn't needed for the Instant Water to work, just if you want to defy the warm water reversal by holding it while transforming with the Instant Water and holding it when you are exposing yourself to warm water when you want to transform back."

"Ah, might we examine the amulet you created?" Asks one of others that have been silent and rather bored. Pulling out a case that he had put it in, Ryan hands it over.

As the lid comes off and it reveals the amulet that he created back when he was in his final year at high school. The crystal within the clay continues to give off its usual glow that it's been doing so since he first splashed himself. It's taken out by the person, who then turns it this way and that, taking in the size of it along with the weight.

There's a hum and Ryan watches as the person preforms a few spells upon the amulet with various etheral threads connecting himself and the amulet. He's not sure what it means but from the expressions upon those magic users, there's something going on with the amulet. He notices Ms. Welder sighing every so slightly, which means that there's something they'll have to talk about as the spell or spells come to an end.

The amulet it put back into the case with the cover getting put on. It's handed back while the other magic users seem to be deep in thought. "It's hard to say if it's due to him having crafted it right or not." Remarks graying bread man.

"Well, that can be something to discuss at a later date." Ms. Welder states. "For now, I think it's best for people to review what's been given and to explore this new avenue of testing in regards to this text along with its sibling failed technique."

"Indeed." The woman who's the only non-magic user among the five. "For now, what kind of license is it that needs to be issued in regards to Mr. Hammett?"

"Alchemy." Admits the man who's familiar with the text. "After all, this text and its siblings have always been regarded as failures, so there's no broken laws that need to be pardoned."

Within minutes, the woman fills out said license and Ryan signs it before them all. Once done, he folds it up and pockets it. "I guess I'll be hearing from you at a later date concerning the amulet?" He inquires and there's a few grunts of agreement with a dash of nods as they get up from their chairs.

It's not long before the five leave, polite farewells exchanged, it's soon just the pair of them. "So...?" He isn't sure if she'll tease him to get him to ask in a full sentence.

"Well, it explains your... youthful looks and it could mean you are rather hard to subject to being Cursed." Ms. Welder states as she finishes pulling out some bottle that sports a rum label upon it. "And it's rather interesting that you managed to get it to work, then again, I guess nobody ever thought to use it for something other than what it was developed for."

"And yet, anyone can see how you'd come to the conclusion you came to, given your lack of background in magic." Ms. Welder remarks. "I think a lot of magical techniques will be reevaluated and will likely try to apply them out of the box as it were." Then she uncaps the rum and pours herself a shot glass while he skims through his copy of documents.

"Thanks for all your help." Ryan says to Ms. Welder. "I'm not sure I'd have come out of this as well as I have."

"Well, I must admit, you did provide me with an interesting challenge. I don't think I could have gotten so much free publicity if not for Cl... Mystery Reflex sending you, my way." Ms. Welder, whose first name is Deandra, states with a clear satisfied smile.

They do chat for a bit, mostly about the likely time line for when he could expect getting in contact by any of the four magic users or by anyone, they associate with and are interested in the amulet's influence upon Ryan himself.

After a short period of silence after their chit chat, they give their farewells and Ryan leaves the office. Yea, he approaches the secretary and pays the bill. Once it's paid, he leaves the office and heads back to his apartment viva his one passenger car.

He's not sure how long it'll take for the original pdf and his English translation to find their way onto the internet, but he's sure it won't be today. Oh yea, I should post an update about the end of this issue. I'm sure people will be glad to know that it's all cleared up and I'll be uploading photos once more.

Ending it Here!

Chapter Guide:

Crafting_Chimaeras

Ryan Hammett – elder brother of Michael Hammett

Mystery Reflex – Illusionist who can have their illusions be filmed

Zeed's Vocals - Leader Singer: Hermonie Starks